Ingenious Device of a Nevada Sportsman.

[From the Virginia City Enterprise.]

Alexander Hammil, of Silver City, Lyon county, day before yesterday performed a most ingenious experiment with a United States breech loading rifle with [illegible] sets of catridges into the gun, and discovering this to be the situation he did not care to fire off the double charge. Having duly studied over the matter he took the gun to the blacksmith shop, screwed the barrel fast to a vise, and [illegible] the lower ball. Then he heated an iron rod hot, and with it commenced to melt the ball out. By frequently heating the rod he succeded admirably till he melted a hole clear through the ball and touched the powder of the cartridge beyond, when there was a sharp and unexpected explosion. It shot both ways, one ball going out at the muzzle and the other at the rear. The ball which came out at the rear took but a small piece out of Aleck's cheek, and Dr. Kirby has every confidence that the poultice in which Mr. Alo k's head is now bound up will draw out the ounce or two of powder blown into his face. Aleck is as yet undecided as to whether his experiment in melting out the bullets was a grand success or a disasterous failure but he swears his plan was most ingenious.

ITEMS.

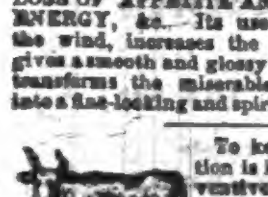
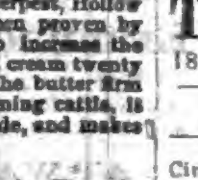
FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.



To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.



In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE FALLEN PINE.

A voice from the fallen pine—
A cry [illegible]
Woe for the glory that once was mine,
And the pride of a kinghood slain!
And oh, for my branches tall!
For the vigor of youth and strength,
To riot in fibre and vein through all
My ragged and glorious length.

No more in my blasted boughs
Shall the [illegible] of the summer play,
And never again my withered brows
Shall shine with the gold of day!
No more in my rocking peak
Shall the eyried eagles scream,
When I hear the swooping tempest shriek
Far off, in the [illegible] dream.

I sigh to the winds for aye,
I cry to the wandering stars,
To snap the bonds of my slow decay,
And open my prison bars,
But the eyrie stars sail on,
The blast sweeps by with a moan;
I lie with the wrecks of a grandeur gone,
And the shadows of dreams, alone.

* * * * * * *

Woe for the fallen glory—
For the kingly head laid low—
For the rapture and strife that are but a story
Told of the Long Ago,
When Cloud and Crag and Cataract,
And the giant pines of yore
Chanted the pean of Nature
With a wild triumphal roar.

Apples as a Nourishment.

The value of apples (not however, the green, hard wards of cholera morbus first sold in the market for apples,) in a medicinal point of view, should be well understood. Besides containing much nutritive matter, they act powerfully in the capacity of refrigerants, tonics and antiseptics, and when used judiciously they no doubt prevent debility, indigestion and many other disorders of the system. The operaters of Cornwall, England, consider ripe apples nearly as nourishing as bread in the year of 1810, which was a year of much scarcity, apples, instead of being converted into cider, were sold to the poor, and the laborers asserted that they could stand their work on baked apples without meat, whereas a potato diet required either meat or some other substantial nutriment. The French and Germans use apples extensively, as do all the European nations. The laborers depend upon them as an article of food, and frequently make a dinner of sliced apples and bread.

Sheep for Food.

The cost of producing mutton, after allowing for the food, is much less than that of beef; yet good mutton sells in the market for nearly as much as beef. The demand for sheep in this country for butchers is active, and near large towns the mutton and early lambs can be made the largest source of profit. There the grades of the combing wools will be found most profitable, owing to the greater size and early maturity. The Southdowns will pay equally well for lambs and mutton, but will not pay as well for wool. In England, where the population is dense, it is one of their chief sources of animal food for its inhabitants. Even in Australia it is beginning to furnish a source of profit instead of this being confined entirely to the wool. Some idea may be formed of the demand in this country when we reflect that there were sold in the markets of New York city, for the year 1871, an average of over 25,000 sheep weekly, one million three hundred thousand during the year.

The Cow Tree.

Among the many curious phenomena which presented themselves to me in the course of my travels, says Hemboldt, I confess there were few by which my imagination was so powerfully affected as by the cow tree. On the parched side of a rock on the mountains of Venezuela grows a tree with dry and leathery foliage its large woody roots scarcely penetrating into the ground. For several months in the year its leaves are not moistened by a shower; its branches look as if dead and withered; but when the trunk is bored, a blank and flourishing milk flows from it. It is at sunrise that the blacks and natives are seen coming from all parts, provided with large bowls to receives the milk, which grows yellow and thickens at its surface. Some empty their vessels on the spot, while others carry them to their children. One imagines he sees the family of a shepherd who is distributing the milk of his flock.

An Accurate Boy.

There was a young man once in the office of a western railway superintendent who occupied a position that four hundred boys in that city would have wished to get. It was honorable and it paid well besides being in the line of promotion.—How did he get it? Not by having a rich father, for he was the son of a poor laborer. The secret was his beautiful accuracy.

He began as errand boy, and did his work accurately—his writing and arithmetic. After a while he learned to telegraph; and each step his employer commended his accuracy and relied on what he did, because he was just right.

It is thus with every occupation. The accurate boy is the favored one. Those who employ men do not wish to be on the constant lookout as though they were rogues or fools. If a carpenter must stand at his journeyman's elbow to be sure that his work is right, or if a cashier must run over his bookeeper's column, he might as well do the work himself as to employ another to do it in that way; and it is very certain that an employer will get rid of such an inaccurate workman as soon as he can.

One way to Build a Bridge.

The Grand Duke of Florence, it is said, once proclaimed that every beggar who would appear in the grand plaza at a certain designated time should be provided with a new suit of clothes, free of cost.—At the appointed hour the beggars of the city all assembled, whereupon the officers caused each avenue of the public square to be closed, and then compelled the beggars to strip off their old clothes, and gave to each one according to promise, a new suit. In the old clothes thus collected enough money was found concealed to build a beautiful bridge over the Arno, still called the Begger's Bridge.

How to Treat a Horse.

Some English grooms at Saratoga are teaching the 'Yankees' how to take care of a horse.

To-day I asked one of these grooms, who has spent twenty years in the stable of royalty, what he had to say about our American way of taking good care of horses.

Why, sir, said he, you don't take good care of your horses; you think you do, but you don't.

Why? I asked.

Because when a horse comes in all wet with perspiration, you let him stand in the stable and dry with all the dirt on. In England, we take the horse as he comes in from a drive and sprinkle blood-warm water all over him, from his head to his feet. Then we scrape him down and blanket him, rubbing his face and legs dry. Thus, in an hour he is clean and dry, and ready to take a good feed, while in your way, he will stand swelter for hours, and finally dry, sticky and dirty. Our horses never founder and never take cold. We never use a curry-comb. You scratch your horses too hard. The only care necessary is to have the water not very cold, then bathe them quick and blanket them instantly, while you are rubbing the horses legs.

KEEP COOL.

About this time sell the zero of your thermometer, as you will have no use for it for some time—in fact, for summer time to come.

If you can't keep cool, keep a cooler; if you can't do this, keep a school as you can, try to rent a celler, (a cellery celler will be the best at dinner time), but if a cellar is not procurable an ice cool parlor, containing an ice little sofa, and an ice little girl, will do. If she rejects you so much the better, as that process is liable to be cooling, and the main thing is to keep cool, you know.

If you desire to travel, charter a cool barge, as that style of conveyance is always cooled.

South America will do for a summer resort, they have such Chili weatner over there.

But don't marry with the thermometer at 95°, as in that case matrimonial bliss is likely to prove a matrimonial blister, you know.

You need not go far from home for seabathing, as you can see bathing most any time by taking a stroll along the river bank.

Fighting Snakes.

The editor of an Iowa paper recently visited, with others, a gypsum quarry owned by Mr. Cummings, of Fort Dodge, Iowa. He thus decribes the place:

From out the crevices the snakes were crawling in all directions, and 'swash swash' went the huge clubs of the men who were defending their fellow workmen and every blow was the death of a large snake.

Just at our feet crawled a deadly moccasin, while to the right and left spotted adders and chasers squirmed and hissed as they twined among the stones or escaped up the bluff. Directly in front of us lay a pile of dead serpents, as large as a two bushel basket, while on the face of the sloping bluff, were probably three hundred reptiles which had escaped the clubs of the men and were hastening away to the prairie, their elevated heads and writhing bodies transforming the bluff into no mythical Gorgon head. Just above us, on a lege of rocks, was a huge adder, and Mr Cummings, picking up a piece of rock, heaved it at him, pinning him to the ledge But the snake was game: some three feet of his body was free, and gathering himself up he would leap full at us with all force, hissing and opening his jaws in a way that made the blood run cold. The next leap he made, a blow from our cane on his head spinning a score of feet, and the bleeding trunk dropped to the earth below. The snakes are said to retire into their dens about 2 p. m. every day, after which all is quiet until the sun's rays again reach the quarry, when the same thing is repeated. Two hundred and seventy-five snakes were killed that day the number for two weeks footing up 6-500, while it is supposed that ten times that number escaped. On the 14th of October the snakes commence to return and enter again their dens for the winter. Nothing but the seaserpent can beat or swallow this, the greatest of snake stories.

Judge Hoar denies that he secured a place in the Cabinet by making President Grant the present of a library. But he did present the library and got the office. A prominent Boston Radical remarked, the other day, one 'would as soon think of a eunuch with a harem as giving the President a library.' Yes, and when Gen. Grant looked at the gift he turned the giver out.

ANECDOTE.

We are given to understand, that the following anecdote of Chas. Mathews the elder, has not hitherto been in print in this country. Mathews and Tattersall were very intimate, and the great comedian was frequently in the habit of accompanying his friends to Newmarket, where on one occasion, Mathews indulged in his well known taste for mimicry, at the expense of Tattersall, during a sale of blood stock conducted by the latter gentleman.

The first lot, gentlemen, said Mr. Tattersall, is a bay filly by Smolensko, etc.

The first lot, gentlemen, echoed Mr. Mathews, in precisely the same tone of voice, is a bay filly by Smolensko, etc.

The auctioneer looked somewhat annoyed, but proceeded:

What shall we say to begin with?

What shall we say to begin with? replied the echo.

Still endeavoring to conceal his vexation, Mr. Tattersall inquiringly called out, One hundred guineas?

One hundred guineas, echoed Mr. Mathews.

Thank you, sir cried Tattersall, bringing down the hammer: the filly is yours sir.

Mathews was considerably taken aback by his sudden acquisition of blood stock, and the company enjoyed the joke immensely.

Sealed Instructions.

I had served twenty-five years on board an East Indiaman, and for the last ten years had commanded the Belle, one of the finest crafts that ever floated. I was an old sea dog, and had dwelt so long on salt water that I felt almost a hatred for the land.

On the 25th of October, 1824, I received orders to put myself in readiness to sail for Cayenne. I was to transport seventy-five soldiers and a convict. I had orders to treat this individual well, and the letter I had received from the directory inclosed another with a huge red seal, which I was not to open until between 27 and 28 degrees west longitude, that is just before we were about to cross the line.

The letter was a long packet, so well closed on every side that it was impossible to catch the slighest glimpse of its contents. I am not naturally superstitious, but there was something in the look of the letter that I did not altogether like, though I could give no reason why. However I carried it into the cabin, and stuck it under the little shabby English clock, which was fastened above my head. I was busy fixing the letter under the clock, when who should come into my cabin but the convict and his wife! This was the first time I had seen either of them, and I may say a more prepossessing couple I never met. The woman was scarcely more than fifteen, and as handsome as a picture, while the husband was an intelligent, magnificently formed man, on whose features nature had never written "villain."

His crime, to be plain, was the misfortune of being a hundred years ahead of his age. He and others had attempted something which our government called treason, and which is punished with death. It, therefore, occasioned me considerable wonder that he should be placed under my charge; but more of this afterward.

He had, as I said, his wife hanging on his arm. She was as merry as a bird; she looked like a turtle dove cooing and nestling beneath his great wing.

Before a month had passed over our heads I looked upon them as my own children. Every morn I used to call them into my cabin. The young fellow would sit writing at my table, that is to say my chest, which was my bed He would often help me at reckoning and soon learned to do better than I could. I was amazed at his ability. His wife would sit up on one of the round stools in my cabin working at her needle.

One day we were sitting in this way when I said.

"Do you know, my young ones, as it seems to me we make a very pretty family picture? Mind. I don't mean to ask questions, but may be you have not much money to spare, and you are both of you, as I think, to handsome to dig in the burning sun of Cayenne, like many a poor wretch before you. It's a bad country—a bad country take my word for it. I who have roughed it through the tempest and sunshine till I've the skin of a rhinoceros, might get along there; but you—I am afraid of you. So, if you should chance to have a bit of foolish friendship for your poor old captain, I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll get rid of this old brig; she's not much better than an old tub after all, so I'll settle myself down there with you if you like. You see I have not a living soul in the world to care for, or that cares for me. I want relations, I want a home I want a family. I should like to make my home with you, my pretty young ones! What say ye?"

They said nothing at all, but sat looking at each other and then at me as if they doubted whether they understood what I had said.

At last the little bird threw her arms around my neck and cried like a bady.

"But," said she, suddenly pausing, "you have not looked at the letter with the big red seal."

"Hang it!" I exclaimed, "it had slipped my mind entirely."

With a cold, dreadful sensation. I went to my chest to see where we were. I found that we had several days remaining before we should reach the propper longitude for opening the letter.

Well there we stood, all three of us, looking up at the letter as if it could have spoken to us. As it happened the sun was shining full upon the face of the clock case, and fell upon the great glaring red seal of the letter, I could not help fancying it looked something like a big monster, an ogre's face grinning from the middle of the fire; it looked horrid.

"Could not one fancy," said I to make them laugh, "its great big eyes were starting out of his head?"

"Ah, my love," said the wife, "looks like blood."

"Pooh, pooh!" said her husband, taking her arm under his, "it looks like a letter of invitation to a wedding. Come, come. let the letter alone if it troubles you so. Let's go to our room and prepare for going to bed."

And off they went upon deck and left me with that beast of a letter. I remember that I kept looking at it as I smoked my pipe; it seemed to fix its great red eyes upon mine, fascinating like the eye of a serpent. It was red, wide, raw, staring like the maw of a fierce wolf. I took my great coat and hung it over both clock and letter, and went upon deck to finish my pipe.

We are now in the vicinity of Cape de Verde Islands—the Belle was running before fair wind at the rate of ten miles an hour. It was a splendid tropical night, the stars large and shining, the moon rising above the horizon as large as the sun of silver, the line of ocean parting it and long streams of bare glistening light falling on the waves, which, as they broke, sparkled like jewels. I sat upon the deck smoking my pipe and looking at them.

All was still, except the footfall of the officer of the watch, as he paced the deck, gazing, as I was on the shadow of the vessels stealing over the silent ocean.

I love silence and order. I hate noise and confusion. The lights should all have been extinguished by this time, but when I looked upon deck I thought I saw a little red line of light beneath my feet. At another time this would have made me angry, but knowing the light came from the cabin of my little deporties, I determined to see what they were about.

I had only to look down—I could see into the cabin from the skylight.

The young girl was upon her knees, she was saying her prayers. A lamp swinging from the ceiling lighted her room. She had on a long white night dress and her fair, golden floated over her shoulders, and almost touched the little bare feet which were peeping from under her white dress, so pretty, I turned away; but pshaw! said I, I am an old sailor! What matters it? So I stayed.

The husband was sitting upon a little trunk, his head resting upon his hands looking at her as she prayed. She raised her face to Heaven, and then I saw that her eyes were filled with tears. She looked like a Magdalene. As she rose, he said;

"Ah, my sweet Laurette, as we approach America, I cannot help being anxious—I do not know why—but I feel as though this voyage has been the happiest part of our lives."

"So it seems to me," she answered. "I only wish it might last forever."

Suddenly clasping his hands, in a transport of love and affection, he said; "And yet my little angel, I see you cry when you say your prayers, and that I cannot stand, for I know what causes it, and then I fear you must repent what you have done."

"Repent," she said, in a sad, rebuking tone. "Repent of having come with you? Do you think because I have been yours only a short time, that I should not love you? Was I not your wife? How can you be sorry that I should be with you, if you live, and to die with you if you are to die!"

The young man began to sigh, striking the floor impatiently with his feet while he kissed repeatedly the little hand and arm which she was holding out.

"Ah, Laurette! When I think if our marrage had been delayed only five days, that then I should have been arrested and transported alone, I cannot forgive myself."

At this the little one stretched out her round, white arms, clasped his head, pressed his forehead, his hair, his eyes, smiling like a chirub and murmuring all sorts of woman's fond things. I was quite affected, and considered it one of the prettiest scenes I had ever witnessed.

"And besides, we are so very rich, too!" said she, bursting out laughing. "Look at my purse, one gold louis d'or—all my worldly wealth."

He began to laugh too.

"Yes, dear, I spent my last half crown. I gave it to the fellow who carried our trunks on board."

"Ah, poor," she cried, "what matters it? No body is merry as those that have nothing at all; besides I have my two diamond rings that my mother gave me; they are good for something all the world over; we can sell them when you like; and besides, I am sure that the captain means kindly by us, and I suspect he knows very well what is in the letter. It is a recomend to the Governor of Cayenne."

"Perhaps so, who knows?"

"To be sure it is," continued the charming little wife. "You are so good I am sure the government has banished you only for a short time. I know they have no feeling against you."

It was high time the light was stricken out, and now I rapped on the deck and told them so.

They instantly obeyed and and I heard them laughing and chattering like two innocent schoolfellows.

One morning when I awoke I was surprised not to feel the slightest motion of the vessel. Hurrying on deck I found that we were becalmed. Latitude one degree north; longitude, between twenty-seven and twenty-eight degrees west.

I waited until night, when I descended to my cabin and opened the letter, with a dull, awful feeling. I held my breath while I broke the big red seal, and read;

"Captain Fontainbleau. The Convict Antoine Hindsclear, stands convicted of treason against the Republic. The Directory order that he be shot in mid ocean, and you are hereby instructed to see these orders carried into effect."

I read the letter backward and forward, I went upon deck. There they were, she looking upon the ocean, and he gazing upon her with an expression of unutterable fondness. Catching his eye, I signed for him to come into the cabin, and, bidding her good bye, he came down, his face all smiles.

I was bathed in cold sweat; I felt as if deadly sick; I handed him the letter, and he read it, together with the death warrant, which was drawn up in due form and attached. I gathered voice as he finished.

He colored slightly and bowed.

"I ask nothing, captain," he said, in the same gentle voice that always characterized his speech, "no man can be expected to swerve from his duty. I only wish to speak a few words to Laurette and to entreat you to take care of her if she survives—I hardly think she will."

"All that is fair, my good fellow," I cried. "If you request it, I will carry her to France, to her family. I will never leave her till she wishes to be rid of me, but do not think she will survive it."

He took my hand and pressed it.

It was getting to much for me, and I began to knit my brows.

"One word is as good as a thousand," I said; "we understand each other. Go to her."

I squeezed his hand; he looked wistfully at me, and I added: "Stay a moment; let me give you a word of advice. Don't say a word to her; be easy; that is my business. It shall be managed in the best manner."

"Ah!" said he, "I don't understand you, much better. Besides, the leave-taking, this leave taking."

"Yes," said I, "don't behave like a child—much better. No leave-taking if you can help it, or you are lost."

I kept my seat. I saw them walking arm in arm upon deck for about half an hour.

I called the mate to me, and when he had read the letter, I said.

"Garley, this is bad business—bad business. I put it in your hands. I obey their orders but I remain in the cabin until it is over. Garley sat five minutes looking at me without saying a word. He was a strange fellow. I didn't know what to make of him.

Night came at last. "Man a boat; go a quarter of a mile; be quick."

She was dragged into her berth, and the boat rowed away in darkness.

Days passed; I saw nothing of Laurette. I would not see her. She avoided me, and I was glad of it I could not bear the sight of that woe stricken face.

The mate, Garley, how I hated him! He was as cool and unconcerned as though he had no remembrance of shooting the poor wretch.

At Cayenne I resigned my ship.—Going to the city, I made all my arrangements, and took the steamer for New York. I placed ample funds in the hands of a trusty friend, and told him to send Laurette to me at the end of six months. I could not see her until her grief had lost its edge.

Weary, sick, and careless of my life, I wandered off into New York, State, and finally bought a liitle place where I hoped I should lie down and die.

I sent for Laurette. Poor bird, I must see her. I could wait no longer.

One summer night I sat in the porch of my house smoking my pipe and gazing down the road. Soon the rumble of wheels were heard, and the stage halted.

The next moment a pair of soft arms were around my neck, and the head of my sobbing Laurette was on my bosom

"Oh! you dear excellent Captain,—"

"Heavens! who is that behind you?"

There stood the manly form of Antoine Henselear, the convict.

"What does this mean I demanded, hardly knowing whether I was dreaming or not.

Are you glad to see me?"

"Thank God! thank God was all I could ejaculate.

I understood it all. The mate Garley had read my letter better than I did myself. After leaving the brig in the boat, he arranged the whole affair. The valley was fired, but no bullet touched Antoine Hindsetear. He was smuggled into his berth again, and took good care to avoid my sight. The whole crew were in the plot, and, thank God I was duped.

I sent Garley a thousand dollars as a reward.

I am now an old man; but I am happy. My children and my grandchildren (I call them nothing else) seem to think old Captain Fontainbleau is not such a wreck after all.

RED TAPE.

One of the celebrities of the Moscow ballet lately called upon a local official, with a request that he would give her the usual formal permission to take a month's tour in the provinces for the benefit of her health, retaining her salary during the time of furlough. The man in office received her politely, and asked for her written petition.

I have no written petition answered the artist.

Here are pens, ink, and paper; be so good as to write while I dictate.

The lady obeyed.

Now, you have only to deliver it.

To whom?

To me, said the official, with a smile.

And taking the petition which he had himself dictated, he produced his spectacles, wiped them carefully, read it over, as though it were perfectly new to him, and then said: Madam, I have read your petition, and regret extremely that I cannot grant it.

To make a girl love you, coax her to love somebody else. If there be anything that a woman relishes, in this world, it is the contrary.

For Presid nt and Vice President

FOR PRESIDENT

HORACE GREELEY,

OF NEW YORK.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

BENJAMIN GRATZ BROWN,

OF MISSOURI.

Hon, John A. Bingham, of Ohio, says Grant should be elected as often as the Constitution permits. As there is no Constitutional limit, Mr Bingham of course means to have him President for life. This is clearly the object of the Radicals, and the one in which great danger lies.

It will take the official vote to determine who is the Governor elect of Indiana. If a fair election had been held, Hendricks' majority would rise to 10,000. With the importation of negroes and a plentiful use of corruption funds by Morton, the result may be different.

The body of Barclay, who was hung at Columbus Ohio, a few days ago, was given up to the doctors for the purpose of experimenting with it in the interest of science, he having given his consent previous to the execution of his sentence. Thirty seven minutes after death, operations were commenced.—Two powerful eclectric corrents were used—one applied to the feet the other conducted along the arm, neck, face and breast. The eyes opened the mouth put on an expression as if in pain, the arm raised, the hand clenched, and various other indications of semi-consciousness. These motions continued under the influence of the electrical currents for 5 hours and 25 minutes.

The city in which the great Liberal movement had its origin as a National party, attested its appreciaton of Liberal principles by giving them a splendid victory on Tuesday last. Hamilton county, in which Cincinnati is situated has been giving Administration majorities, but she wheeled in the Liberal tire at the Ohio State election, rolling up a Liberal majority of 4,500, and electing two Liberal Congressmen. The Liberal Reformers of Cincinnati, Hoadley, Matthews and Stalle bolted the movement they helped to organize, but they find by experiment that they were strong when with it, but weak when they left it. The movement went forward without their help and achieved a splendid triumph, again illustrating the adage that prophets are without honor save in their own country.

The present party leaders have been running the Government for the past twelve years, and there has been no investigation of the books during that period. The tendency of a long lease of power is to corruption, hence it is high time that the inside operations of the party in power should be examined by their opponents. In a recent speech Governor Seymour, of New York, explains the necessity or the advantage of such an examination. He says;

"We only ask of Mr. Greeley, when he goes to Washington that he shows us the books. [Applause.] I do not want any exposure for vandictive purposes, but only for direction in the future. You used to say there was something wrong in New York, and you were right. So we say there is something wrong in Washington, and we demand to see the books. If this great reform movment shall result in laying bare all the corruption and wrong of the present Administration, so that the nation shall be improved, it will be well for the whole people."

Grant's Great Effort.

The Cincinnati Commercial says that "President Grant's great speech at Newark New Jersey, has been printed in large type, in handbill form, for general circulation," Notwithstanding the press upon our columns, we give a full report of this great effort of President Grant, as a summary might mar its matchless eloquence and logic. Now read:

"Ladies and gentlemen: I could not feel greatful for the reception I have recieved at the hands of the citizent of Newark New Jersey. To-day I had the pleasure of visiting the State Fair at Elizabeth, where I saw little else than people. I was at your exposition to-night and again I saw but little of what they had there to see. I hope to see to-morrow what I wanted to-night to see."

Bully for Grant! If you can't see eloquence and wisdom and statesmanship in that production of Mr. Grant, upon the first reading perhaps you may see to-morrow what you try to see today

Death-Bed Speeches.

How would it do for us to say to-day some of the things we intend to say in our last illness? Honor, bright! are you not saving up several fine generous speeches to be made on your death bed: all the scenery set, full company on the stage, grand final tableau? Ten chances to one you will forget them or have a rattling in your throat that will shake them out of shape. Forth with them now like a man—"My dear boy you have been the light and comfort of my life;" "My dear girl without you I should have been nothing in this world."

Indiana and Illinois.

The result in Indiana, beyond a doubt, is indicative of a triumph for Greeley in the great State of Illinois in November. The two States lay side by side, and have a similarity of interests. What affects the one affects the other. They have no rascals in Illinois of the dimensions and capacity of Morton, and the election there will be much fairer than it was in Indiana, where 10,000 fraudulent votes were "poled in" on Hendricks beyond a doubt. A month ago a leading Grant told a friend of his in this city that they were making no fight in Illinois as they regarded it as hopeless for Grant, but were concentrating all their energies on Indiana, which, he said they would carry beyond a doubt. With Indiana and Illinois in the West and New York in the East, there can not be the slightest question of Greeley's election.

The Victory in Indiana.

The Liberals and Democrats in this State achieved a tryumph on Tuesday of which they may well feel proud.—Every device had been resorted to by Morton and his corrupt clique to prevent the people from expressing their honest convictions. Frauds of the most damnable, were restored to, and voters imported to overawe the will of the people of the State, but all to no avail. The people arose in their might and showed these corruptionists that they were yet masters, and elected that pure, honest and incorruptable Statesman, Thomas A. Hendricks, as their Governor thereby giving a pledge to her Sister States that she is in favor of Reform, and that she will stand by the party that has for its object the purification of the Government.

The victory won on Tuesday should stimulate you to further action. Frauds will undoubtedly again be restored to by the opposition in November, but with defeat staring them in the face, they will not be so bold, and we can carry the State for Greeley and Brown by 10,000. Let not our courage falter now, but improve the victory of Tuesday, and push on to the work of reform Let Indiana be the advance guard, and let her go forward in the good work she commenced on the 8th inst.

Henry Wilson the Grant candidate for Vice President, since he has commenced swinging around the circle, has been siezed with a devotional fever, as warm and strong as that which animated Rev. Mr. Chadband, of Black House fame. In a recent speech Mr. Wilson said:

"I like a find horse, though I have not been able to keep one for many a year. I like a beautiful flower tree, or animal, a beautiful man or a bautiful child a beautiful woman [laughter]; and I think we ought to lift our hearts in gratitude to God every day that He has made so much of beauty to be loved by his children.'

Mr. Wilson's tastes are orthodox enough, but we fail to see what particular connection such sentimental effusions as the above have with the Presidential Campaign, or the political issues before the people. No one has presumed to deny that either Mr. Wilson or General Grant like fine horses. beautiful animals and beautiful women. It would have been more to the point if Mr. Wilson had informed his audit ors whether he lifted his heart in gratitude to God every day that his friend Mr. Oakes Ames has spread abroad such damaging statements concerning his (Wilson's) connection with Credit Mobilier; or whether he lifted his heart etc, that he joined the Know Nothings; or whether he was devoutly thankful that Yerkes is out of the Penitentiary. On general principles, it is cheering to know that Mr. Wilson although 'born in extreme poverty' has so much devout thankfulness. His pretotype, Chadband was afflicted in the same manner, but it did not help poor Joe much. We fail to see how he is going to help the Grant cause by being thankful to God that he has made beautiful horses and beautiful women.

The Presidential Election on the 5th of November.

Whatever may be the exact result of the elections Tuesday in the three great States of Ohio, Indiana, and Pennsylvania. they must not, in any event, be premitted to relax the energies of the friends of Greeley and Brown. In comparison with the great battle in November, when thirty seven States are to be heard from, the fight yesterday was but a heavy skirmish along the lines. If we had been successful in the main, it would not do to rest upon our laurels or intermit our exertions as an organization, for if we did we might, and probably would, find that we had a victory at Ligny only to be decidedly and forever beaten at Waterloo. Trite as it may be, there is no motto which should be held so prominently before the people as that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Even if we had won the most glorious victory, we could not safely allow the watchfires to burn less brightly, or to have our sentinels less strongly posted in front of our lines.—But if defeated in any part of the field or in all of it, we must the more sternly prepare for the great conflict of November. We may rely upon it that Greeley and Brown are far stronger than any of our local candidates.—There are, as we have shown from the beginning thousands of Republicans who have made up there minds to vote against Grant and in favor of Greeley, who are such bitter partisans that nothing would induce them to vote for any local or State ticket that was not labelled and understood to be Republican. We shall have the advantage of this vote in November, and it is far larger than the Grant men calculate upon, as they will find to their sorrow.

In the election just past the Grant men had every advantage. They have put into them their millions of dollars in money, and exercised all the arts and appliances of corruption, in order that, by favorable results, they might have a great effect upon the States that were to vote afterward,

There are the last State elections before the Presidential, and we call upon our friends every where to be ready for the issue. Pay not the least heed to the mere talk of the enemy, that you have no chance of success; the wish is father to the thought. Strengthen your lines and deepen your columns, and press on the enemy's works.—What has been done thus far in the election is nothing compared with that to come. Let every eye now be fixed upon November as the month which is to assure, by the election of Greeley the prolongation of American freedom.

ONWARD.

Let Indiana Lead the Van of Reform.

The elections of last Tuesday were somewhat averse to the success of the Liberals. It is not surprising that such was the case when the fearful odds against which they fought are considered. The party in power is thoroughly organized, with an army of office holders directly and largely interested in its success, to do its bidding. Not to take into consideration the corrupt means by which it can obtain money for party uses, the assessments upon the office holder's dependent upon the Administration alone yields an i mense sum. Then the capital of the country interested in the nationl banks, and the monopolists who are dependent upon the legislation Congress for their priveleges, wield a great influence, and it is mainly for the perpetuation of the rule by which they have been developed, and maintained and made seccessful and strong. The party of reform has none of these advantages, none of these powerful adjuncts to wield for success. The money that is raised to keep up the necessary party machinery comes by voluntary contributions, and they have to rely for their strength and success upon the moral sentiment of the people upon their opposition to extravigance and corruption and upon the restoration and maintenance of just laws and pure government. In the recent canvass reconciliation and purification were the leading ideas presented to the people by the opponents of the Administration party, and they could have no more fiting or able representative than the standard bearer of the reform party, Horace Greeley. The principles and the purposes for which the Liberals made a most gallant and determined contest on Tuesday have not deminished in importance by the adverse results of the State elections held on that day, and the obligaton of the party of reform to contend for their supremacy in the administration of the Government has not abated one jot or title but remains in full force. The results of Tuesday are not so disastrous as the first reports made them. We have lost Pennsylvania by the most infamous frauds Ohio failed to come up to the expectations that the Liberals of that State predicted, and Nebraska is rejoined to her Radical idols Of the four States that voted on Tuesday, Indiana stands alone in condemnation of the Grant ring, and her verdict will assure the party of reform. of reconciliation and purification to renewed and more strenuous efforts for success in the Presidential election. Let the Liberals of Indiana, let the Democrats of Indiana, let the friends of reform in Indiana by whatever name designated, not flag or falter in the glorious revolution they have inaugurated, but under the rallying cry of onward, confirm the victory of October in November confiding to an honest, an able man, one without a superior if he has an equal in all the qualities of elevated statesmanship, the destinies of the Great Republic for the next four years. in the firm belief that his administration of the Government will reform existing evils and restore to the country peace, harmony, unity, honesty and purity, from which will flow prosperity and substancial progress.—State Sentinel.

Another Gun Silenced!

Among the numerous falsehoods uttered by Senator Morton in his 'pivot' harrangues, is the slanderous one that Horace Greeley declared at Vicksburg sometime during the year 1871, that the time would come when the soldiers that fought with Lee and Jackson would occupy as proud a position in the hearts of the American people as the soldiers that fought under Grant and Sherman. Senator Morton knows full wel' that Greeley never uttered this language, and that is is a deliberate falsehood coined out of whole cloth Mr. Greeley himself has taken pains to deny this calumny in one of his speeches. "No such thought," said Mr. Greeley, "as that ever entered my heart. What I did say, speaking of that war-wasted, heart-broken people, is this; that I trusted the day would come when the soldierly qualites and military genius of Lee and Stonewall Jackson would be regarded as a part of the heritage of the American people. That they would be spoken of as American soldiers, who, though in a cause which I think a bad cause, illustrated the military capacity, genius and energy of the American people; for, after all, fellow-citizens they were our countrymen, our mistaken countrymen, our misguided countrymen; that they are our brave but fatally erring countrymen; they are dead, and are now our dead coutryn.en. I did say that and if any man grudged that little word of consolation to that heart broken people, let him vote against me."

The Result in Pennsylvania.

There is som thing, says the State Sentinel about the election in Pennsylvania not so much disappointing to the defeated as disgraceful to the successful party, and discouraging to every honest man. This assertion is not made in a mere spirit of petulant invective, but dispassionately as the statement of a fact.

Aside from the party issues at stake in that canvass there was one question of parimount interest decided, namely, whether the leading political organization of the country had became so degraded as to vote for a man convicted beyond all reasonable doubt of official dishonesty. From sad experience the people know that men undesired and untrusted by the community can contrive through nice management at caucuses and conventions to be put in nomination for office; and by means of this system voters are often called upon to cast their ballots for candidates whom they would never, otherwise, have dreamed of naming as the party representatives. The people were in a measure reconciled to this trickery at primary meetings, and had given up the idea of getting just the candidates they wanted, consoling themselves with the notion that one check of over unscrupulous politicians remained in their hands. If scoundrels were put up for office their names could be stricken from the ballots. The Pennsylvania election shows that this last reserved right of individual action has been abandoned by the members of the administration party. The old exaggeration uttered by John Cochrane, that he would vote for the devil if his satanic majesty could get the regular nomination, is the practical conduct now openly adopted by our opponents. Whoever can secure the control of a convention, secures with it the slavish allegiance of the rank and file of the party. We can proudly point to the action of the Democrats of New York in contrast to the course of the Republicans of Pensylvania. The struggle against Tammany offers many features of resemblance to the attack agains the Cameron ring. The rascalities commited by the accused were in each instance startling, and the proofs of their guilt undoubted. But in the one case, a great party denounce and displace the scoundrels; in the other, it defended them, and has set them once more in the high places of the State. In paliation of the conduct of the Pennsylvania Republicans, it may be said that the success of the party depended on supporting the rascals nominated and they could not afford a defeat.

The Result.

The official vote of seventy-seven counties, recieved at the Secretary of State's office with semi-official returns from the other 18 counties gives Hendricks democrat for Governor, 804 majority.

Leonidas Saxton, Republican, for Lieutenant Governor, has 1,313 majority. W. W. Curry, Republican, for Secretary of State, 1,163 majority; J. A. Wildman, Republican for Auditor of State, 1,254 majority; J. B. Glover Republican, for Treasury of State, 1,520 majority.

G. S. Orth, Republican for Congress man at Large, 1,147, majority Wm. Williams, Republican, for Congressman at Large, 1,474 majority.

The ballance of the State ticket except Superintendent of Public Instructions, is Republican.

For the latter office Milton B. Hopkins, Democrat is elected.

The Legislature, from the official returns, will stand 54 Reupbblicans to 46 Democrats in the House, and 27 Republicans to 23 Democrats in the Senate, the official vote of the Ninth Congressional District elect Neff over Shanks Republican, by 28 votes; but in one Township, in Adams county of Shanks' district, 47 Republican votes were thrown out on the account of the name "Republican ticket" printed at the head of the ticket. If these votes are allowed in the final count, Shanks' will be elected by 19 votes. Both parties are preparing to renew the contest for the Presidential election.—Ft. Wayne Gazette.

A Word to the Liberals.

You allied yourselves with the patriotic movement like honest men. Now fight for it like brave men. We appeal to you to review the situation. Is there the slightest reason for discouragement? We have held our own every where, and have made large gains in many places. A party not six months old met an army of experienced veterans, and withstood its assaults, and now hold many of the most important point of the battlefield. Will you now retreat and cover yourselves with dishonor forever? or will you renew the battle with increased energy and triumph gloriously?

The enemy is depleted in purse by the enormous sums expended in North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. Their poor victims in the Government employ will pay no more, and with the Administration in danger they dare not continue there barefaced stealing, for the day of retribution is nigh. They are disheartened, discouraged, demoralized. There is no doubt of this. The very roaring with which they fill the country shows that their game is bluster. They began the fight like lions; they are now bleating like sheep.

Read their sickly appeals in their loyal press, like this:

"A cheerful and hearty support of General Grant by Southern Democrats will enable Republicans and Democrats alike, both in the States interested and in the nation at large, to work harmoniously and sincerely in the effort to remedy the evils which hostility and disagreement have introduced into the results of reconstruction."

A united South they know will elect Horace Greeley in next November. They must avert this danger by their hypocritical cant. Have not the people of the South already bowed their necks to the yoke? Have not they already suffered themselves to be plundered without resistance and almost without complaint? Has this softened the wants of their tyrants or satisfied their avarice? No! They will only desist and repent when the plundered have nothing more to yield.

What great work has the Grant hurricane accomplished that threatened so much in Ohio? Carried Ohio by a few thousand, when Grant, four years ago, carried it by 41,000 and more, and to this they have added a solid negro vote of 12,000, so that we entered the campaign with a majority of over 53,000 to overcome. Remember that the Liberal Repub.icans were under no obligation to support our State ticket because it was put in nomination before the coalition was consumated, and in many parts of the State we know that men who will vote for Greeley and Brown in November, voted against us in October. Enough too, to carry the State.

Mottoes For the Grantites.

We commenced the following statement of political facts to the attention of the Republican party for use during the present campaign:

It was William Lloid Garrison who declared the Constitution "a covenant with hell."

It was General Grant who threatened to take his regiment over to the robels if slavery was interfered with.

It was John A. J. Crosswell who urged Maryland to secede from the Union in 1861.

It was John A. Logan who recruited fifty-one, in Illinois for Beauregard's army.

It was william Lloyd Garrison who "thanked God that he had worked for 30 years to break up the Union as it was,"

It was Judge Settle, President of the Grant Convention, who was kicked out of the rebel army for robbing sick soldiers of their hospital stores.

It was the Presidents father who got a permit from his son to steal cotton during the war.

It was Senator Morton who spoke of Germans at the 'Dutchman who is only fit to eat cabpage and drink lager beer.

It was Henry Wilson who took a solemn oath never to vote for a Catholic or a foreigner.

It was Governor Noyes of Ohio who said that the "Republican party could get along without the whisky drinking Irish."

It was Mrs. General Grant who recieved a $25.000 check for "the Government's share in Black Friday.

It was Oglesby of Illinois, who said that "he hoped for a law to sweep the Dutch and Irish out of America."

It was Henry Ward Beecher who said that Grant knew more about horses than Statesmanship.

It was Wendell Phillips who rote from Galena, that "Grant is owing several old whisky bills there."

It was Ben Butler who said a year ago "Grant has no more soul than a dog."

It was Zach Chandler who statede d Charles A. Dana that, "we never had such an ignoramous in the White House."

It was Robeson who paid a claim of $75,000 over a law made on purpose to prevent it.

The Great Cause

Human Misery

Just Published, in a Sealed Envelope. Price 6 cts.

A Lecture on the Nature, Treatment and Radical Cure of Seminal Weakness, or Spermatorrhoea, induced by self abuse, involuntary emission and impediments to Marriage generally; consumption, &c.—by Rob J Culverwell, M. D., author of the 'Green Book,' &c.

The world renowned author, in this admirable lecture, clearly proves from his own experience that the awful consequences of self-abuse may be effectually removed without medicine, and without dangerous surgical operations, by which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, can privately cure himself. This lecture will prove a boon to thousands.

Sent under seal, in a plain envelope, to any address, on receipt of 6 cents, or two postage stamps. Also Dr. Culverwell's 'Marriage Guide,' price 50 cents. Address the publishers.

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL

Dr WALKER'S CALIFORNIA

VINEGAR BITTERS

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing the merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

THE Odd Fellows' Hall is going up rapidly.

It will soon be time for buckwheat cakes. Good.

THE 'bus is again running to and from trains.

New corn has made its appearance on our streets.

THE Editorial Association meets at Laporte, Friday, Nov. 14.

THE new brick block has again reached the second story.

The farmers say they need rain very badly for wheat purposes.

Goshen is to invest $50,000 in the New York and Chicago Air Line R. R.

WOOD.—Bring along your wood now as this cold weather necessitates its use.

PHILADELPHIA is the largest city in the world according to the late election returns.

The fair is being largely attended. The largest crowd, however, is expected today.

THAT cobble stone gutter don't seem to progress much in front of the Court House.

A NEW billard hall is being erected by Charles Fox. No boys should be allowed to participate in the game.

The bridge over Cedar Creek, east of town, is being repaired. It needed this improvement some time ago.

HAD Democrats done their duty on election day we would have scooped up the Grantits by one hundred majority easily.

The Presbyterian Synod of Indiana, North, will meet in Crawfordsville, Oct. 24. A large attendance is expected.

REMEMBER the fair at Waterloo is now in operation, and to-day (Thursday) is the big time for all.

W. C. Fluke, Esq., who is now a student in the Medical College at Detroit, has been visiting his home at this place for several days past.

WHAT if Pennsylvania and Ohio have gone 25,000 and 15,000. Hasn't Georgia gone 50,000? We're ahead yet.

A FARMER in this county is engaged in tanning buck skins. He whips three unruly boys every morning before breakfast.

A KIND hearted father in Lawrence, Kansas, sold his cooking stove for $10.00 and took his thirteen children to the circus.

James Griswould, of this place, is to act as judge on bread and butter, at the Waterloo fair. Make your loaves large, ladies.

The Cannelton Enquirer says: A horse belonging to Thomas Gross committed suicide one day last week, by beating his brains out against a stable wall.

Those melancholy days have come
 The saddest of the year,
With wanting winds and naked woods
 And meadows brown and sear.

OUR new landlord, though a voter for years in this State, could not vote because we had no one on our side who would swear that he was a bona fide resident.

THE fellow who bet all his stamps on Tom Browne, is now ruminating one of Will. Carleton's poems. We believe it commences, "Over the hill to the poor house."

THE meeting at Butler last Monday a week was a grand success, delegations coming in from all parts and filling the town with one dense mass of people. Mr. Trumbull made an admirable speech, followed by Mr. Denslow, of the Chicago Tribune, a very forcible and eloquent speaker. Our Butler friends were gratified over the success of the meeting and the good speakers.

Work on the Odd Fellows' Hall was again resumed on last Monday. It is hoped that no more accidents may be-fall it and that it will be completed before winter sets in. A large force is to work and a few days will complete the brick work.

Our friends should not fail to examine the large stock of dry goods and clothing, just received by Charles Kiess. He has also a large stock of groceries and notions which he will sell at reduced prices. Give him a call.

Corunna has the hardest working temperance girls in Northern Indiana. They send whisky to the boys that take it, now and then, and say they take this method of grassing it from the land.

EXCELLENT boarding house cake can be made mixing the whites of three eggs with one cup of sugar, two-thirds of a cup of butter, one-half cup of milk and two cups of flour. Let it stand over night, add one cup of coal oil and bake in a warm stove.

ELECTION.—Notice is hereby given that an election will be held on Wednesday evening, Oct. 23, 1872, in Lodge No. 116, I. O. O. F., to elect a Trustee for the ensuing year.

By order of the Lodge.
F. E. DAVENPORT, Sec'y.

A RADICAL paper says: 'We have carried Pennsylvania for the Administration by $30,000 majority.' Indeed, you have But don't you place the sum too low?—The Administration spent more than $30,000 to get possession of the Keystone State.

An exchange says: A Pennsylvania man was struck by lightning and cured of chronic rheumatism the other day.' In less than thirty days some wide-awake pill-peddler will be advertising the lightning cure' for rheumatism, and will get plenty of business. American invalids have a fondness for new remedies.

THE Press intimates that there was importations in Fairfield. If there was, it was done on their side. And there could not have been more of it done there than right here in Auburn. We know of several that had no right to vote here, but as long as there was somebody here to answer for them, the law was complied with, no matter about conscience.

ALL hail Fairfield, Smithfield and Franklin townships. They done splendid, and little Stafford, too. With the exception of Newville and Troy, the rest held their own well. Auburn and Richland defeated our candidates for Sheriff and Treasurer. If there is any glory in a few members of their party defeating their candidates they can have it. We'll have none of it.

'Give me the money,' said a leading Radical to a Democratic acquaintance yesterday, 'and I'll carry Massachusetts for you.' This of course was merely the expression of an honest opinion of how elections were carried now-a-days by his party, by a Radical politician, who had been favored with a view of the 'inside of politics from a Radical stand-point.

SEVERAL of our Grant friends have asked us if we still intend to vote for Greeley Most assuredly we do. We believe the Liberal Republicans have stood by us generally, and it is not their fault if we have not been successful. The defeat of our men for Sheriff and Treasurer was caused by Democrats and is not a Grant victory. We are for Horace Greeley for President and there is not an honest man in the country but what will be with us.

We believe there were but few Liberals but what voted our State ticket, and it is the duty of every Democrat who supported Greeley before the election to stand by Honest old Horace now. The frauds and corruption practiced by the Grantites in the late elections, will convince ever honest man that he should vote for Greeley. There is no chance for importations, and if all do their duty we can carry Indiana in November.

SOMETHING FOR THE LADIES.—We want none but the ladies to read this item, because its private. We want to tell them that instead of looking forward with gloom and dispair, they can now anticipate with joy the coming of the wash-day, because Tyler's steam washer does away with the hard work and makes wash-day pleasant. Our friends all around us have tried it and they say they would not do without it. Mrs. AsKew will supply you with one at a moderate price, and you will surely find it a blessing in the household. Oct. 17,-4t.

SCANDALL.—If you cannot speak well of a man say nothing about him. This is the diamond rule and it is almost as good as the golden. Republican editors and stump speakers observe this rule in speaking of Horace Greeley; Democrats apply it to Ben. Butler, and homely women should remember it when talking of their good looking young men This rule is strictly adhered to by attorneys, who, but for their great respect for its teachings, would sometimes abuse witnesses.—A large majority of political editors adopt it for their motto.

PAY UP.—Some of our subscribers are still in arrears for the COURIER, and we would like to have our money. We have published the COURIER nearly two years and yet there are a few who have never paid us a cent. This will not do. We insist upon them coming up and paying like other men. A large number of subscribers pay us before the year is out, which is all we ask. As we don't believe there is a man in the county that would swindle the printer out of his subscription, we trust they will take this gentle hint and come in and pay us.

The New York Times says you might nearly as well forget your churches, your academies and school houses as to forget your local paper. It speaks to ten times the audience that your local minister does It is read eagerly each week from beginning to end. It reaches you all, and if it has a lower spirit and less wisdom than a sermon, it has a thousand times better chances at you. Laying, as it does, on the table, in almost every house, you owe it to yourselves to rally liberally to its support, and exact from it as able, hightoned a character as you do from any educator in your midst. It is in no sense beneath notice and care—unless you yourself are beneath notice and care—for is is your representative. Indeed, in its character, it is the summation of the importance, interest and welfare of you all. It is the aggregate of your own consequence, and you cannot ignore it without miserably depreciating yourselves.

BASE BALL is a good thing in its place but the business interest of the country would not suffer if Alaska should be designated as the proper place to play our 'national game.' Playing croquet is harmless amusement, but the muscles will be fully as well exercised by sawing a little wood or sweeping the sidewalk. The plea of 'recreation' is made an excuse for gross neglect of duty. If a young man needs exercise in the open air let him collect a few bills for his employer. If he is working in a printing office we are very sure this will give him 'exercise' enough, both physical and mental.

FROM the number of votes cast it would seem that we now have nearly as many voters in Auburn as in Waterloo. This would show not that Waterloo is going backward, for its population is yearly increasing, but that Auburn is taking very rapid strides toward the position she should occupy in the county, being the county seat. In 1870 her population was assessed at 686, but now she will more than double that in two years. Her growing interests are such as to convince the most skeptical that but a few years will find her one of the best towns in Northern Indiana, or as Goldsmith says, "The loveliest village of the plain."

DO IT WELL.—If young men will make it a point to do well whatever they undertake it will ensure their success in the world. It is an easy matter for a bright, intelligent young man to make his way up if he will but attend strictly to his business, always keeping in view the interest of his employer. Let him conduct himself properly and he will soon become a necessity, a 'fixture' and his employer will realize the fact that he cannot dispense with the services of such a man. Young men who pursue this course are always sought after. When a change is made in the firm the partnership is offered to the employe who best attends to his own and his employer's business.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says:

Fort Wayne has the best natured people in the world. Their amiable qualities are not surpassed by any other people in any other country. Just look at it, and remark their wonderful dispositions. Yesterday forenoon, Republicans were around the city, tape line in hand, taking actual measurement of loco-foco countenances, and we must say that they were rather long. But, in the afternoon, the 'tidal-wave' came to time, and what do you think? The Republicans gracefully handed over their tape-lines, submitted to the test, but implored their loco-foco friends not to guage on measurement as they had done. Are we not divine people? No wonder Allen county gives 3,000 majority

In the defeat of Kelly and Maxwell a few Democrats may take a little comfort, but it will not pay in the end. Quite a number of Democrats in this town vented their spite on these two men when they know that both of them have done a hundred times more work for the party than they have While the Republicans went solid for their ticket, a few of our own party assisted them in defeating two as good men as there are in the county for the positisions to which they aspired.—Had the Grantites gained the victory themselves, then all could have submitted cheerfully, but to have Democrats assist them, is an outrage that cannot fail to meet with a just rebuke. It was a dirty trick and our Republican friends are laughing now over the clever trick they have played in this little game.

Go to the Best.

The best institution for the cultivation of music in Fort Wayne, is the Indiana Conservatory of Music. This has been lately organized under the most favorable auspices and has now connected with the best talent in the country. A similar institution was organized some time ago, but it does not meet the wants of the people, and this last one has been instituted with a special view to this end. Prof. Morse, from Berlin, one of the finest performers in the country, assisted by Profs. Jones and Hodgdon, of Fort Wayne, preside over the piano and organ, while Prof. Bartlett, of Boston, whose singing has fairly captivated Fort Wayneites, has charge of vocal culture. And our friends who contemplate educating their children in this line, are assured that their object will be more satisfactorily attained by sending to the Indiana Conservatory of music.

The Result.

From a careful glance over the late battle field, the probabilities are that we have met the enemy and they have somewhat gobbled us in. That's nothing.—Twelve years experience has taught us that Salt River is a navigable stream.—The air at its head waters is pure but not so very 'healthy.' The country is inhabited by white men exclusively, and although many of these are barefooted they submit with christian fortitude. There is not a post office in the neighborhood. National banks are as scarce as hen teeth, and there is not a very large number of Brigadier Generals in the country. A few army contractors are there but they are poor to day, as they were ten years ago.

Our boat on this occasion started from the Ohio river and was propelled by Kentucky darkies. When we shall leave the country is not yet determined. It is only a question of time. We shall return to plague our enemies who have contributed so freely to send us 'up the river.'

Success in business is easily won by proper application. It is not won by visiting the theatre when your services are needed in the shop or store. It is not won by spending your time with worthless associates, or reading Beadle's dime novels. It is not won by seeking 'recreation' during business hours. It is not won by neglecting your employer's interest. It is not won by smoking Havana cigars or drinking sherry cobblers. But close attention to business, correct habits, gentlemanly conduct and strict integrity will ensure pecuniary success, and do it speedily. The young man who adopts this course will not grow gray in poverty or obscurity.—Shrewd business men, who appreciate such conduct, will pave the way for him, and start him on the road to fortune. It is quite common for boys to find fault because their employers do not offer them a 'chance.' As a rule an investigation of the grumbler's character will demonstrate that he has done nothing to induce the offer. A good business boy will not long occupy the position of an underling

Brainard's Musical World for October comes to our table in an entire new dress and is a model of handsome typography. It has always been the best; and now is the most beautiful of all our musical exchanges. The publishers have also added a beautiful tinted cover to it, thus giving to its readers four more pages of reading matter.

The result in the States that voted on Tuesday, fully demonstrates that with the same effort and diligence by the Democrats and Liberals we can sweep Indiana, Pennsylvania and, perhaps, Ohio for Mr. Greeley. The Presidential election being on the same day all over the country, there will be no opportunity for importing votes from one State to another.

$75,000 in cash for $1.—We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column of the Nebraska State Orphan Asylum. Here is a chance to win a fortune in a public legal drawing and at the same time help a noble, and worthy institution. Oct. 17—8t.

When you go to Fort Wayne to buy clothing ask for one of our price list before you purchase your goods, and get posted on prices and not be cheated by outsiders. No. 5 Keystone block.

Go to Davenport's for your drugs and wall paper.

Everybody that goes to Fort Wayne should not fail to call at the Red Front Clothing Hall, No. 5 Keystone block, and see the largest stock of clothing in the city. It has all been bought for cash before the late advance of wool.

Lots of people that have never been in Fort Wayne and are not acquainted can find the Red Front clothing hall, No. 5, Keystone block. Any woman or child can find this place, and you will save from 20 to 25 cents on each dollar.

For Sale.

The handsome residence of Mrs. Mary Mott. The house contains thirteen rooms and is particularly desirable for a boarding house. The price is twenty seven hundred dollars. If not sold soon one half of the house will be to let. Inquire at the residence on Cedar street. 44

THERE are many among us suffering from derangement of the Liver and Bowels, Fever and Ague, Bilious Fevers and diseases arising from a torpid or imperfect action of the Liver. To all such we would recommend the use of "LIVER STIMULANT AND CATHARTIC," which is advertised in our column. It has been used with wonderful success in sections where these diseases prevail, and we feel confident it will prove a blessing to many a household. As a medicine to be kept in the family, to be used in place of pills, it has no equal.

It is for sale by all our druggists and dealers in medicine.—Nashua Telegraph

EFFA HOGUE, Adm'x.

Durhams for Sale !

The undersigned offers at private sale of Fifteen thorough-bred Durham Bulls; twelve of which are calves, two yearlings, and one two year old. The sire of all is my Duke of Wabash county, and he was sired by Duncan's Duke of Airdrie: his dam, Juno 7th which Mr. Jeremiah Duncan, of Paris, Bourbon County, Ky., told me one was the best milker he ever owned, and had been breeding Durhams for Forty Years. A full sister to my Duke Louan 19th was sold at Duncan's sale for $1,275. Several of Duncan's Louan's were purchased by McMillen, of Xenia, O., and were re-sold at McMillen's great sale at the following prices. $475, $800, 3,000 $1,750, $2,025, $1,650, the lower priced ones being old ones, one being over 30 years. Some of my cows, the dams of stock offered, are Louans and Rosebuds bred by Mr. Duncan, of Ky. Some are of the Duchess milker family, which are excellent milkers.

I propose showing a sample of my stock at the Wabash and Huntington county fair and shall take pleasure in showing them to all who call on me at home, near Liberty Mills, Wabash county, Ind.

Facts For Farmers.

A series of experience, instituted to test the average loss in weight by drying, shows that corn loses one fifth, and wheat one fourteenth by the process. From this statement [illegible] made, that farmers will make more by selling unshelled corn in the fall at seventy-five cents than the following summer at one dollar a bushel, and that wheat at $1.[illegible] in December is equal to $1.50 for the [illegible] wheat in June following. This estimate is made on the basis of interest at seven per cent., and takes no loss on account of vermin. These facts are worthy of consideration.

W[illegible] Nothingism.

The Cincinnati Israelite, reproduces from the Golden Age the following presentation of the case of Henry Wilson as to his Know Nothing record:

"Mr. Henry Wilson has made an explanation of his German letter. He says it was unauthorized.' He admits that he was a Know Nothing for a while, but never uttered any of the of the bad sentiments against foreigners that have been attributed to him, and in fact never sympathized with the ideas and objects of the order. But this does not relieve him. He either joined the order in good faith or he did not. If he did not, why not own it in man fashion, and not equivocate about it and try to explain it away? If he did not, he was simply a traitor. If he went into the order and took its solemn and horid oath upon his lips while he repudiated it with his heart, he was a perjuror; if he stooped to such a measure for the sake of getting an office, he was an unprincipled adventurer. Mr. Wilson's worst enemies could not possibly injure him so much by any thing they could say against him, as he has injured hinself by his own cowardly equivocations. The portrait he has painted of himself, and writen his own name under are a sufficient retribution for any crime short of murder.'

How Politicians Work It.

At a political meeting the speaker and audience were very much disturbed by a man who constantly called for Mr. Henry. Whenever a new speaker came on, this man bawled out, "Mr. Henry, Henry! Henry! I call for Mr. Henry."

After several interruptions of this this kind at each speech a young man ascended the platform and was soon airing his eloquence in a magnilobuent style, striking out powerfully in his jestures, when the old cry was heard for Mr. Henry.

Putting his hands to his mouth like a speaking trumpet, this man was bawling out at the top of his voice Mr. Henry! Henry! Henry! I call for Mr. Henry to make a speech.

The Chairman now arose and remarked that it would oblige the audience if the gentleman would refrain from any farther calling for Mr. Henry, as that gentleman was now speaking.

'Is that Mr. Henry?" said the disturber of the meeting. "Thunder, that can't be Mr. Henry? Why that's the little cuss that told me to holler!"

Be Courtious at Home.

Why not be polite? How much does it cost you to say, 'I thank you?' Why not practice at home—to your husband, to your children, your domestics? If a stranger does you some little act of courtesy, how sweet the smiling acknowledgment! If it is your husband, ah, it is a matter of course—no need of thanks.

Should an acquaintance tread on your dress, your best very best, and by accident tear it a little, how profuse you are with your, "Never mind—don't think of it—I don't care at all." If a husband does it he gets a frown—if a child it is chastised,

"Ah, these are little things" say you, but they tell mightily on the heart, let me assure you, little as they are.

A gentleman stops at a friends house and finds it in confusion. He sees nothing for which to apologize,—never thinks of such matters. Every thing is right—cold supper cold room, crying children—perfectly comfortable Goes home where his wife has been taking care of sick ones and working her life almost out:—"Don't see why things can't be cept in order,—there never was such cross children before."

No apoligies accept at home. Why not be polite at home? Why not use freeley that gulden coin of courtesy!—How sweetly they sound, those little words, "I thank you" or 'You are very kind!" double yes, thrice sweet from the lips we love when the smile makes the eye sparkle with the light of affection.

Be polite to your children. Do you expect them to be mindful of your welfare, to grow glad at your approach, to bound away to do your pleasure before the request is half spoken? Then with all your dignity and authority, mingle politeness; give it a nich in your household temple.—Christian Treasury.

Novel Rat Trap.

There is no patent on the following "rat trap" which any one can use that wishes.

A gentleman whose barn was troubled with rats, greatly to the detriment of the coreals stored therein, loaded a double barreled shot gun with fine shot he then procured a long narrow plank made a train of coarse corn meal along the center, then shoved the plank under the barn, slightly elevating the outer end to give the better range. He then seated himself, lying the muzzle of the gun on the plank, quietly awaiting the arrival of the game, which soon appeared in "quantities to suit" covering the plank from both sides; when the gentleman with more resolution than discretion, took deliberate aim and fired. The fire engines did not arrive in time to subdue the flames. Loss, $3,000. No insurence.

—At Dayton, Ohio, recently, a boy named Wishing playfully pointed a gun at a playmate named Whaley; it went off and Whaley was dead.

VOLLMER'S Elixir of PYROPHOSPHATE OF IRON AND PERUVIAN BARK.

In this preparation are combined the valuable properties and virtues of Peruvian Bark, with Phosphorous and Iron, in the shape of Pyrophosphate of Iron. This Elixir will be found of great advantage in Dyspepsia, Indigestion, weak and delicate Stomachs, and generally in weak and delicate states of the system. The ingredients in this Elixir are skillfully blended into a delightful Cordial, making it the most agreeable and palatable combination to the taste, in use.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

IDLE WORDS.

BY S. JENNIE JONES.

I know a little blue-eyed boy—
Or brown-eyed—I forget,
Indeed, I am not sure his eyes
Are not as black as jet.
At all events, this little boy
Comes in sometimes from play,
And says, I want a piece of pie.
Please get it right away.

And if his mother doesn't run
And fetch it in a breath,
He adds, 'Oh, hurry, hurry, please,
I'm nearly starved to death.'
Do you believe an hour could bring
A boy so near starvation?
Or don't you think his hasty words
A gross exaggeration!

I know a clever little girl,
Her name, perhaps, is Kate;
It may be Mary, Jane or Sue—
My memory's bad of late;
But howsoever they may be,
One thing I'm sure I know;
She has a friend, 'the darlingest
That ever lived below:'
And yet sometimes they disagree,
I'm very sad to say,

And Mary, Kate, Jane or Sue
Comes flouncing in from play,
And says—I've heard her, I am sure,
Of times at least full five—
"I'll never speak to her again
As long as I'm alive.'
And yet she seeks her friend next day
Before 'tis fairly light,
Although 'tis useless to remark
She did not die that night.

I know a boy who, coming home
From school one summer day,
Declared he saw a hundred dogs
All fighting by the way
The same one said a thousand miles
You'd hear the lions' roars,
And that he saw an elephant
As bid as all out-doors.

CZAR IVAN!

A Pleasing Leaf From History.

Czar Ivan, who resigned over Russia about the middle of the sixteenth century frequently went out disguised, in order to disbover the opinion which the people had of his administration. One day in a solitary walk near Moscow, he entered a solitary village, and pretending to be over come by fatigue, he implored relief from several of the inhabitants. His dress was ragged; his appearance mean; and what ought to have excited the compassion of the villagers, and insured his reception, was productive of refusal. Full of indignation at such inhuman treatment, he was about to leave the place, when he perceived another habitation to which he had not yet applied for aid. It was the poorest cottage in the village. The Czar hastened to it, and knocked at the door; a peasant opened it, and asked him what he wanted.

I am almost dying with fatigue and hunger, replied the Czar. Can you give me lodging for one night.

Alas! said the peasant taking him by the hand, you will have but poor fare; you come at an unlucky time. My wife is about to become a mother; but come in You will at least be sheltered from the cold; and such as we have you are welcome to.

The peasant then made the Czar enter a little room full of children. In a cradle were two infants sleeping soundly; a girl three years old was sleeping on a rug near the craddle; while her two sisters, the one five and the other seven years old, were crying and praying to heaven for their mother, who was in an a room adjoining.

Stay here, said the peasant to the Czar I will go and get something for your supper.

He went out and soon returned with some black bread, eggs and honey.

You see all I have to give you, said the peasant; you are welcome to partake of it, with my children—I must go to my wife.

Your charity, your hospitality, said the Czar, must bring down blessings upon your house I am sure heaven will reward you.

Pray to Heaven, my good friend, said the peasant, pray to Heaven that my good wife may get well. That is all I wish for now.

And is that all you wish my friend to make you happy.

Happy! judge for yourself; I have five fine children, a wife that loves me; a father and mother, both in health, and my labor is quite sufficient to support them all.

Do your father and mother live with you?

Yes; they are in the next room with my wife.

But your cottage here is so very, very small.

It is large enough; it can hold us all easily.

The peasant then went to his wife, who an hour after, was happily past all danger. Her husband, in a transport of joy, brought the new-born child to the Czar.

Look, said he, what a fine, hearty child he is. May heaven preserve him as he has done my others.

The Czar, sensibly affected by the scene took the infant child in his arms, and then said:

I know from the physiognomy of the child, that he will be quite fortunate. He will arrive, I am certain, at great eminence.

The peasant smiled at the prediction; and that instant the two eldest girls came to their new-born brother, and their old grandmother came, also, to take him back The little ones followed her And the peasant, laying himself down upon his bed of straw, invited the stranger to do the same. In a moment the peasant was in a sound and peaceful sleep; but the Czar, stirring up, looked around, and contemplated everything with an eye of tenderness and emotion—the sleeping children, and their sleeping father. An undisturbed silence reigned in the cottage.

What a happy calm! what a delightful tranquility! thought the Czar. Avarice and ambition, suspicion and remorse, never enter here. How sweet is the sleep of innocence.

If such reflection and on such a bed, did the Emperor of the Russian spend the night. The peasant awoke at the break of day, and his guest, taking leave of him said:

I must go to Moscow, my friend. I am acquainted there with a very benevolent man, to whom I shall take care to mention your kind treatment to me. I can prevail upon him to stand godfather to your child. Promise me, therefore, that you will want for me, that I may be present at the christening. I will be back in three hours.

The peasant did not think much of this mighty promise, but, in the good nature of his heart, he consented to the stranger's request.

The Czar immediately took his leave.—The three hours were soon gone, and nobody appeared. The peasant therefore, followed by his family, was preparing to carry his child to church; but, as he was leaving his cottage, he heard on a sudden the tramping of horses, and the rattling of many vehicles. He knew the Imperial Guards, and called his family to come and see the Czar go by. They all run out in a hurry, and stood before the door.—The horsemen and carriages soon formed a circular line, and at last the stagecoach of the Czar stopped outside the good peasant's door. The guards kept back the crowd, which the hope of seeing their sovereign had collected together.

The chariot door was opened, the Czar aligted, and, advancing to his host, thus addressed him.

I promise you a god-father. I am come to fulfill my pledge. Give me your child, and follow me to church.

The peasant stood like a statute; now looking at the Czar with the mingled emotions of astonishment and joy; now observing his magnificent robes and the costly jewels with which they were adorned, and now turning to the crowd of nobles that surrounded him. In this profusion of pomp he could not discover the poor stranger who had laid all night with him upon the straw. The Czar silently enjoyed his perplexity for some moments, then said:

Yesterday you performed the duties of humanity; to-day I came to discharge the most faithful duty of a sovereign—of recompensing virtue. I shall not remove you from a situation to which you do so much honor, and the innocence and tranquility of which I envy, but I will bestow upon you such things as may be useful to you.

You shall have numerous flocks, rich pastures, and a house that will enable you to exercise the duties of hospitality with pleasure. Your new born child shall be my ward, for you remember, he continued that I prophesied he would be ever so fortunate.

The good peasant could not speak; but tears of grateful sensibility in his eyes, he ran instantly to fetch the child, brought him to the Czar, and laid him respectfully at his feet.

This excellent sovereign was quite, affected; he took the child in his arms, and carried it to church; and after the ceremony was over, unwilling to deprive him of his mother's care, he took him to the cottage, and ordered him to be sent to him as soon as he could be weaned.

The Czar faithfully fulfilled his engagement, caused the boy to be educated in his palace, provided amply for his future settlement in life, and continued over after to heap favors upon the virtuous peasant and his family.

Going a Fishing.

The following is an 'order for supplies' sent to a city grocer by a fishing excursion party, that once upon a time chartered the Restless.

DEAR SIR:—Myself and a few friends leave this morning on a fishing excursion, and you will please send us the following articles, which you can charge to either—or,—Either is the safest.

Four pounds of salt, and a small cask of whisky.

One pound of ground black pepper, and a denijon of whisky.

Ten pounds of lard, and a large jug of whisky.

One canvassed ham, and six quart bottles of whisky.

Three good, stout, fishing lines, and 3 pocket flasks of whisky.

One paper of large Limerick hooks, and a gallon of Whiskey in an old vessel you don't use.

Also, send one pound of white sugar, and a small jug of whisky.

Hurridly, yours, ——.

The Consumption of Timber.

The United States Commissioner of Agriculture says:

If for twenty years to come the demand for lumber shall advance in the same ratio to the population as in the past twenty, more than $200,000,000 worth of American sawed lumber will be needed each year, denuding more than ten million acres of land. About 7,000 acres are cleared of timber each week, day in this country. Of the annual crop $75,000,000 worth goes to fuel, and twice as much to fencing. The locomotives in this country consume no less than 7,000,000 cords a year, or 500 acres a day.

This is a startling revelation, but there is no doubt that it is substantially true, and the day is not far distant when every acre of timber land will be immensely valuable.

An Englishman's Mistake.

The Continental papers are circulating a story of an Englishman and his wife, who, not knowing a word of German, but being able to express themselves well in French, resolved to visit Berlin and Dresden. At Berlin they had been recommended to a hotel, whether they were riding in a hack, when all at once the lady espied an imposing edifice, upon which were inscribed, in large letters, the words 'Hotel Radzieviil.

She cried out: There is a beautiful hotel, and the situation is splendid.

Suppose we go there? suggested the husband.

It was done as soon as said. The driver was stopped. There were several ladies about the hotel, but none of them spoke either English or French. However, the servants were made to understand by gestures that they were to take in the luggage, and the travelers were ceremoniously conducted into an apartment.

The lady asked by signs for a sleeping-room, said to her husband:

I never saw in all my life a hotel so admirably furnished. Come and see the chamber and sleeping room.

Having dressed, our English folks luched and announced to the servant that they would dine at five.

They went to walk. On their return, a gentleman of distinguished appearance entered their room, saluted, and said something in German, which they did not understand.

The Englishman thinking him a little familiar, replied carelessly, in English: Good-morning. How do you do? And the stranger withdrew.

A delicious dinner was served.

When the servants had gone. My dear said the gentleman to his wife, all this is excellent. This hotel is evidently first-class. But it must be dear, and, as a matter of prudence, it will be well to ask for the bill to-morrow.

But he neglected to do so, and two days more passed like the first.

At last the bill was asked for, but it was not brought.

I am beginning to be a little uneasy, my dear, said the husband. Surely no one could be better cared for than we are, but I am persuaded the charges will be frightful.

At that moment the gentleman of distinguished appearance entered, and the following dialogue took place in French between them:

The stranger: I am Prince Radzieville.

The Englishman (rising and bringing a chair): To what may I attribute the honor of this visit?

You have evidently taken this house for a public hotel.

Certainly.

Well this is my private house, my hotel.

The English was so astounded that he could make no reply, and could not explain the mistake of his wife, who, in the greatest consternation, began to tell the prince in English, that the word 'hotel' over the door had caused her error. The prince, who saw their comusion, politely expressed his satisfaction at having given hospitality to English people, and begged them to remain a few days longer that he might enjoy their society. Of course, the invitation was politely declined. The Englishman succeed in making the servants accept a few presents, and the prince insisted upon accompanying them to a real hotel in his own carriage. Prince Radzieville is the Russian embassador at Berlin.

The story is an old one, as all readers of Goldsmith's comedies will remember, but is said to have occurred in Ireland.

How They Shave in China.

A fellow who has been shaved in China says that the barbour first stropped the razor on his leg and then did the shaving without any lather. The customer remonstrated, but was told that the lather was entierly useless, and a tendency to make the hair stiff and tough, and was therefore never used by persons who had any knowledge of the face and its appendages.

After the beard had been taken off—and it was taken off in a very sort time—the barber took a long sharp needle-shaped spoon and began to explore his customers' ears. He brought up from numerous little crevices bits of wax and dirt that had been accumulating since his childhood. The barber suddenly twisted his subjects neck to one side in such a manner that it racked as though the vertebrae had been dislocated.

"Hold on!" cried the party, alarmed for the safety of his neck.

"All right, said the tonsor, 'me no hurt you," and he continued to jerk and twist the neck, until it was as limber as an old ladie's dish-rag. He then fell to beating the back, breast, arms and sides with his fists; he then pummeled the muscles until they fairly glowed with the beating they recieved. He then dashed a bucket of cold water over his man, dried the skin with towels and declare his work was done. Price two cents.

Our defeat in Pennsylvania is owing wholly to the enormous frauds that have been perpetrated in the city of Philadelphia. In that city there was a registration of 162,000 votes, 6,000, more than was given in New York—yet that city has more people than Philadelphia and Cincinnati combined. This fraud cannot be repeated twice. There must be a reaction in our favor at the Presidential election.

* * *

This line was set in the dark.

The Little Savoyard.

It was the twelfth night after Christmas—an evening selebrated in England, France and Germany by fetes and entertainments, in which the children bear a prominent part.

I must ask the reader to accompany me to an elegant mansion in the arristocratic Boulivard of Malesherbes, in the city of Paris. It was easy to see that something was going on inside, for it was brilliently illuminated, and from time to time elegant dressed figures were seen through the opening of the curtain.

It was a Twelfth night Festival.—The saloon was fairly ablaze with light. Multitudes of children dressed with taste, moved about gracefully in childish dances, or eagerly partook of the bonbons which on those occasions are liberally supplied. Among them moved elegant ladies, most of them being the parents of the children present, who with smiles watched the enjoyment of the little ones.

At last came the grand ceremony of the evening. This was the cutting of the Twelfth Night cake, which was of mammoth proportions, and of which each guest was entitled to a share.—The cutting of the cake was watched with interest, and pieces were drawn by lot. Just before this was done, however the Countess de Charney said to the hostess.

"Will you gratify me in a little caprice?"

"Certainly." said the hostess complacently.

"It is this: I wish my portion of the cake to be given to the poorest little boy we can find in the streets."

The French are always fond of novelty, and this "caprice" struck the hostess as a promising variety.

"It is a good thought," she said. I will at once dispatch Antoine on your errand."

Antoine was at hand, his service being liable to be called upon at any moment. He shrugged his shoulders as the message was given him and thought there was no accounting for the caprices of fine ladies. But of course it was not for him to remonstrate, and he went out to execute his errand Reaching the street he loocked around him hoping that he might not have to go far in the cold, for it was one of the coldest nights of the winter.

"Ah there's a little vagabond, luckily! Now to capture him."

The boy refered to was a ragged little Savoyard, of ten years old, apparently, who was standing opposite with a little violin under his arm. He had been wandering around the streets all day, playing wherever he could get listeners. From some places he had been driven with abuse, for his instrument was far from being a superior one, and poor little Carlo was only a passible player. The poor little fellow had not only suffered a little with cold for his clothes were thin and by no means sufficient for the season; and he had nothing to eat since the crust of bread which was given him in the morning, by the speculator who had brought him, with several others to Paris, and now lived on their earnings deling them out the smallets allowence of food that would keep soul and body together.

After wandering about the whole day, little Carlo had strayed into the Boulevard des Malesherbes, and had paused in front of the beautiful mansion where the festival was going on. He could see distinctly the forms of the children who were participating in the entertainment, and it is quite likely that the poor little fellow felt a sorrowful envy of those whose lot was so much brighter than his. His gaze was so intent that he did not notice the appearence of the servent until Antoine having crossed the street laid his hand on his shoulder. Carlo started in alarm and tried to tear himself from the servants grasp.

"Not so fast little chap," said Antoine, I want you."

"I didn't do any harm,' said the little-Savoyard trembling; for he supposed antoindes's intentions were unfriendly.

"Who said you did? I only said I wanted you.'

The little Savoyard looked at him distrustfully. He had met with so little kindness in his life, that he regarded strangers as enemies, than as friends.

"You are to came with me into yonders mansion." said Antuine.

'Where the lights are?' asked the boy in surprise.

"Yes, come hurry along, I don't want to stay out here in the cold.'

"But why am I to go up there?" asked Carlo puzzled.

You will know when you get there. All I can tell you is that my mistress wants you.'

'Perhaps I am wanted to play on my violin.' thought the boy; and with this idea he followed the servent to the entrance of the mansion.

A moment later he was ushered into the briliant saloon, blazing with lights. He looked around him dazzled and nearly blinded by the glare.—There was a chorus of ejaculations, and the young gentlemen and ladies gathered around the timid little Savoyard who stood bewildered in the midst of the magnificent.

In the midst of it the Countes of Charny, whose caprice had been the cause of his appearence advanced, towards the boy and gently removed his tattered cap.

"Ah, he is indeed pretty," she said as his chesnut hair fell in a natural wave over a fine brow, which seemed white in comparison with his sunburnt looks.' His eyes were a bright hazel, his features were exquisitely turned only thin from want of sufficient food. In spite of his rags it was easy to see that he was gifted with beauty.

'Countes you wi'l soil your gloves," said a guest as she took the little boy by the hand and led him forward into the center of the saloon.

"Then I can buy another pair," she said indifferently. It is I who sent for you,' she said to Carlo. I will tell you what to do.

The drawing commenced. The little Savoyard followed the directions of the Countess, and his share of cake was handed him.

"Whoever finds the ring in his slice shall be king of the party; said the Countes, in explanation; or if a young lady she shall be queen. The king or queen has a right to choose one of the opposite sex to share the honor of royalty."

"May I eat it madam? asked the Savoyard with a longing look at the cake he held in his hand.

'Yes my child; but have a care not to swallow the ring, should it be within.

All the children were eagerly examining the slices in the hope of finding the ring which was the prize of the evening.

In the midst of it the little Savoyard drew the glittering circlet from the cake, saying to the Countes, "I have it madam,'

'The king! The king! The little Savoyard is king! shouted the children.

'You are the king of the festival," said the hostes advancing and leading forward Caslo who seemed bewildered by the enthusiasm.

It was a strange scene—the little ragamuffin in the center of the saloon, surrounded by elegantly dressed children, over whom he was called to exercise sovereignty. The children enjoyed it better than if one of themselves had been chosen.

'A queen! A queen! He must name a queen! shouted all.

'Look around you,' said the hostess. 'It is for you to choose a queen from those present.

The little Savoyard looked around him a moment, and went back to the Countess de Charny.

"I want you to be queen," he said.

'But, said the Countess it is the custom to choose a young girl.'

'I want you to be queen," he presisted.

'Why do you choose me?" she asked.

"Because you are kind to me,' said Carlo, "besides, you look like my mother."

Like your mother. Is she living?"

'I don't know madam, but I have er picture.'

'Show it to me,' said Countess who eemed to be moved by a strange interest.

Carlo drew from under his ragged vest a small locket suspended by a plain white string. The picture though stained and discollored, presented the face of a beautiful young lady of twenty. No sooner did the Countess cast her eyes upon it than she uttered a cry of joy, and threw her arms around the astonished boy.

"My boy! My boy!—my own little Victor! Are you again restored to me?'

All the guests gazed in astonishment at this unexpected tableau. The Countess quickly recovering herself, said, while an expression of joy irradiated her sweet face. "The picture is mine as you can perhaps discover by examining it. Eight years ago I was journeying through the northern part of Italy, with my husband and little Victor, then four years of age, when he suddenly disappeared from me. We had no doubt that he was stolen, and offered a large reward for his recovery, but without success. From that day I have mourned for him as one I never expected to see again in this world. It is doubtless that Providence who by such strange means has restored him to me.'

'Are you my mother then?' asked Carlo.

"Yes my child," and again the mother clasped the boy, ragged and dirty though he was to her bosom.

This time he returned her caress.

"Then I shall not be hungry any more?' he said.

'No my poor child."

"Let him tell his story,' demanded the children.

So seated on a chair in their midst, the little Savoyard told his story in answer to the many questions that were poured in upon him. As far back as he could remember he had wandered about with his little violin in Italy first, but for the two last years in Paris, where he had suffered every discomfort and privation He was in charge of an Italian named Giacomo Battoni who professed to take care of him and to whom his violin belonged.

'We will send for him in the to-morrow,' said the Countess. 'I must buy the violin of him as a memorial of the years of terrible privation through which you have passed.

That night the little Savoyard who was accostomed to sleep on a bed of straw, rested his wearied limbs on a bed of down in the beautiful mansion of the Countes de Charny. The next morning he was arrayed in an elegant suit of boys clothing, in which he looked transformed. Scracely was the metamorphesis complete than his Italian master who had been summond made his appearence, and bowing almost to the ground, was admitted into the presence of the Countess.

"Do you recognize this young gentleman?' asked the Countess, pointing to Carlo who now looked like a little prince.

"No, madam."

"Yet you ought to know him well. It is the little Savoyard, Carlo.'

Giacomo was overwhelmed with astonishment.

"But I do not understand.'

The explanation was briefly made. The Italian was paid a munificent sum for the violin, which is now the only link that unites the little Count Victor with the little Savoyard of former years. He is now at a military school and bids fair to maintain by his tallents the distinction of the illustrious family to which he belongs.

The strife is narrowed down to one, between Greeley and Grant. It is the duty of every citizen to use the suffrage his country gives him. At the worst, it is a choice of the lesser evil. We trust that the people will all vote and we trust that the greater majority of them will vote for the party of progress, under the leadership of the great editor. To compass this result however we must labor unceasingly. We may paraphrase the old fable, by saying that the first exquisite to the triumph of a party is Work; the second WORK, and the third WORK!

Insect Songsters.

The chirping and singing of the cricket and grasshopper, are frequently spoken of; but they do not sing—they fiddle. By rubbing wings and legs together—each in a manner peculiar to the species—these insects produce the sounds which characterise them. Perhaps some of our best instrumental preformers is the 'katy-did.' Each wing contains a little tambourine and by the opening and shutting of the wings these are rubbed against each other, and produce the sound of "katy-did-she-did," which can be heard a long distance and gives the insect its name.

Ohio went Radical as usual, but by a greatly reduced majority. Hamilton County, in which Cincinnati is situated done nobly, it elected the entire Democratic-Liberal ticket, with the two members of Congress by majorities ranging from two to five thousand majorities, and gave the State ticket a majority of 6,000. Would to God every county in the State would do as well in November.

The Sage's Reproof.

Alhakem, the sage whom all people honored for his great wisdom and his many virtues, sat in the market place giving instruction. A youth named Soyed, who had recently inherted vast wealth, passed that way, and shared with the teacher the attention of the multitude.

"See," cried Seyd, "how my good fortune has lifted me up in a day to claim a public attention which Alhakem has been long years in gaining." And he smiled proudly as he spoke.

Alhakem had heard his words, and motioned him to draw near.

"My son," said the sage, let me speak unto thee a fable. Once upon a time a gourd wound itself around a lofty palm, and in a very few weeks climbed to its very top.

"How old mayest thou be?" inquired the gourd.

"A hundred years," answered the palm.

"A hundred years!" cried the gourd in derision. "Only look: I have grown as tall as thou art in fewer days than thou countest years!"

"I new that very well," the palm made answer. "Every summer of my life a gourd has climed up around me as proud as thou art, and as short-lived as thou wilt be!"

Seyed heard, and then went away with head lowered.

The Courier.

AUBURN, IND., OCT. 24, 1872.

For President and Vice President.

FOR PRESIDENT,

HORACE GREELEY,

Of New York.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

BENJAMIN GRATZ BROWN,

of Missouri.

The Election.

The official returns have been recieved by the Secretary of State, from all but two counties, Delaware and Pike. The official returns from the ninety counties and the reported returns from the two counties make the majority for Mr. Hendricks 1,14?.

North Carolina

The Democratic State Central Committee of North Carolina has gathered sufficient facts to show that 6000 fraudulent votes were cast for the Radical candidate for Governor at the late election in that State—just 4000 more than the alleged majority for Caldwell. The latter election will be contested before the Legislature at its next session.

The round number of the fourteen States, carried at the last elections, the seven States carried by the Grantites, show a loss for the Administration, since the last election, immediately preceeding the election of Grant, in 1868, of 10,000 votes, while the seven States carried by the Liberals show a gain for us, over said vote of 1868, of 40,000 votes, making a total gain for the Liberals in the fourteen States, of 50,000 votes. How is this for Grant's prospects?

Every voter that looks upon the right of suffrage as a sacred privilege, that favors an honest election, that is against stuffing the ballot-box, will vote for Greeley. Why? Because such men as Cameron and Morton who are the advisers of Grant, have openly ignored the right, by stuffing ballot-boxes in Pennsylvania and Indiana. Who will dare to say that the vote in Philadelphia and Pitsburg was legal? Yet Cameron and Hantranft managed the whole thing, and they are the men that back Grant.

The Estimate of the Presidential Result.

We shall carry all the South, probably, with the exceptions of Mississippi and South Carolina.

Southern vote	124
New York	35
New Jersey	9
Indiana	15
California	6
Connecticut	6
Total	195

There was but 367 electorial votes. This would give Grant 172 votes—a majority of 23 for Mr. Greeley; but we will carry Illinois, which has an electorial vote of 21, which would give us a majority of 44.

Gen. Tom. Browne is reported to have "soured" on Mr. Morton, (the man who opposed the investigation of alleged frauds, because it would hurt "the party") Indeed Mr. Browne is in an unpleasant frame of mind, generally if gossip is any indication. He, it is hinted, threatens to be dangerous next winter, when the Legislature meets. Morton, the naughty man, in order to achieve a great wrong. viz: get himself elected to the Senate, has traded votes in such a way as to secure a little right, viz: defeat Mr. Browne for Governor.

The stirring speech of Carl Schurz, says the Chicago Tribune, at St. Charles Missouri, sounds the key-note of the hour. It is the bugle-call to advance in the critical moment when to hesitate might lose a victory half won. Terribly true is his reminder that we are fighting not only for a change of rulers but for the right and power to change them. If Grant wins in this contest he wins, not as the leader of the Republican party, for that is a thing of the past. It is the victory of a personal party, whose sole bond of cohesion is fealty to Grant. From that party every man had previously been expelled who holds any other principle to be of any importance. The remainder are "culls," "picked men," warranted impenetrable to all objections that can be urged to Grant. They had not a leader left who dared to propose another candidate at the Philadelphia Convention, and they have none left who would dare to vote for another now. We see no reason to hope the Grant party will attain to any independence of Grant in the next four years. For if Conklin, Cameron, Morton, Logan, Colfax, Blaine and Garfield should venture to oppose Grant during the next four years, what is there about them that would prevent their being kicked out of the party as Sumner, Greeley, Trumbull, Schurz, Blair, Brown, Palmer, and others have been? The Grant party boast of its inability to be led by party hacks, and under this boast it concedes an abject flunkeyism to power unprecedented in our history. They have set out on the principle that Grant cannot err, and they will fight it out on that line apparently through as many terms as Grant may propose to run.

The Situation.

The Cincinnati Enquirer takes up the figures of its contemporary, the Gazette, on the probability of the electoral vote, and shows that its own exhibit will beat Grant. The Cincinnati Gazette very generously gives the following States to Grant:

Maine	7	Minnesota	5
New Hampshire	5	Kansas	5
Vermont	5	Nebraska	3
Massachusetts	13	Illinois	21
Rhode Island	4	California	6
Pennsylvania	29	Oregon	3
South Carolina	7	Nevada	3
Mississippi	8	New York	35
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	11
Michigan	11	Indiana	15
Iowa	11	Louisiana	8
Wisconsin	10	Connecticut	6

Total certain for Grant	[illegible]
Necessary to a choice	184

Now, remarks the Enquirer, there is not a sensible politician of either party who does not concede New York to Greeley by a large majority. In all the United States we have heard of no one but the editor of the "Gazette" and a fool in the New York 'Times' who had the effrontery to put it down for Grant. The claim itself is an insult to the public inteligence. Who believes after the late election, that Indiana is going for Grant? Deduct these 50 votes from its estimate, and we have 202 only remaining. Louisiana voted for our candidate against Grant in 1868 by a large majority, and she is nearly certain to do it again. This cuts down the "Gazette" figures to 192, or only 8 more than is necessary. But, we enquire, upon what earthly reason does the "Gazette" claim Connecticut? There are as many Democrats in that State as there are Republicans of al sorts. For years it has been nearly a tie, we carrying it as the Republicans. But it contains thousands of Liberal Republicans, and is therefore certain for Greeley. We have just carried it for the Greeley ticket at the town elections by a majority of from 5,000 to 7,000. Thus we have run down Grant to a figure where he has but two to spare. But he is not going to get North Carolina, with 10 votes, nor California, with 6. North Carolina will go in November like Georgia, and in California Grant four years ago had only 500 majority. It is safe to estimate that there are fully 5,000 Liberal Republicans there. Then the "Gazette" claims Oregon, which went for Seymour, and Illinois, that its friends admit to be doubtful. Our contemporary professess to regard the following States as doubtful:

New Jersey	9	Alabama	10
Missouri	15	West Virginia	5
Virginia	11	Arkansas	6
Florida	4	Delaware	3
Total			63

New Jersey and Delaware voted against Lincoln twice, in favor of Douglas and McClellan, and both voted against Grant before and for Seymour and Blair, and both have Democratic Governors and Democratic Legislatures. Are they not beautiful States to claim as "doubtful?" As for Virginia and west Virginia, we have this to say: In the latter there are two Democrats to one Republican. The Grant men at the last election did not run a single State officer, but allowed the whole fight to between two sets of Greeley candidates, from Governor down. In Virginia no one puts the majority less than 20,000, and even the fool of the New York "Times" gives it to Greeley. In Missouri our candidate for Vice-President had 40,000 majority for Governor two years ago, and we have since enfranchised 60,000 Democrats who were not then permitted to vote. Very doubtful that State! In Alabama we have the Governor and Legislature, and the Grant men generally give it up. In Arkansas the villainy of Clayton has, like that of Bullock in Georgia, made the coming election a sure thing for us. Take it all in all, the "Gazette" has made a bad showing for its own side.

Hon. M. C. Kerr in a letter to E. S. Alvord' says:

We must not abate our effort to advance the right, and overthrow incompetence, lawlessness and corruption. In Indiana we have been subjected to partial defeat by the lavish and infamous use of money, and by gross and multiplied frauds practiced by our enemies, and by their very reprehensible indifference and absentism of many political friends. Let us hope that these dangers will be less extensive and formidable in November than they were in October. But whether less or greater, our duty will be the same. We should omit no lawful effort of intelligent freeman to save our country from four more years of misrule and corruption. The Administration at Washington is only surpassed in its vices, its evil passions and its unworthy motives, by a few of its leading friends and apologists in Indiana. Both, and all such people, should be rebuked. It is not to late. Let us rally with manly zeal and unfaltering courage. The election of Mr. Greeley this year means regeneration and purification in our public service; it means genuine and generous peace and reconciliation; it means the equal and impartial enforcement of the Constitution and laws in the interest of all the people; it means at least, the intelligent and sincere commencement of reform in practical administration, and the setting of the face of the Government toward honest men and honest ways. These are considerations of vast importance to the welfare of every citizen. These are achievements that can never be accomplished under any Administration over which Mr. Grant presides. These great objects should arouse the utmost energies of every Democrat and Liberal Republican to struggle for a triumph in November. We owe such an effort to our country. Especially does the great Democratic party owe it to their faithful Liberal Republican allies. In good faith the latter stood by us, fought bravely and consistently in the late bitter contest in our State, and now well deserve, as our country does, our best efforts in behalf of Mr. Greeley. I am sorry I cannot be with you to-morrow. I shall do all in my power, in view of the condition of my health, to secure victory for our great cause in next month.

The November Contest in Indiana.

We can see no reason why the Grant men should profess any confidence in their ability to carry Indiana in the November election. They turned over every stone against Hendricks that it was possible for them to do. There was not a card in their hands that they neglected to play. They did their very best. They had the advantage of every fraudulent device that it is possible for them to have next month. They polled at least 10,000 illegal votes against Hendricks. They spent millions of dollars out of the Treasury of the United States. They bribed all that could be bribed. Still with all this they were beaten. Where can they possibly improve their vote? There will be more votes for Greeley than for Hendricks, because thousands of Republicans who could not make up their minds to vote for a Democrat will vote for one of their own party like Greeley. The Democrats will stand true for they voted for Hendricks with the understanding that it was to be regarded as a test of Greeley's strength. Say what we will, the prestige of victory is with the Democrats and Liberals in Indiana, and that is worth considerable to them. The popular vote of the State is known to be in their favor, for it was on Governor and on no other State office that the big fight was made. Although by trickery and fraud they have lost the Legislature it is offset by the fact that, having the majority on Governor, they can carry the State for President, and a President is worth several United States Senators. We have every confidence, then, in the figures of the Cincinnati Gazette, which proved by the record a few days since, that Indiana was never known to elect a Governor of one party in October, and vote for a President of the opposite party in November. From this it will be seen that the "Gazette" gives up the State, and when it gives up, who will hold on?—Enquirer.

A New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Age thus describes the modus operandi of the New York repeaters:

"The' Allen brags of having made $6,000 out of his gang after having paid them liberally for their votes. He was describing how the work was done to some friends on Friday, stating that it beat any thing that he ever saw or heard of before. 'The men,' said he, 'would deposit their ballots, and as soon as they got outside of the room where the ballot-box was the money would be handed them and off they would go to the next polling place, where the same programme would be gone through with.' One of the parties listening to Allen's story asked him if they did not have trouble in evading the officers, 'Not a bit,' responded Allen; 'we were all protected by the police and United States Marshals. If any person challenged us or attempted to interfere with our voting, they were taking care of by either the police or marshals.' The parties who went to Philadelphia from the Fifth Ward of this city have since their return been bragging that they voted forty-five times each in Philadelphia on Tuesday. They state that they were divided into parties of twenty and twenty-five each, and each party was provided with an omnibus. They would back up to one polling place, all go in and vote, go out and get their pay, jump into the omnibus again and drive to the next polling place where they had been ticketed to vote, and go through with the same performance, keeping it up from morning until night."

As to the number of "repeaters" who went from New York to Philadelphia, it is known that more than 500 went on the railroad. These 500 voting forty times, would make 20,000 fraudulent votes in all. This New York correspondent adds:

"One of the leading manufacturers of Philadelphia was in this city on Friday. He is a Republican and voted for the Republican ticket. In a conversation with a friend here he said that the general belief was that there are not les than twenty-five thousand fraudulent votes polled for Hartranft on Tuesday, for which was paid from ten to twenty-five dollars per vote."

To those honest men in the Grant party who have been rejoicing over the "great victory," as they call it, at the October election in Pennsylvania, we commend the following. It shows the kind of a great victory it was:

"To the Reform Association of Philadelphia:

"Gents—In the official count of votes for Governor in the Fifteenth Ward, it is represented the vote for Governor was as follows; For Hartranft, 4,490; for Buckalew, 2,893; majority 1,597. The undersigned judges of election signed no such return or paper. The true vote for Governor was as follows, the having signed the same; Hartranft, 4,390; for Buckalew, 2,993; majority, 1,397. By exposing the above fraud you will oblige the friends of reform in the Fifteenth Ward, and show how our election judges alter the returns to suit their own partizan way of fixing up election returns.

Respectfully yours,
John Prither, Judge First Division.
Jas. Nash, Judge Second Division.
W. J. Murray, Judge Seventh Div'n
Alf. Murray, Judge Twenty-sec'd D.
"Philadelphia, October 11, 1872."

Two hundred votes were counted more than polled in each ward. In twenty-nine wards there were 5,800 fraudulent votes, but the Nineteenth Ward polled 1,500 fraudulent votes; the twentieth 500, the Tenth 500; the Fourth sold out to Hartranft; the Sixteenth 500, the Seventeenth the same, etc. The fraudulent votes and false counts in Philadelphia amounted to 15,000.

These "tactics" of Cameron, which changed about 30,000 votes in Philadelphia after they were put in the box were not confined to that city. They extended to Pittsburg, Lancaster, Harrisburg and other large cities and villages that were under the dominion of the Ring. There never was so complete a farce as the Pennsylvania election. The people elected Buckalew Governor by a large majority. But after they put their votes in the boxes, Cameron's candidate, General Hartranft, was elected by 35,000 majority in the manner above indicated. This is the point to which free institutions have been reduced in the Keystone State.

Death of Fanny Fern.

Sarah Payson Willis, otherwise known as Fanny Fern, wife of James Parton the historian, died in New York on Thursday. Her remains will be taken to Boston for interment.

Many hearts will be saddened by the death of Fanny Fern. Among the lady writers of the present day she held, if not a high place, a respectable and a warm one in the hearts of thousands of readers. Her little volume of "Fern Leaves" had an extraordinary sale in its day, as did also her later volume of "Ruth Hall," whose principle male character was supposed to stand for her brother N. P. Willis who appeared under the character of Hyacinth, as a selfish and heartless dandy. Her latter writings have appeared in the New York Ledger, to which she has been a regular contributor for some years.

On what principle can any Democrat preserve hostility in such a contest? He cannot act as a strict member of the party since he refuses to support its regular nominees. He cannot act as an opponent to corruption and tyranny of the Administration, since he is doing all he can to insure its continued case in power. To spite a former enemy, who sues for an honorable alliance, he is willing to witness the triumph of his most inveterate foe. Because his friends neglect, while glad to contend for his leading ideas, to adopt his more minute articles of faith, he is willing to aid all that is dangerous to his country to continue in power. He professes friendship for the South, but turns his back to its out-stretched petitioning hands, and by his silent approbation gives countenance to its oppressors' tyranny. Because he cannot save the victim in his own way he is willing to let her perish. To all such we can only recommend the words of the Democratic leader of the times, Horatio Seymour, in his recent speech at his own home.

"My relationship to Mr. Greeley has not been of a friendly character. He has been a sharp political opponent all my life long, and I can only stand up before you now and urge you to vote for him as President of the United States, because I feel myself called upon as one that would advance the interest of his country, to lay aside my natural pride, and to lay aside my passions, to stand here to-day to urge you to that course, because, I deem it my duty."

The Weather.

We are aware that of all other subjects that of "the weather" is far from the latest and the best; that it has been elaborated in prose and sung in poesy, and that it is daily 'cussed' and discussed by almost every mundane sphere. Yet, such has been the vexity of its past few weeks' career, that we deem it worthy of more than a passing notice. Our warm weather of two short weeks since has been succeeded by a climate decidedly Alaskian in its proclivites, and one well-timed, may-be, to cool down the 'heat' of the present political contest; fires have become a prime necessity; the linen duster has given place to the over-coat, and the 'chip' hat seen its best days for the year '72; the forest and the field have donned their sere and yellow leaf; Jack Frost put in an able-bodied appearence nightly, touching the face of nature with his delicate tracery of virgin white. The winds are incessent and chill, and 'whistle around our lonely door,' with that peculiar shrillness which makes the heartstone brighter and cherier and seems to send the ruddy warmth of the fire-light further out into the cheerless world beyond, as if to take within its generous grasp any who might perchance

"Bide the peltings' of the pitiless storm"

But this particular season has a double significence. Ancient historians (we do not say Josephus nor Rollin) informs us that this transitory epoch in the weather effects the moral as well as the physical man; that this is a most opportune occasion for the formation of a first-class set of habits, by quitting smoking, drinking, swearing lying, stealing, and voting the Radical ticket, and such like eccentricities—Philosophers also instruct us that at this time it is the most auspicious period in which to commence a ceaseless winter's vigil—a long continued series of "sitting up 'o nights" as it were with somebody's good-looking sister or cousin, or some able-bodied female orphan, or some poor soldiers bright-eyed widow. Our young men will do well to heed the truth, of the above, for "now is the time, and now's the hour" and they will be sure to find that at just this time, "Barkis is always willing.'

The carrying of Indiana for Hendricks for Governor, assures the success of Greeley at the Presidential election. With New York, Indiana, and the South, victory is assured for our ticket. Illinois Indiana, and New York, more than do the business, without Pennsylvania or Ohio. Press on the columns!

The Tall Sycamore.

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal.]

Dan Voorhees talks it out like a man. He says that when Horace Greeley was first nominated he shared with the rank and file of his party the prejudices of thirty years, of bitter partisan warfare. He did not believe that these prejudices could be dissipated in the period of a short Presidential canvass. But he adds that as far as he is concerned, the conduct and speeches of Mr. Greeley have been conclusive; they have entirely [illegible] him. As to the issue of Liberalism versus Radicalism that is right, and he indorses it on principle and will stand to it. He says furthermore that he does not care a fig to go back to Congress, for his defeat will throw him on a profession which would have enriched him years ago if he had stuck to it.

ADDRESS OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE

To the Democrats and Liberal Republicans of Indiana.

In a contest of great bitterness and determination, we have met the organized and compact forces of the National Administration, and have achieved much. Our victory in the State would be complete, and without occasion for regret had all rallied to the support of the State and Congressional tickets, who feel that the welfare of the country require a change of administration. Surely that small element in our party which remained away from the polls on last Tuesday will now appreciate the importance of entire union in our ranks, to accomplish a general good; and they will overcome all prejudices that have been a hindrance in their way. General Grant's sixty thousand office-holders, in a solid body, have thrown themselves into the contest, and with money in such sums and quantities as was never known in an election before, have struck at and resisted the popular will, yet we came out of the strife with unbroken ranks and with such fruits of victory as encourage us to march onward to a complete triumph in November. The unscrupulous men who invoked the corrupting influence of money have not accomplished all they hoped. The genius of public virtue has proven stronger in Indiana than the dark spirit of corruption, and stands ready to lead us on in the struggle for reform. Will any of us hesitate or be misled? Many were imported from other States and voted who had no right to vote, many votes were repeated in different precincts and in different counties, yet the result shows that a majority of the legal voters of the State are opposed to General Grant and the corrupt ring by which his administration is controlled, and it requires but a united effort to secure the electoral vote of Indiana in favor of reconciliation and reform.

Amidst unmerited calumny the Liberal Republicans have stood faithful and true to the cause represented by our tickets. They have given an unwavering support to the State ticket, in the selection of which they had no voice.

The Democratic masses stood in almost unbroken line in support of the principles of constitutional liberty and good government, as declared in the Cincinnati and Baltimore platforms.

The late elections fully demonstrate that if all who are opposed to continuing the present corrupt Administration and the more corrupt ring which controls it in power will act together, it can, and will be defeated, and the nominees of the Cincinnati and Baltimore Conventions elected in its stead. This is a great contest—a contest between the people on one hand, and a corrupt army of office holders on the other. It is to be determined in this contest whether an Administration which has lost the confidence and respect of a vast majority of the people can perpetuate its power by the corrupting influence of its patronage and the free use of money, or whether the people are yet strong enough to defeat the combined effort of bad men, and once more place their Government on the sound basis of fraternity, honesty and economy.

Democrats and Liberals, in the struggle that yet remains let us move forward as one man. Let there be from this time forward but one party—standing on a common platform the platform of the Cincinnati and Baltimore Conventions, and doing battle for a common object—the redemption of our country from misrule, and the restoration of harmony and brotherly love throughout all our borders and victory must perch on our standard.

E. S. ALVORD,
Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee.

The regular annual meeting of the Stockholders of the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois Railroad Co., for the election of Director for the ensuing year and the transaction of such other business as may regularly come upon. Such meeting will be held at the office of James B. Collins, in Columbia City, Whitley County, Ind., on Thursday the 31st day of October A. D. 1872, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day.

By order of the Board of Directors
EDWIN DILL, Sec'y.

October 1, 1872.

[illegible] made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual on the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS twice a week.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are the best safe-guard in cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef-steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

WEATHER 'kinder chilly.

NAILS, glass and putty, at Martin & Son's

BARNUM showed at Fort Wayne, last Monday.

Esquire Widney is around again after a painful illness of several weeks.

THE total receipts at the fair last week were twenty-five hundred and two dollars and one cent. Good.

No smell of fire on the groceries, but fresh and pure at Martin & Son's.

C. S. HARE has the largest and best selected stock of boots and shoes in this place. Go and see.

Change is made in Smith & Hare's advertisement this week. They have just received a fresh supply of groceries.

The foundations for new houses are going up, nothwithstanding the lateness of the season.

Hall & Rush are now accupying their new furniture store, one door north of the post-office.

READ J. G. Fledderman's advertisement He is offering splendid inducements to those wanting clothing.

Another dance at Sedan next Friday.—Wonder if some of the same crowd will attend that did the last time. For the benefit of the community, we hope not.

Two young men started for Corunna, last Sunday evening, to see some gals, but the 'old hose' stumbled, and fell, about a mile from town. Repairing $5.

AN excellent stone gutter has been put down on Main street, in front of the Court House. It is a good job and one that will be appreciated by our farmers as well as our town people.

PROF. FASH, of Paris, the celebrated cutter, has been engaged by Mr. Lauferty, to take charge of his Merchant Tailoring department. Those wanting a good fit can now be accommodated at this establishment.

SEE the new advertisement of Mr. Lauferty's in another column. He has on hand the largest stock of ready-made clothing in this county, which he will dispose of at very low figures.

WE are sorry to learn of the serious illness of our fellow townsmen, C. S. Hare, Esq., and Dr. C. Knorr, from typhoid fever. We hope to see them around again in a few days.

BARNUM'S show was a magnificent humbug, and was well worth the money to see it. The crowd in attendance was large, and everybody delighted. The American people love to be humbugged.

ANY thing you want in shelf hardware, Martin & Son's.

THAT prince of good fellows, Gust Lease, of Waterloo, has our thanks for special favors. He keeps a number one livery, is a good judge of horse flesh, and is up to snuff, besides being the most pleasant and agreeable fellow in the world to meet with.

The Odd Fellows' Hall is rising again and the brick walls are growing high up over the rubbish that has marked the place for several weeks past. A few more days will see it not only as far completed as it was, but a much better building in every respect.

Davenport & Co., are now displaying some very beautiful samples of Lap Window Shades far superior to all others heretofore introduced. These lap over each other so as to make it impossible to see through them. They have all styles and colors and sell them very cheap.

The happiest man politically is Bob. Dumm, of the Fort Wayne Sentinel. Having carried Allen County by 3000 majority, he is utterly oblivious to any thing like the blues, and believes that charity should begin at home and all would be well generally.

This is the way the Kendallville Standard speaks of the temperance party in our State:

"The defeat of Gen. Thomas M. Browne for Governor, is doubtless owing to the fanatical temperance element in this State that has always been endeavoring to bite its own nose off to spite its face.

The Champion Cross Cut and Wood saws, at Martin & Son's.

About the best schism that a man can be guilty of is witticism.

Trotting Match.

A trotting match between the celebrated horses Greenwood and Tom Hunter will take place, at the fair grounds near Waterloo, on next Saturday, Oct. 26. A purse of one hundred dollars has been made up and an exciting time may be expected. Greenwood is now at Waterloo, and Tom Hunter will be on hand in time. Go and see the fun.

SPENCER DILLS, Esq., formerly of this place, died from that terrible disease small pox, at Toledo, last Saturday. Though not personally acquainted with the deceased, we have heard many compliments passed in his favor. He was a graduate of the medical college at Ann Arbor, Mich and had entered upon a life full of promise and hope, when this dread disease seized him as its victim.

SAD BEREAVEMENT.—We are pained to learn of the death of Mrs. Geo. W. Maxwell, which took place last Sabbath.—Only a short time ago, Mr. Maxwell lost a little daughter from typhoid fever, and another was attacked with the same disease but recovered. And now the same fever has taken the wife and mother and all is sad and lonely around the hearthstone.—Every one far and near deeply sympathize with the stricken family.

PAY UP.

All subscribers indebted to us for a year or more for the COURIER must pay up by January 1st, or the paper will be discontinued, and the accounts placed in proper hands for collection. We can't afford to wait longer than two years for our money.

CORRESPONDENTS.—We must have them. We want one in every town and village in the county. We want local news. It takes local happenings to make a local paper, and in order to secure these happenings we must have a good correspondent in every locality. How many letters can we have next week for publication. We should have twelve, or more. Now let some one enlist and send in the items. It is you, reader, we are talking to.

FATAL OCCURRENCE.—A man by the name of Mike Sullivan, was shot through the heart last Sunday night in Angola, while standing in his door, late in the evening. He had retired but got up and went to the door and steped on the outside when the family heard the report of a gun or pistol, and soon after found her husband dying near the door. It is said that a feud existed between the head of this family and another neighbor near by, but there is nothing to show yet who done the cowardly act.

Knowledge.

Knowledge in its most extended sense is the cognizance of the existence and relations of all the phenomena of matter and mind. When we consider knowledge in reference to the known and the unknown two very obvious divisions present themselves. The first is the result of past observation, and embraces the sciences in their present imperfect state of development; the second lies within the illimitable field of original investigation. We have no knowledge of anything except properties. We know nothing of the essence of either matter or mind. We only know matter as something extended, divisible, colored, &c., and mind as something that perceives, reflects, wills, &c.—Thus we say of a price of gold it is yellow heavy, or valuable, but what this subject is of which we predicate these qualities, we cannot tell. We know that it must be something, for we cannot predicate a quality of nothing. Likewise we attribute to the mind the functions of thought, feeling, and action, but this is as far as we can go. This inability to comprehend matter and mind in themselves, we regard as a necessity established by the Creator for his own wise purpose. Here, then, lies the whole field of knowledge. In all of our investigations we must be confined to the examination comparison, and generalization of phenomena. All of the sciences have arisen from these few simple operations. The discovery of any new truth in philosophy, is only perceiving a certain relation to exist of which we were before ignorant. The truth itself is not new, for it has existed from the beginning It is only new to us because we did not know of its existence before. Thus the immutable law of gravitation which in its origin was coeval with the creation of matter, when discovered by Newton, became a new truth in philosophy. Science verifies the declaration of revelation, that there is no new thing under the sun. That there is an infinity of these relations yet undiscovered, is not to be questioned—And we believe that it will be the work of an eternity to understand them all—With the acquisitions of six thousand years left to us as a legacy, we feel that what is know is as a drop to the ocean when compared to that which is concealed from us. The ultimatum of human knowledge is found in the conviction that we know nothing. Yet we would not have it otherwise. Were it possible in a limited portion of of time to become acquainted with all the wonders of nature, we would sit weeping like Alexander because there were no more worlds to conquer. To discover a new principle in the natural or spiritual world, affords as much triumph to the philosopher as the conquest of a city does to a general. But even this is not half so delightful as to wander in the great unknown in search of new truths.—Shall the mariner find pleasure upon the great ocean with its wild sublimities, and shall not he who lets loose the soul on the boundless sea of thought encounter scenes of higher grandeur? There is so much happiness in thinking upon and studying the curiosities of nature, that we cannot help praising the Creator for making them and us as we are.

GRAND SUCCESS.

First Annual Fair!

OF THE

N. E. INDIANA!

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY!

The entire success of the fair at Waterloo last week, is now an admitted fact.—The weather though somewhat threatening at first finally turned out favorable, closing on Friday with as beautiful an autumal day as one could wish for.

TUESDAY.

This being the first day it was mainly devoted to making entries and arranging articles for exhibition. A number of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, poultry, etc., were brought in and entered for the various premiums offered. Our special attention was called to several fine head of short horns, owned by B. F. Greenwood, Esq., of this county. We were gratified to know that our county could afford such excellent stock and that the excellent example of Mr. G. will be adopted by many others without delay. A five month's calf was with this number which took the first premium, weighing over four hundred.

There were several fine Devonshires from Ohio on exhibition. The sheep and hog department was not numerously represented, but it is hoped by another year great improvement will be made in this respect. There was some very fine poultry on the ground of different varieties and of good grades.

The display of Agricultural Implements was very good, among them a large number of patent rights of almost every conceivable kind.

Floral hall was well filled with many articles of every character.

The exhibition of vegetables was very fine, when we remember the lateness of the season, and was also very creditable A large number of apples, potatoes, grain etc., were there in abundance. Owing to there having but one hall finished the managment were compelled to use it for the exhibition of all smaller articles and it was densly packed with varieties, and made up an excellent variety hall. Each class was kept distinct and this made an interesting feature of the fair. We noticed a beautiful doll, dressed with artistic skill and enclosed in a fine glass case, and the card on top did not have to tell us that the excellent taste and admirable style, were from the popular establishment of Boozer & Blattner. They made a fine display of dry goods, also, which the busy throng admired with many flattering remarks.

Lockhart and Van Fleet made the only display of furniture on the ground. It was complete, however, and embraced everything from a fine parlor set down to a common chair. We noticed particularly some very fine bedsteads and bureaus and Secretary's desks, the result of their handiwork that were creditable indeed.

A very beautiful draped monument of most excellent marble, the work of J. H Hamil, was displayed on the outside, which seemed to receive the attention of all. Mr Knoelich also made an exhibition in the same line.

The display of wagons and carriage. was quite extensive some of home and others of foreign manufacture.

But the most interesting feature to all was, doubtles, the excellent disply of horses, not only of trotters but also of roadsters, carriage horses and for all purposes.

First came the stallions, some very fine ones, and then draft horses, and colts from one to three years old, all well graded and generally of good stock. Mr Moore showed us a fine yearling of large size, and two draft horses all of whom took the blue ribbon, first premium, afterwards. There is no department so interesting, in our opinion, as this department and we believe that is the fact generally. A fair display of horses of all kinds will prevent a failure in any exhibition of this character.

WEDNESDAY.

The regular programme of the fair commenced by the exhibition of stock, and the awarding of premiums.

The afternoon was devoted to two races pacing and trotting. We were not present but learn that everything went off pleasantly, the Waterloo horse winning the pacing race, in easy time.

THURSDAY.

The day opened with threating clouds being heavy and lowering almost within reach, and many a heart was disappointed as they thought of being prevented from attending by rain. Even at eight o'clock it still looked threatening, yet hundreds were on their way to the grounds, despite the apparent prospect for a rainy day. By nine o'clock every road leading to town was lined with wagons, and a constant stream kept the road leading to the fair grounds, densly packed, and soon the enclosure was filled with a moving mass of human beings. The crowd was variously estimated from five to six thousand, and the sale from tickets amounted to about twelve hundred dollars. This stamped the enterprize as a success, and the management felt gratified over the result. The fornoon was spent in the examination of the various grades of stock all of which were exhibited on the track.

THE RACES.

After dinner, trotting for all horses that had not beaten three minutes, was called Seven entries were made, including the following horses:

Little Jack, Sparkle, Ploughboy, Benny Reconstruction, Tom Hunter and Robert Tom Hunter was withdrawn. Little Jack took the first heat, time 3 minutes. Benny came in a head the next three heats winning the race, best time 2 54.

A running race was also announced at the same time, the following horses being entered:

Frank, Pilgrim, Perry Girl, Sand, Pitcher and Young Printer. In the first heat Sand Pitcher bolted the track and was withdrawn, Perry Girl coming in winner. On the third head Pilgrim gave the Girl a close race, but she reached the score in time to save herself.

FRIDAY.

The day opened most beautifully, but the attendance was not near so large as on the day previous. The final awards were made in the forenoon and the trotting race, sweepsteaks, came off in the afternoon, together with a fine pacing race.

Tom Hunter was the favorite on the first and Benny second. Hunter won the race in three straight heats, 2.44½. Greenwood was excluded from the race on some technicality and a special match was gotted up after the regular race, between this horse and Tom Hunter. Greenwood took the first heat, after some skipping and breaking, in which he seemed to lose ground. As the horses came in on the second heat, Greenwood ahead, the crowd with one accord began to move toward home, and the judges were thus constrained to decide in favor of Greenwood, though it would have been decided a dead head, owing to Greenwood running a considerable distance, but it was getting late, and the people were moving rapidly from the ground.

Thus ended the first annual fair of the N. E. Indiana Agricultural Society. This flattering financial success will do much for our county, and the substantial encouragement it has received will be of general benefit to the people at large.

The officers of the Association deserve special credit for the excellent management throughout. All labored zealously and faithfully for its success. President Chamberlain seemed to be ubiquitous, now here, now there, attending to the wants of all. Secretary McBride was always at his post, and we doubt whether the ate one single dinner during the whole fair. Treasurer Long and Executive Committeemen, McClellan, Bowman, Lease and Blair seemed to be just where they were wanted. The Revs. Baker and Fowler, done good service in their capacity as Superintendents of the different halls, and to all of these officers and their assistants may be ascribed, the excellent management of the fair without a single accident, or unpleasantness to ruffle the temper or disturb the comfort of the most exacting.

THE sere and yellow leaf is falling all around us, and reminds us that walnut and hickory nut time is near at hand, and that 'the winter of our discontent' will soon be here, when we shall want all that wood that has been promised us on subscription, Bring it in.

Muncipal Taxes.

Notice is hereby given that the muncipal taxes of the town of Auburn for the year A. D. 1872, are due and will be received at the Marshal's office in said town at any time on or before the 31st day of January 1873.

MURRY C. MARKLE, Marshal.

OUR venerable friend John Somers, Esq has our thanks for a lot of nice rambo apples, the best variety now known. We are glad to know that he is improving some in his condition, having been nearly bed-ridden for a long time He is now able to be up a little, and we hope before long he will be amongst us again, enjoying that greatest of all blessings—good health.

THE Liberals and Democrats, of Laporte county, scooped up the Grantites quite excessively at the late election Our citizens will remember one Hon. M. H. Wier, who made a telling speech at the Court House before the election and whom the Press called an "inflated squirt."—Such inflations as that don't go bad, especially in Republican counties. Morg. went for 'em, he reached his hand forth and they come like little men.

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the stockholders of the Building, Loan and Savings Association will be held on Thursday Evening, Oct. 31,

at the Court House, at which time the monthly installments will be sold to the highest bidder.

J. B. CASEBEER, Pres't.

MR. ROSENTHAL, of the firm of Lamly & Resenthal, of Fort Wayne, was in town last week with samples of their fine cigars which they manufacture. Their celebrated brands "The Hunter" and "Fanchion" knock the red bird into a cocked hat. They are the best cigars that have been sold in this place for a long time. "Uncle Toby" is a common cigar, also a superior brand. One trial will convince that you have been humbugged long enough by red birds

GOOD BAND.—The Angola silver band played for the fair, at Waterloo. the two last days, and entertained the people with most excellent music. A good band does more for enjoyment of the crowd on these occasions than most persons are aware of, and we heard many remarks complimentary, our neighboring county on the excellence of their production in this particular. The members are all good, clever fellows, too, and conduct themselves like gentleman. But where were they fifteen hundred years ago! Where? yes they were.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel gets off the following in regard to the editorial fight now going on between Tom Taylor, of the Journal, and Alexander, of the Gazette, both Republican papers:

"Once upon a time a jackass wanted to be a little camel, which is as much as to say, that he got his back up, and at a safe distance, kicked at a lion. The old lion thought it a freak of pleasantry, and in great good humor rolled over on his back and stuck up the point of his tail for the jackmule to fondle with, but the jackmule was not on the fondle, and insinuated himself further by punching the lion in the ribs. King of beasts (be particular and follow the allegory, and don't mistake this Beast for Butler,) crawled to a horizontal perpendicular, reached forth one paw for the jackmule; poised him in the air, examined his ears with considerable curiosity, and decided, without benefit of clergy, that it was one little mouse, and laughed at its sport. The jackmule ran away and swore how he had whaled the lion, and the lion laid down to peaceful slumber. The author of this fable is Alexander Æsop, of Connecticut.

SOMETHING FOR THE LADIES.—We want none but the ladies to read this item, because its private. We want to tell them that instead of looking forward with gloom and dispair, they can now anticipate with joy the coming of the wash-day, because Tyler's steam washer does away with the hard work and makes wash-day pleasant. Our friends all around us have tried it and they say they would not do without it. Mrs. Askew will supply you with one at a moderate price, and you will surely find it a blessing in the household. Oct. 17,-4t.

THERE are many among us suffering from derangement of the Liver and Bowels, Fever and Ague, Bilious Fevers and diseases arising from a torpid or imperfect action of the Liver. To all such we would recommend the use of "LIVER STIMULANT AND CATHARTIC," which is advertised in our column. It has been used with wonderful success in sections where these diseases prevail, and we feel confident it will prove a blessing to many a household. As a medicine to be kept in the family, to be used in place of pills, it has no equal.

It is for sale by all our druggists and dealers in medicine.—Nashua Telegraph

Durhams for Sale!

The undersigned offers at private sale of Fifteen thorough-bred Durham Bulls; twelve of which are calves, two yearlings, and one two year old. The sire of all is my Duke of Wabash county, and he was sired by Duncan's Duke of Airdre: his dam, Juan 7th. which Mr. Jeremiah Duncan, of Paris, Barton County, Ky., told me she was the best milker he ever owned, and had been breeding Durham for Forty Years. A full sister to my Duke Louan 19th was sold at Duncan's sale for $1,275. Several of Duncan's Louan's were purchased by McMillen, of Xen's O., and were re-sold at McMillen's great sale at the following prices. $475, $800, 3,000 $1,-750, $2,625, $1,650, the lowest priced ones being old ones, one being over 10 years. Some of my cows, the dams of stock offered, are Louans and Fashions bred by Mr. Duncan, of Ky. Some are of the Duchess milker family, which are excellent milkers.

I propose showing a sample of my stock at the Wabash and Huntington county fair and shall take pleasure in showing them to all who call on me at home, near Liberty Mills, Wabash county, Ind.

A Reminiscence of Piqua.

A correspondent, writing from Piqua, relates the following incident which happened here in 1812, the relator of which, Mr. W. S. Storms, is a decedent of one of the parties named:

General Harrison, then at St. Marys had called for recruits, and they were coming to him from every direction, in squads of from five to ten each. Thus a party of six stopped for breakfast in Piqua, at the only tavern here. After all had their breakfast, they called upon the landlord to know the amount of their bills; but the unusally large number of his guests had completely confused the man's powers for ready calculation, and a sheet of paper was necessarily brought into requisition, and their respective names were written down as they were called, and the amount of each individual's bill set opposite his name.

What is your name? beginning the questioning part.

Allen Trimble. And yours? John Winter. And yours? Daniel Storms. And yours? John C. Death. And now, Mister, you are the last one, and for God's sake give me an easy one. What is it?

Hell, said the remaining party.

Here, stranger, don't be making a fool of me. What is your name?

Hell, I tell you—Jacob Hell.

Well, if that be your names gentlemen, said the astounded landlord, it's just this with me: I never was known to Tremble any fight, and have fought many a Winter and weathered a dozen Storms, and suffered a great amount of Pain, bu I'll be d——d if Death and Hell together ain't just a little too much for me to tackle.

All of these men are well remembered by surviving pioneers, the first named having served as Governor of Ohio, while John John C.D[illegible] h is scarcely less familarly known.

A Hint for Bores.

Sometime ago there lived a gentleman of indolent habits in Sussex, who made a business in the winter season, of visiting his friends extensively. After wearing out his welcome in his own immediate vicinity last winter, he thought he would visit an old Quaker friend, some twenty miles distant, who had been a school fellow of his. On his arrival he was cordially received by the Quaker, he thinking his visitor had taking much pains to come so far to see him. He treated his friend with great attention and politeness for several days, and, as he did not see any signs of his leaving, he become uneasy, but he bore it with patience till the morning of the eight day, when he said to him:

"My friend, I am afraid thee will never visit me again."

"Oh, yes, I shall," said the visitor; "I have enjoyed my visit very much; I shall certainly come again."

"Nay," said the Quaker "I think thee will not visit me again."

"What makes you think I will not come again?" asked the visitor.

"If thee does never leave," said the Quaker, "how can't thee come again?"

VOLLMER'S Elixir of PYROPHOSPHATE OF IRON AND PERUVIAN BARK.

In this preparation are combined the valuable properties and virtues of Peruvian Bark, with Phosphorus and Iron, in the shape of Pyrophosphate of Iron. This Elixir will be found of great advantage in Dyspepsia, Indigestion, weak and delicate Stomachs, and generally in weak and delicate states of the system. The ingredients in this Elixir are skillfully blended into a delightful Cordial, making it the most agreeable and palatable combination to the taste, in use. ar. 30, '70.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

HOW TO GO WEST

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE MERRY HEART.

'Tis well to have a merry heart
However short we stay;
There's wisdom in a merry heart,
What'er the world may say.
Philosophy may lift its head,
And find out many a flaw;
But give me the Philosopher
That's happy with a straw!

If life brings us but happiness,
It brings us, we are told,
What's hard to buy, though rich ones try
With all their heaps of gold.
Then laugh away, let others say
Whate'er they will of mirth;
Who laughs the most, may truly boast
He's got the wealth of earth.

There's beauty in a merry heart,
A moral beauty too;
It shows the heart's an honest heart,
That's paid each man his due,
And lent a share of what's to spare,
Despite of wisdom's fears,
And made the cheek less sorrow speak,
The eye weep fewer tears.

The sun may shroud itself in cloud,
The tempest wrath begin,
It finds a spark to cheer the dark,
Its sunlight is within!
Then laugh away, let others say
Whate'er they will of mirth;
Who laughs the most may truly boast
He's got the wealth of earth.

The Eye Trade.

A French paper gives a detailed account of the manufacture of false eyes in Paris, from which the curious fact appears that the average sale per week for eyes intended for the human head amounts to 400:

One of the leading dealers in this article carries on the business in a saloon of great magnificence; his servant has but one eye, and the effect of any of the eyes wanted by customers is conveniently tried in this servant's head, so that the customer can judge very readily as to the appearance it will produce in his own eye. The change is about $16 per eye. For the poor there are second-hand visual organs which have been worn for a time and exchanged for new ones; they are sold at reduced prices, and large quantities are sent off to India and the Sandwich Islands.

How to Get Along.

Do not stop to tell stories in business hours.

If you have a place of business, be there when wanted

No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons.

Never "fool" in business matters.

Have order, system, regularity and promptness.

Do not meddle with a business you know nothing of.

Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities.

Do not kick every stone in the path.—More smiles can be made in one day by going steadily on than by stopping.

Pay as you go.

A man of honor respects his word as he does his bond.

Help others when you can, but never give what you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable.

Learn to say no. No necessity of snapping it out like dog-fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully.

Use your own brains rather than those of others.

Learn to think and act for yourself

Keep ahead of rather than behind the times.

Young men cut this out, and if there be folly in the argument, let us know.

A Verb 'To Break.'

I begin to understand your language better, said my French friend, Mr. Arcourt to me: but your verbs trouble me still, you mix them so with your prepositions.

I am sorry you find them troublesome, was all I could say.

I saw our friend Mrs. James just now, continued he. She says she intends to break down housekeeping.

Break up housekeeping, she must of have said.

O, yes, I remember. Break up housekeeping.

What for?

Because her health is so much broken into.

Broken down, you should say.

Broken down, O, yes. And indeed since the small-pox has broken up in your city—

Broken out.

She thinks she will leave it for a while at least.

Indeed! And will she close up her house?

No; she is afraid it will be broken—broken—How do I say that?

Broken into.

Yes, your right.

Is her son to be married soon?

No; that engagement is broken—broken—

Broken off.

Ah! I had not heard that. She is very sorry about it. Her son only broke the news down to her last week. Am I right? I am so anxious to speak the English well.

He merely broke the news; no preposition this time.

It is hard to understand. That young man, her son, is a fine fellow; a breaker, I think.

A broker, and a very fine fellow. Good day.

So much, thought I, for the verb to break.

The fear of ill concedes the ill we ca[illegible].

Pretty Good.

This story is told of a father who was one evening teaching his little boy to recite his Sunday school lesson. It was from the fourteenth chapter of Mathew, wherein is related the parable of a malicious individual who went about sowing the tares.

What is a tare? Tell me, my son, what a tare is, asked the anxious parent.

You had 'em.

Johnny, what do you mean? asked the father, opening his eyes rather wide.

Why, last week, when you didn't come home for three days, said Johnny, I heard mother tell Aunt Susan that you were on a tare.

Johnny was immediately sent off to his bed.

New Method.

A plan has been subbmitted to the French Academy for storing wheat in portable sheet-iron granaries, in which a vacum is maintained equal to at least from three to four inches of mercury, this being found sufficient to distroy all insect life (although a more perfect vacum is preferred) and to insure the evaporation of any moisture in the grain. The apparatus is of cylindrical form, placed verticially and with convex top and bottom.—The top is provided with an opening, through which the inlet of the grain is led with a valved pipe through which the air is exhausted, and with a gague by which the degree of exhaustation is indicated.—The grain is removed through an opening in the bottom. In an experiment where living insects were introduced in large quantities with the grain it was found that they were all killed before doing mischief, and at the end of six months the wheat was found to be in as fine a condition as at the outset.

Sound Logic.

During the progress of the present political campaign many would-be politicians, of the Radical persuasion, have prided themselves upon the unanswerability of the question, are Liberal Republicans Democrats, or are Democrats Liberal Republicans. We had the pleasure of hearing this question very forcibly and ludicrously answered by Mr. J. Y. Ballou at a political meeting in this county.

At the termination of Mr. B.'s speech, a sturdy son of toil stood and demanded an answer as to the question, in a voice that would have done credit to a drover, of the first order, adding in an interogative tone: —You vote with Democrats?

Yes.

Then ain't you Democrats; and, he continued, without giving Joe a chance to reply, Democrats vote with you.

Yes.

Then aint they Liberal Republicans, my friend.

Mr. B., said Joe, in a sarcastic tone, but with his customary seriousness of manner permit me to ask a question or two. You are a Republican?

Yes.

The niger votes with you?

Yes.

Then he is a Republican?

Certainly.

You vote with the nigger?

Yes.

Then aint you a nigger?

The reply of the amateur politician was drowned amid the laughter of the audience.—Ex.

A Good Story.

A good story is told of a parrot who had always lived on board of a ship, but who who escaped at some seaport, and took refuge in a church. Soon afterwards the congregation assembled, and the clergyman began preaching, saying that there was no virtue in them; that every one of them would be lost unless the speedily repented. Just as he uttered the sentence, up spoke the parrot from his hiding place—

All hands below!

To say that 'all hands' were startled would be but a mild way of putting it.—The peculiar voice, from its unknow source, had much more effect upon them than the parson's voice ever had. He waited a moment and then, a shade paler, he repeated the warning.

All hands below! again rang out from somewhere.

The preacher started from his pulpit and looked anxiously around, inquiring if anybody had spoken.

All hands below! was the only reply at which the panic-stricken congregation go up and a moment after, they had all bolted for the doors the preacher trying his bast to be first, and during the time the mischievous bird kept up his yelling

All hands below!

There was one old woman who was lame, and could not get out so fast as the rest, and in a very short time she was left alone. Just as she was about to hobble out the parrot flew down and alighted on her shoulder, yelled very loud in the woman's ear—

All hands below!

No, no, Mr. Devil, shrieked the woman, you can't mean me. I don't belong here. I go to the other church,

The following thrilling conversation between two English tourists at the Sherman House, Chicago, was accidently over heard by a Times reporter:

I say, Charley, what do you suppose I saw to-day?

I cawn't imagine.

By gad, I saw one of these Yankees eating potatoes with his fish.

Ah! And did he die?

A Green Countryman.

Years ago, into a wholesale grocery store in Boston, walked a tall, muscular-looking, raw-boned man, evidently a fresh comer from some back town in Maine or new hampshire. Accosting the first person he met, who happened to be the merchant himself, he asked:

You don't want to hire a man in your store, do you?

Well, said the merchant, I don't know, what can you do?

Do! said the man. I rather guess I can turn my hand to almost anything. What do you want me to do?

Well, if I was to hire a man, it would be one that could lift well, a strong wiry fellow—one for instance that could shoulder a sack of coffee, like that yonder, and carry it across the store and never lay it down.

There, now, captain, said our countryman, that's just me. What will you give a man that can suit you?

I tell you, said the merchant, if you will shoulder that sack of coffee and carry it across the store, and never lay it down, I will hire you for one year at a hundred dollars per month.

Done, said the stranger, and by this time every clerk in the store had gathered around and were waiting to join in the laugh against the man who, walking to the sack, threw it across his shoulder with perfect ease, as it was not extremely heavy, and walking with it twice across the store, went quietly up to a large hook which was fastened in the wall, and hanging the sack upon it, turned to the merchant and said:

There, now, it may hang there till doomsday, I shan't never lay it down—What shall I go about, master? Just give me a plenty to do and a hundred dollars per month and it's all right.

The clerks broke into a laugh, but it was on the other side of their mouths, for the merchant, discomfitted, yet satisfied, kept his agreement, and to day the green countryman is a senior partner in the firm and is worth a half a million of dollars today.

IN THE WRONG HOUSE.

Major John Parkinson was a good looking bachelor, who had lived forty-five years, but he had taken such good care of himself that he was really quite a young man.

He had gone to India, when only fifteen years old, and was now returning after thirty years' absence, the posesser of an ample fortune the most of which he had already sent to America for investment.

The Major did not like boarding-houses, and had therefore writen to his agent in New York, to purchase and have fited up for him a comfortable residence in a good neighborhood.

On a cold rainy, November evening the Ghundaree entered the harbour,—bringing the Major once more to his native land. He eagerly hastened to the office of his agent, for information regarding the location of his new home determined to pass the first night, of his arrival under his own roof.

On reaching the office of Mr. Smith his agent—he learned that he was absent, but the key had been left for him, accompanied with a note regretting that business in the country compelled the writer to relinquish the pleasure of personally greeting the Major on his arrival, but assure him that he would find his house in complete order, with servants to minister to his wants.

Though sorry that the agent had not been able to meet him personally, the Major made the best of it, and turned to the card attached to the key, for instructions as to the location of his residence, and saw writen thereon. "No—, Wakefield Street," but what number, unfortunately the card did not say. "However, muttered the Major 'I can't go very wrong, as it says between Hudson and Vandam streets. At the worst it is only trying the doors with the key until I come to the right one,"

And the Major strolled briskly through the rain, humming to himself "Home sweet home"

After much inquiry of policeman, and consulting directories at corner drug stores and cabalistic characters on street lamps our Major succeeded in finding Wakefield Street—a broad handsome street linked on each side, with substantial looking, brown stone houses.

"A very good neighborhood,' thought the Major approvingly, very good indeed. I don't object to this kind of thing at all Smith is certainly a capital judge of real estate. Now I wonder which of these houses belongs to me.

They were all painfully alike—all with handsome bay windows on the first floor, imposing flights of stone steps, and vestibules of white checked marble. The Major crept softly up the steps of one and applied his key under the silver plated knob.

It wouldn't fit. This certainly could not be the house, moreover he felt unpleasant, like a burglar as he sneaked down the steps again.

He tried the second door and then, the third. Both obstinately declined to yield to the general pursuasions of the key.

"This is begining to get awkward," thought the preturbed Major, wiping the beady drops from his brow. "Supposing I should be obliged to spend the night here trying to get in. Besides if I'm not careful I'll be arrested and spend my first night for thirty years in my native land in the station house. I'll try one more door, and if that doesn't prove to be the right one I'll go to the hotel."

He slipped the key in the key-hole, and it revolved noiselessly, and the door swung softly open, on its polished hinges.

"The right one at last as I live," chuckled the Major. 'That good-hearted rascall Smith, means to give me a surprise. I see through it all now;—but I don't intend to be surprised at any thing after this.

He looked around. The gas-lights were burning brightly through hall, dining room and parlors, the soft summer-like atmosphere of a furnace, dispelled all lingering ideas of cold or wet and there were groups of merry guests moving to and fro to the inspiring notes of a grand piano.

"Smith never told me a word of the place,' thought Major Parkinson; 'but it's a good idea—a capital idea. Called unexpectedly to the country eh? Ah he's a sly Smith.

He placed his dripping umberela in the stand, and deliberately hung up his hat and overcoat on the elegant black walnut hall-rack, and then he came and stood in the doorway, both hands joined serenely beneath his coat tails, and a beaming countenance, which showed all his white teeth to good advantage.

'Goodness gracious,' said a lady in black velvet, "who is that in the doorway.

"Aha," laughed Major Parkinson, complacently rubbing his hand. "You intended to surprise me but you didn't after all. My dear madam how do you do?

"Sir, I don't know who you are,'—said the lady in black velvet, rather grimly failing to recognize the Major's profered hand.

"Dear me, Aunt Rosa," chirped a younger lady—she certainly couldn't have been more than eighteen years old and was as fresh as a rosebud—sipping forward "don't you see its cousin John.'

The Major looked puzzled. But it would have been rude for him to back charlishly out, when such a pair of cherry lips were put up for him to kiss such a dimpled pair of arm were around his capacious waist.

"I never new that I had such a pretty cousin,' was the Majors internal reflection; but I dare say it's all right; Smith knows."

"And here's cousin George and Stephen, and Aunt Margaret and her girls," cried the cherry liped damsel, eagerly pulling him forward.

Major Parkinson shook hands with them all around, feeling that he had just come into a large unexpected inheritance of relations.

"I knew the Ghundaree would be in to-night.' cried one of the girls clapping her hands. 'We have been counting the days, cousin John."

"The Ghundaree! Then I'm all right after all,' thought the perplexed Major. I was begining to think there was some awkward mistake here, but the Ghundaree settled matters.'

"Oh, and here's mamma!' exclaimed irresistable cherry lips, dancing backward and forward, like a pretty little Darvish. "Grandma, he's come! I knew he would be here to-night! Come quick and speak to Grandma, cousin John."

And the Major was pulled along by the sleves of his coat towards the silver haired old lady, with a white lace cap, and a string of enormous gold beads around her shriveled throat.

"Well John, I do declare! who would have thought that the climate of India would have changed you? Why you used to be tall and slim like a bean pole; but I suppose it's huricanes and earthquakes, and all that sort of thing that has settled you down so short and stout.

Major Parkinson did not exactly know what to say to this, so he shook the old lady's hand saying:

"How do you find yourself this morning ma'am?'

"And you havent asked for Clara.—Poor Clara!" chimed the eighteen year old girl.

Oh, ah, pardon me," stammered out our hero, 'I was just going to inquire after Clara.'

The lass with the cherry lips beconed to a tall graceful girl in the bay window, not exactly young, but still passing pleasant to look upon, with large grey eyes and soft drooping curls of glossy brown.

"Clara,' she cried "hav'n't you a word of welcome for your cousin John?'

But the graceful girl shrank back. blushing and confused.

"No I won't." said the Major.

"She'll be all right presently,"

"I dare say she will," answered our hero.

"But it is such nonsence," went on the elf, whom the matron addressed as Gracie.

"Now Clara, you know who it is, when you are going to marry him in less than a week.'

"Oho!" this was begining to grow a little serious.

Married! In less than a week! He Major John Parkinson, who had lived a life of contented celibacy, for five-and forty years!

In spite of his resolution not to be surprised, the Major felt the sensation rapidly creeping over him, not only of surprise but a species of dismay.—Married! He blushes more than Clara's self.

Surely it was time for an explenation now; and he was just opening his lips when Gracie whirled him around standing on tip-toe to whisper knowingly in his ear.

"Don't you want to see the weding cake cousin John? and the wreath? and the veil?"

Without waiting for an answer, she tiptoces him off into another room. pulling him along by the coat tail.

It was very embarrassing to be sure. But then how pleasant it was. The veil was a heap of snowy lace, like a cloud of vapor; the wreath was all orange blossoms wove in with tiny green buds: but the cake. The cake was a miniture mountain of icing and frosted flowers, and cupids chisseled in sparkling white sugar clinging around the boquet of white flowers on its crest.

"Only think of it!' said Grace, a little thoughtfully, as she pulled an orange blossom into its place in the chaplet, to have the weding day so near at hand, after an engagement of fifteen years! Oh cousin John, you ought to be a happy man."

"I will explain,' thought the bewildered Major, breaking into a cold perspiration. "Yes' he begun aloud, "but I—"

'You'll show me the ring won't you?' coaxed Grace. "That's a darling! for of course you've got it in your vest pocket. And what have you got for Clara? An India shawl of course, and I hope it is very splendid, for there's nothing in the whole world, too good for Clara.'

"Grace,' said the Major confidently, taking her hand in his, "I want to tell you something. It's very awkward but it isn't realy my fault, and I'm sure you'll forgive me, when you know how entirely I have been the victim of circumstances.'

Grac's eyes grew big, her lips parted—what could it be?

"Well,' she said.

"I'm not cousin John at all said the Major with a jerk. 'It's a mistake! I'm Major Parkinson.'

"You—are—not—John Milward?"

'Not I, nothing of the sort,' said our Major visbly brightening up. But I know John Milward very well. Came over, with him in the Ghundaree—if he's your cousin John, you've got a fine gellow for a cousin."

And then Major Parkinson told Grace exactly how it happened. And she blushed and laughed, and wondered how they all could have been so stupid—and confessed that, "after all she did not think he was so much to blame."

"Except you hadn't ought to have kissed me back so hartily,' Grace added maliciously.

"I won't next time said the Major humbly.

'But fifteen years in India it would of course alter any one so compleatly," she said, but what can have become of the real John?"

She took him back to the parlor—where he made his excuses as fluently as he could. Grandma was a little inclined to be angry at first and Stephen—a muscular young man, muttered some half audible words about punching the Majors head for him. But fuller explanation restored a friendly feeling once more, and the 'pater' familias, sensible man, insisted on the major to remain.

'For, if you are not our cousin John, you came over in the same steamer with him, and that ought to insure you a welcome, he said cheerily!

This 'wooden' devil of ours has lost the balance of this story. He says, however, 'he thinks John came the next morning, and they were married, had lots of fun, etc.

Pat and the Pig.

A countryman having killed a pig, and not wishing to divide with his neighbors, as was the custom in that country, said to his man (who by the way, was a son of the Emerald Isle):

Pat, if I give the neighbors who have given to me a piece of my pork I'll have none left to myself. Can you tell me what I am to?

Be dad, sir, said Pat, it's myself that can do that.

Good, says the countryman, rubbing his hands and looking at Pat. Now tell me what I can do.

Faith, sir, said Pat, sure and when the craythur is cleaned, just be afther hanging it against the door where ivery mother's son of thim will see it, and early in the morning, before any one is about, get up an take in your pig, and hide it away. Thin, when your neighbors come, just be afther telling them the pig was stole last night.

Capital idea, Pat, exclaimed the countryman; I'll do it, by St. George!

So when the pig was cleaned, it was hung outside the door, so the neighbors might see it. The countryman anxiously awaited the approaching night, and at last retired to bed, but not to sleep. Pat, under cover of darkness of the night, crept round the house and stole the man's pig.

What was the astonisment of the countryman, when at early dawn he rose to hide away his pig, but found no pig there, can be better imagined than described.—In the midst of his bewilderment, Pat came in, and giving him a knowing wink, said:

Masther, how about the pig?

Well, Pat, the pig was stolen in reality.

Faith and that sounds just as natural as if you lost your pig.

But you blockhead, I tell you the pig was stolen.

Just stick to that, Masther, its as natural as life.

By George, that there pig was stolen.

Och! be jabers, says Pat, stick to it, and your neighbors will believe you, and a devil a bit of it they'll get. Faith I did't think ye could do so well.

The Courier.

AUBURN, IND., OCT. 31, 1872.

For President and Vice President.

FOR PRESIDENT,

HORACE GREELEY,

of New York.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

BENJAMIN GRATZ BROWN,

of Missouri.

Extra Session.

The Govenor has issued his proclamation convening in extra session the General Assembly of Indiana. The day fixed is November 13th, '72.

They report thirty odd thousand majority for Hartranft in Pennsylvania Such moderation deserves notice.—They might just as easily have made it sixty or seventy thousand. It would'nt have cost a cent more.

Princess Nelly the President's charming daughter, has torn herself away from the royal blandishments upon the other side of the water. She set foot on her native soil yesterday. She will be likely to find snobs and flunkeys enough around her to prevent the change from being oppressively sudden.

Queer.

It is queer to see a Democrat so wonderfully, not to say supiciously, pure that he cannot vote for the Nominees who received the unanimous vote of a regular Democratic, National Convention composed of Delegates clothed with authority by other Democracy of thirty-seven free sovereign, independent States! Especially so, when the stricken, bleeding, mangled and manacled South holds out her hand to him, imploring his aid to deliver her from Grant, her worst enemy,—Grant, the insatiable millitary Tyrant, who is destroying her by piece-meal.

He who is not for us, in this Campaign, is against us. There is no middle ground. The Democrat who stays from the polls, gives half a vote for Grant and lends him his influence besides.

"Boss" Tweed has finally got down off the fence and arrayed himself on the side of Grant. Tweed understands his business An indictment is hanging over him, which, had it ever came to a trial, would resulted in sending him to the penitentiary; but with all his bad record, Tweed still possesses much of former vast influence in New York city, and has agreed to give it to Grant, provided he is never brought to trial, which promise has been guaranteed him, and his tool "Jimmy" O'Brien, has received the Radical, or Grant nomination for Mayor. When jails and penitentiaries are defrauded as in Pennsylvania and New York, to carry Grant through, it is hard for honest people to contend with the supporters of the great renominationists.—Tweed ought to be rewarded with a place in Grant's cabinet, if he should be re-elected. He is just such a man as Grant likes to have around.

How we Progress.

The following table shows the progressive expenditure in keeping up the establishment of the President from the beginning of the century to the present year. The items included under each Administration are what has been appropriated for furniture, repairs, fuel, attendants, Presidential grounds and greenhouse, fences, stable and contingent expenses. It does not include, under any Administration all the appropriations for the President, secretaries or clerical service of any kind:

Administrations.	Expended on White House.
John Adams, 1797—1800	$ 14,000
Jefferson, 1801—1808	14,000
Madison, 1809—1816	43,000
Monroe, 1817—1824	24,250
J. Q. Adams, 1825—1828	30,000
Jackson, 1829—1836	71,100
Van Buren, 1837—1840	[illegible]
Harrison and Tyler, 1841—1844	18,629
Polk, 1845—1848	35,038
Taylor and Fillmore, 1849—1852	27,361
Pierce, 1853—1856	100,033
Buchanan, 1857—1860	94,300
Lincoln, 1861—1864	108,728
Johnson, 1865—1868	174,590
Grant, 1869—1872	323,931
Total	$1,140,376

It will be seen that this million of dollars, in round numbers, more than one-half, or $617,107, has been expended during the last eleven years.—There was a great outcry and some scandal during Mr. Lincoln's administration, at the necessity of appropriating a considerable sum beyond the estimates to make good a deficiency in the furnishing and repairs of the White House. And when Mr. Johnson came in there was another scandal hushed up at the time, but strongly animadverted upon by Mr. Thaddeus Stevens, who was Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, about the stripping of the White House after Mr. Lincoln's decease, by an unfaithful steward, or the pillaging of unwatched servants, or something of the kind. It was this that to the heavy appropriations for refurnishing of $30,000 in 1865, supplemented by $33,500 for furniture and repairs in 1866.

Mrs. Mary Maverty, of Stanton, has recovered $600 for her late husband, who was killed by a railroad accident.

It is estimated by the physicians of Louisville that there are not less than a thousand cases of small-pox in that city.

Hendrick's Majority

1,148!

M. D. Hopkins Elected

WE GAIN 8,000 IN OHIO!

Deleware Has Gone for Us!

Connecticut 5,000 Democratic!

Georgia Only 62,000 Democratic!

The results of the October elections may be thus summed up: We elect the above named gentleman and lose the balance of the State ticket and two Congressmen, Voorhees and Manson. In Ohio we reduce their majority from 20,000 to 10,000, on part of the ticket and to 15,000 on the balance, and gain three Congressmen. We lose Pennsylvania by 35,000, with a loss of several Congressmen. We acknowledge this to be an astonishing majority but when we take notice that ever the infamous registry law more votes were polled in the city of Philadelphia with her 750,000 people, than have ever been polled in the two cities of New York and Cincinnati, with 1,200 000 population, we are not affected by the result there. We have gained in North Carolina, Maine, Vermont and Ohio, and carried West Virgina, Connecticut, Delaware, Montana, Georgia and Indiana. We gain as many Congressmen as we lose, and make a clear gain of a United States Senator in Carolina. We have much to encourage, little to discourage, us. We are going to vote in November to wit:—We have 128 electoral votes in the South to start on, and if we carry New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, California, and Indiana we are safe and some to spare.

The Last Appeal!

Democrats and Liberals Read!

WHICH WILL YOU HAVE?

President Grant has proved himself unworthy to retain power by his deliberate choice of the Camerons, Harlans, Pomeroys and other corrupt men, as his advisors; by the extravagance of his administration; by his bungling diplomacy in regard to the Treaty of Washington; by his suffrances of enormous frauds, such as the Secor claim, the Chorpening claim, and the systematic stealing, which obliged the Civil Service Commission composed wholly of Grant men to report: "It is calculated that one fourth of the revenue of the United States is annually lost, in the collection; by his repeated violation of the laws, the most conspicuous examples of which are the San Domingo affair and the French arms sales; and by his steady support of the carpet-baggers, who have increased the debt of the nine carpet-bag States, by over $200,000,00, and made their politics sinkholes of corruption. This is a grave indictment yet many more specifications might be added. Horace Greeley is the only opposing candidate that can be elected, despite all other tickets; The people know that either Grant or Greeley will be our next President. Since then, the philosopher of Chappaqua is the only man who can put an end to the present regime, the people should give him a chance to do so. Secondly, Horace Greeley is one of the people. He understands their needs. He is not a soldier, but a great civilian, with a civilian's love for law. He will not turn the White House into a military head-quarters nor surround himself with military secretaries and retainers. He will shrink from Grant's deliberate violation of law, and will give us what we have not had for the last three years—constitutional government. Thirdly, Mr. Greeley is especially fited for the Presidency, by his remarkable mental powers, which will make his messages ring with strikeing suggestions, by his very wide acquaintenceship which will allow him to appoint men whom he knows, by personal knowledge, to be fit for their places; and by his great executive talents, which have made the "New York Tribune" such a power in the land. Fourthly, Mr. Greeley's election will insure many reforms. Since Grant is pledged by his platform, to enforce the policy of protection, or the legalized robbery of the people by monopolists, and Greeley is pledged to leave the question wholly to Congress. The revenue reformers will only have to get a majority in Congress, if the latter is elected, in order to win our right to buy and sell where we choose, without impertinent interfering. Again by his election, the one-term principle will be established. Thereafter no President will be tempted to use the 85,000 offices he controls in order to secure his own re-election. This will remove the greatest hindrance to the genuine Civil Service Reform and will practically insure its accomplishments. Horace Greeley's election will be the signal for that heartfelt reconciliation without which the union which we fought to save is an impossibilety. The South has suffered five years of defeat three of chaos, four of oppression and robbery. This should state our thirst for revenge. It is to the interest of both sections that gapping wounds should be healed. To effect this—to bring around the Union as it was under the constitution that it is,—the people propose to elect the great American who struck the key-note of the campaign of 1872 by saying: "I accept your nomination in the confident trust that that the masses of countrymen, North and South, are ready to clasp hands across the bloody chasm that has to long divided them, forgetting that they have been enemy's in the joyful conciousness that they are and must henceforth and forever remain friends."

"He is radically unfit for the Presidential office, being essentially military in nature, without experience in civil life, without aptitude for civil duties and without knowledge of republican constitutions."

Mr. GROSVENOR—

I charge that "Grant is a bad and dangerous man, said a great New York merchant the other day. Then why don't you oppose him openly? 'Because if I did those scoundrels in the custom house would ruin me in less than a year.' he replied. Tell me fellow-citizens how long shall we call this a free country?

LYMAN TRUMBULL—

I charge that "corruption and extravagance greater than any one subject, pervade all the departments of the government.

"Hundreds of millions of property have been sold and spent in addition to all appropriations of which Congress knows but little, and the country less—an honest expose of the books of the department would astonish the world.

JAMES B. BECK—

"If this system of encroachment is premited to go on, the day is not distant when our republican system based on the idea of a division of power, will be transformed into an imperialism with all the power at the city of Washington."

JOHN H. KEATLEY—Chairman Liberal Republican State Central Committee of Iowa.

I charge that he called to his Cabinet men who were wholly in inexperienced in public affairs—men who owed their high stations to the personal attachments of the President and not to reasons of State. He dismissed them through caprice, and suplied their places with men of ordinary capacity, and inexperience, to whom were intrusted the affairs of a great nation.

He demanded from congress, the renewal of the bayonet law, by which in time of profound peace, he could by his own will, in any State, suspend the sacred writ of habeas corpus.

He has unlawfully interfered with the domestic affairs of respective States by sending his entire Cabinet from their official posts of duty to control State elections, and to intimidate the people or to corrupt them by money surreptitiously taken from the Public Treasury.

He has suffered American citizens to languish in foreign prisons, and permitted the confiscation of their property, without an earnest protest against the outrage.

He has given his influence to schemes by which hundreds of millions of acres of public lands have passed into the hands of gigantic and oppressive corporations.

FREEMEN! UP AND AT THEM!

THE WHOLE COUNTRY!

Greeley's adjutant-general the eloquent Augustus Schell chairman of the National Democratic Executive Committee, issues this address.—

To the people of the United States—The October elections are over. They enable us to form a tolerable accurate idea of the true political situation of the country. In Georgia we have to recount a victory to the Liberal ticket so unexampled as to take her out of the list of doubtful States, and practically to pronounce in advance, the decision of at least 125 votes in the electoral college. To this number it is only necessary to add 60 votes to elect Greeley and Browne. In Pennsylvania the distinguished chairman of the Liberal Committee has eloquently characterized the method by which the result of the election there was accomplished. We commend his statement to the thoughtful attention of the country. In Ohio, despite most unprecedented gains for the Liberal Democratic ticket, the Grant managers have carried the elections by a reduced majority, having brought to the polls their entire reserved vote. Had our democratic friends in certain localities of that great commonwealth shown the same earnestness and activity, and enable us like our enemies to record our entire strength, they would now be exulting over a brilient victory. In Indiana the Democratic and Liberal forces have achieved a most important success on the Pennsylvania tactics, most unscrupulously employed by the Administration and its allies, showing thus that a free people when aroused know their rights, and dare to maintain them. Indiana has fully demonstrated that she can neither be bought nor bullied. The moral of these results, is that victory is still in plain view for our national ticket and that energy and courage will assure it. The event in Pennsylvania on Tuesday last, when considered in its causes, is the most appaling political catastrephe than has ever taken place in this country. Should the system through which this catastrephe was brought about be condored by the people, and foisted on the other States it would seal the doom of freedom in America, a sad contrast it is surely, that the city in which our Republic was born, amid the anthems of a free people, should now be the first to toll the knell of its liberties. It is for the free unbought people of all the States to calmly review the fearful crime against suffrage in Pennsylvania, and to decide whether it shall be repeated within their own borders. For the first time, the system of free government, and sanctity of the ballot are really on trial in the United States. From this hour forward, the preservation of the franchise in its integrity dwarfs all other issues. Let our friends in each of the States, catch inspiration from the heroic conduct of our fellow-citizens in Georgia and in Indiana, from now until November let their work be manful and unceasing for liberty and an untainted ballot-box, for reform and an honest administration of the government.

The Horse Disease.

BOSTON, Oct 24.—The horse malady has invalided thousands of horses in the city, and neighboring towns and cities. It apears to be spreading through New England. Dispatches from Portland announce the distemper in that city.

BUFFALO Oct. 24.—The horse disease has passed its crisis here, and is now abating. But few horses have died, and these, more from hard usage than from effect of the disease. The canal horses here have almost entirely escaped.

New-York, Oct. 24.—Business manufactures, and industry are partially paralyzed in this city and Brooklyn, in consequence of the sudden deprival of large numbers of horses. In Brooklyn it is said the horse cars have stopped running. The desease has made the most alarming progress among railroad stage, and livery stable horses, and while these were suffering at the rate of 70 per cent, coach and truck horses were better cared for and not so hard-worked only suffered at the rate of 45 per cent. The street railroads have suspended trips. Only about one fourth the usual amount of teams are seen on the streets, and almost every horse is closely wrapped in woolen blankets. It is probable that the mail service will be seriously affected. It requires 200 horses daily, and unless the severity of the epidemic be mitigated, the supply cannot be kept up. The horse disease made its appearance on the Stock Exchange to-day, and Wall street operators are begining to calculate what the effects of the equine epidemic would be, if it should continue a few days longer. The lack of horses to move freight to and from the depots would cause a terrible interruption of all the railroad business.—The business of the express companies is almost prostrated, and great quantities of freight is laying in the warehouses, waiting shipment.

Benjamin Malcolm, of Jefferson Co., fell from the top of a tree sixty feet high and was not killed.

A circular from President Tuttle, of Wabash College, states that the Institution is in a better condition than ever before.

A well informed correspondent of the New York Tribune writing from Indianapolis says that $200,000 were invested by the Radical party to elect Tom Browne. This sum was expended in close and doubtful districts chiefly. Between 8,000 and 10,000 were expended in this county. What Democrat will not support Greeley when they know that the Grant party is using the United States Treasury to keep itself and its adherents in power and in place.

Don't give up the good ship Ohio because the pirates have captured Pennsylvania. Every man to his post! Stand by the guns! Victory is surely ours.

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA

VINEGAR BITTERS

Vinegar Bitters are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual on the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS twice a week.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are the best safe-guard in cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their Sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef-steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Go to Humes' if you want a good pair of boots.

The Odd Fellows' Hall goes up slow but sure. This week will doubtless see the second story finished.

Ladies' fine gaiters and children and Misses shoes in great abundance at Humes' Go and see the new stock.

The trotting race between Greenwood and Tom Hunter, at the fair grounds, last Saturday afternoon, resulted in favor of the latter. Time, 2:52, 2:52, 2:45. The attendance was quite large.

The horse disease does not prevent W. W. Humes from offering great bargains in Boots & Shoes. A large stock can now be seen at his establishment cheaper than the cheapest.

Just Arrived.—A large assortment of Boots & Shoes has just been received by W. W. Humes.

The Horse Disease.—This epidemic has made its appearance in our place. Clerk Lanning's horse showed symptons the other day, and has been discharging at the nose and eyes. It will doubtless extend throughout the entire country.

Prof. Fasen, the new cutter engaged by Mr. Lauferty, gave us a call yesterday. He is certainly skilled in his profession and is highly spoken of in Fort Wayne where he has been engaged for some time. If you want a good suit made to order, he can do it.

J. R. Keys, is now making things lively in the brick work of the new Hall He is a master hand and can make a combination of brick and mortar that is really pretty to look at. J. R. means business and has practical experience and thoroughly understands his profession.

Stolen.—We are informed by Mrs. Mott that some sneak thief entered the cellar under her new house, several days ago, and took therefrom a case of Port Wine sent as a present to her from a son in California. A reward of five dollars will be paid for the arrest and conviction of the thief or thieves.

G. W. Gordon, Esq., who is now seriously ill, desires us to say that in his absence from gallery no one need conclude that pictures cannot be had, as he has a good artist engaged to attend to all calls in this line. Photographs, Ambrotypes, etc. can still be had at his very low prices.—Go and see.

The S. S. Concert, last Sunday evening, was largely attended. Our citizens are not very good to attend the Sunday school proper, but when the word "concert" is added, look out for a big jam.—We suggest an admission of ten cents be charged to defray church expenses.

A man by the name of Strauser, living near Avilla, and formerly of Butler Center accidently shot himself last Saturday morning. He was in the act of handing a gun from the second-story to some one below when the trigger caught on the floor, discharging the contents into his side, from which he died in a short time.

House Burned.—We learn that the residence of Dr. D. A. Sebring, at Sedan was burned to the ground with all its contents last Monday morning at about 4 o'clock. The Doctor and family were absent at the time, having left the Saturday previous and it was clearly the work of an incendiary.

Miss. Laura Keene will appear at Colerick's Opera House, Fort Wayne, Thursday evening, Oct. 31st, in a series of costume recitals and illustrated poems, assisted by several other stars, and tragedy, comedy and music will be attractively introduced Reserved seats for sale at Stockbridge's book store, Columbia-st.

House Robbed.—On Thursday last, while the family of Esquire Wolf, living near this place, were attending the fair, their dwelling house was entered by robbers, who took away with them about $20 in [illegible] and a considerable amount of clothing An entrance was effected by breaking through a window in the rear of the building.—Press.

Laura Keene.

"This eminent artiste and a full comedy company will commence an engagement at the Opera House, in this city, on the evening of the 31st of this month, to last one week. Miss Keene is one of the greatest in her line, and she will be ably supported. The Opera House is now under the able management of J. W. Stockbridge, who is deserving of great credit for the interest he has taken to furnish our people with first-class dramatic amusements.—Ft Wayne Sentinel.

THE BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAIL ROAD

Another impetus has been given to this enterprise in our vicinity by the arrival of Mr. Hampshire, Right-of-way agent for Company. A meeting was held at the Court House last Thursday morning for the purpose of determining upon some action in the premises. Mr. Hampshire addressed the meeting stating that he was empowered by the company to secure the right-of-way on the line which has been adopted by the Company, known as the Southern line.

There is some dissatisfaction in regard to its location on this line, and some of our citizens at first felt like remaining masterly inactive, believing that there was still a chance of its being built upon the Northern line. But it is now generally conceded that no change will be made in the location. A Committee of five was appointed to act with Mr. Hampshire in securing the right-of-way. Part of the line has been gone over, and the report therefrom is more favorable than was expected.

After due deliberation we cannot see but that our interest lies in giving the enterprise all the encouragement we can.—By crossing of the junction it will have a tendency to build up the space between our town and that point, but it can never change the business centre from where it is now established. If we do all we can for the road, we will increase our chances for the location of the division shops at this place, and if we are disposed to be indifferent about the matter, the road will be built without our aid and we may then expect no favors. Let us take hold of the matter then with a will and reap the greatest practical results we can under the circumstances.

MUSICAL.

A musical Convention will be held by Prof Straub, of Lansing, at Waterloo, commencing Tuesday, Nov. 12, 1872, and continuing twelve days, four days in each week, three lessons per day. Attendance throughout Convention, two dollars per scholar. He will give private lessons in voice culture, Instrumental and Thorough Bass.

Auburn School.

The Auburn School closes this week, after an unusually, prosperous and useful term. There has been a large attendance in all the rooms and the teachers have been faithful in doing their duty, and well worthy of the patronage given them.

Young people from abroad have flocked in which added much to the prosperity of the school.

The closing exercises of the school will be given at the M. E. Church, next Friday evening.

The winter term will commence after a brief interval, with the same teachers engaged.

Queensware is going fast at Smith & Hare's. Come in soon.

Splendid.—A fifty pound sack of flour arrived from Waterloo, the other morning addressed to us, and upon inspection our better half pronounced it a very fine grade of flour, well worthy the first premiums at the fair the other week. There was nothing to indicate where it was manufactured, but there was no occasion to be in doubt very long as to who the donors were, for the excellent quality of the flour coupled with the energy and enterprise of those popular gentlemen, Messrs. Best & McClellan, of the Steam mill, at that place, stamp them as the guilty parties. Gentlemen, we owe you one.

Come in and see our stock of Queens ware. Smith & Hare.

The meeting at the Court House, on Monday evening, on the occasion of Col. Milligan's speech, was largely attended.—There were many people present from the north and south parts of the county, and all were anxious to learn how so ult a Democrat as Milligan can support so radical a Republican as Greeley for President The address was able, logical and effective If any Democrat present had any doubts as to their course in this crisis they had them dispelled, and there were none who did not agree with the speaker that it was the plain duty of all to give Greeley a warm support.—Huntington Democrat.

Smith & Hare are selling Queensware at wholesale prices.

Another gun from a juvenile. Oxen is a very slow animal, they are good to break ground up. I would rather have horses if they didn't have kolick, which they say is wind collected in a bunch, which makes it dangerous to keep horses than an ox. If there was no horses the people would have to wheel there wood on a wheelbarrow. I have herd some say that if they had to be tother or an ox they would be a cow. But I think when it cum to have their tits pulled on a cold morning they would wish they wasn't for oxen don't generally have to raise calves. If I had to be any I would rather be a heffer, but if I had to be any I and coodent be a heffer and had to be both, I would be an ox."

The following genius we read about did'nt evidently feel christian-like over his mother-in-law—hence his name; but read:

He stood on his head on the wild seashore, and joy was the cause of the act; for he felt as he felt as he never had felt before—insanely glad, in fact. And why? In that vessel that left the bay his mother in-law had sailed to a tropical country far away, where tigers and snakes prevailed. And more than one of his creditors, too—these objects of his constant dread—had taken berths in the ship Curlew, whose sails were so blithely spread. Oh now he might look for a quiet life, which he never had known as yet ('tis true that he still possessed a wife, and was not quite out of debt). But he watched the vessel, this singular chap, o'er the waves, as she upped and downed; and he felt as if 'the edifice was crowned.' Till over the blue horizon's edge she disappeared from view; then up he leaped on a chalky ledge, and danced like a kangaroo! And many and many a joyous lay he pleaded o'er the sunset sea, till down with a fizz sank the orb of day, and—then he went home to tea.

Upon each Male Dog owned, kept or harbored within the county,	$1.00
Upon each Female Dog " " "	2.00
Upon each Dog, more than one, owned, kept or harbored within the county,	2.00

Notice is hereby given that I will attend at my office in Auburn, from the 15th of October until the third Monday in April, 1873, for the purpose of collecting the above Taxes.

On all taxes remaining unpaid on the third Monday of April, 1873, the law requires ten per cent. penalty, and six per cent. interest, besides cost of collection to be added. Each tax-payer will, therefore, find it to his or her advantage to call and pay their taxes before they become delinquent, as by so doing they will save themselves the penalty and costs, and me an unpleasant duty.

On the 15th of December I am required by law to advertise real estate for sale for all unpaid delinquincies for 1871, and former years, and all persons interested are requested to call and pay their delinquent tax before that date, and save expenses.

Tax-payers will please remember the Third Monday in April is the extent of time that can be given for receiving taxes without the penalty, as my settlement must be completed at a time fixed by law, and cannot be delayed a single day.

Something for the Ladies.—We want none but the ladies to read this item, because its private. We want to tell them that instead of looking forward with gloom and dispair, they can now anticipate with joy the coming of the wash-day, because Tyler's steam washer does away with the hard work and makes wash-day pleasant. Our friends all around us have tried it and they say they would not do without it. Mrs. Askew will supply you with one at a moderate price, and you will surely find it a blessing in the household. Oct. 17,-4t.

There are many among us suffering from derangement of the Liver and Bowels, Fever and Ague, Billious Fevers and diseases arising from a torpid or imperfect action of the Liver. To all such we would recommend the use of "Liver Stimulant and Cathartic," which is advertised in our columns. It has been used with wonderful success in sections where these diseases prevail, and we feel confident it will prove a blessing to many a household. As a medicine to be kept in the family, to be used in place of pills, it has no equal.

It is for sale by all our druggists and dealers in medicine.—Nashua Telegraph

Pumpkin time has come again. There is an abundance of this delicious fruit in the market this year, and the city hash factories are enabled to present the hungry with New England's greatest boast—pumkin pies.

DEATHS.

DILLS—On Sunday, Oct. 20, 1872, in Toledo, Spencer Dills, M. D. aged 23 years 5 months and 16 days.

Doctor Dills was born in Warren Co., Ind. He was a graduate of Ollerbian O. College, and also of the medical department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, were he studied medicine under Dr. Cheever He was also school examiner of this county and was recognized as a successful and popular teacher wherever he assumed the duties of that calling He leaves a breaved wife, formerly Miss Maggie Seawright, of Auburn, and a child about nine months old. He died as a good, true and consistent christain can die without the fear of the sting of death. May God in his tender mercies, protect the afflicted widow, and shield the tender lamb from the chilly blasts of this cold and uncharitable world.

MAXWELL—On Monday morning, Oct. 21st, of typhoid fever, Hanna C., wife of G. W. Maxwell, of Butler, Ind., about 41 years of age.

There's a beautiful face in the silent air,
Which follows me ever and near,
With her smiling eyes always near,
With voiceless lips, yet with the breath of prayer,
That I feel, but cannot hear.

But now that form so chilly and cold,
Lies low in a marble sleep,
I stretch my arms for the clasp of old,
But the empty air I strangely fold,
And my vigil alone I keep.

There's a sinless brow with a radiant crown,
And a cross laid down in the dust.
There's a smile where never a shade comes now
Tears no more from those dears eyes flow
So sweet in their innocent trust.

Ah, well! the summer is coming again,
Singing her same old song;
But, oh! it sounds like a sob of pain,
As it floats in the sunshine and the rain,
O'er hearts of the world's great throng.

There's a beautiful region above the skies,
And I long to reach its shore,
For I know I shall find my treasure there,
The loving heart and gladsomeness
Of the loved one gone before.

Agents Wanted

For the livest and most agreeable and fast selling book of the year,

Buffalo Land!

By Hon. W. E. Webb, of Topeka, Kansas. The wealth and wildness, mysteries and marvels, of the boundless West, fully and truthfully described. A complete guide for sportsmen and emigrants. Profusely and splendidly illustrated. Immensely popular and selling beyond precedent. Send for illustrated circular, terms etc., at once, to Hannaford & Co., [illegible] Street, Chicago, Ills. [illegible]

ARE YOU GOING WEST?

If so take our advice, and purchase your tickets over the old reliable Missouri Pacific Railroad, which is positively the only line that runs three daily express trains from St. Louis to Kansas City, and is the only line which runs Pullman's Palace Sleepers and fine Day Coaches, especially for our own use, equipped with Millers Safety Platform and the patent steam brake, from St. Louis to Kansas City, Fort Scott, etc., without change. For information in regard to time tables, rates, etc., at any point, call upon or address I. G. WHEELER, Agent, Missouri Pacific R. R. 79 Lloyd St. Buffalo, N. Y., or E. A. FORD, Gen'l Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. No trouble to answer questions.

Examiner's Notice.

Examinations will be held regularly from August 15, 1870, as follows:

AT WATERLOO,

In the High School Building, on the LAST SATURDAY of each month throughout the year.

AT AUBURN,

The FIRST SATURDAY of September, October, November, March, April, and May. Examinations to commence at 10 o'clock a.m. Teachers must come prepared for examination in all the branches required by law, as no special license will be given. Satisfactory evidence of good moral character required in all cases. Trustees should not allow Teachers to commence their schools without license.

JAMES A. BARNS, Ex'r.

Stanley and an Omaha Actress.

From the Omaha Dispatch.

While the bewitching little actress, Annie Ward, was at the height of popular favor with the Omaha theatre-goers, Stanley arrived. He became so enamored of the the light-haired vixen that he offered a certain lawyer a fifty dollar note if he would intercede in his behalf and induce Miss Ward to become Mrs. Stanley. The lawyer declined, but nothing daunted, Stanley pressed his suit. It is necessary to say that Stanley had rivals, for it is well known that half the young men in Omaha were crazy about Annie Ward. And what dupes she did make of them! To buy expensive bouquets they would disappoint their landlady Saturday nights, and send their tailor's children to bed supperless. Well, Mr Stanley failed. Annie refused him.—She might have gone further and fared worse. But she did'nt know then that the dapper little chap was destined to make for himself a name and fame that no other newspaper correspondent should posess.

Can a Dog Reason.

A tradesman in Lawrence, Mass., owner of a dog and cat, has been in the habit of letting the dog go to market and buy his own meat. The dog would bring the meat home and deposit it somewhere in the store, and when feeling the gnawings of hunger would go and get it. The cat acquired a habit of stealing its meat, and the dog would lie down near it, watch for the thief, and when the cat came, would drive her away. But at last he became tired of this business, carried the meat down cellar and covered it up in the sand.

One day the owner of the dog thought he would get the meat, bring it up stairs, and see what the dog would do. After taking a nap, the dog went down cellar in search of his meat, and commenced digging, as usual, but there was no meat to be found. He laid himself down a minute, as if in thought. and then rushed up stairs and espying the cat, 'went for her,' and chased her all around the store, as closely as a police officer in pursuit of a thief.

What Kind of Food to Eat.

Innutrient solid material, as well as elements of nourishment, are essential in food. Neither cattle nor horses could be kept alive long on fine flour, meal, or grain of any kind. Mixed, however, with grass, dry hay, or straw, they thrive. The walls of the stomach and bowels must be kept apart by solid material, on which friction may be exerted, in order to have perfect digestion. A dog lived twenty-one days the only survivor of a wrecked vessel at sea, closely shut up in the cabin, by eating the thick, strong wood and leather binding of a Bible, while experiments with dogs fed on soft food, as thin soups, etc., proved that could not live a single week on such diet.—Those persons who diet is rather coarse, as bread of unbolted flour, large fruit-eaters. bread and milk people in the country, etc., are exempt from the pains of dyspepsia. Those sustained mainly on very fine, concentrated, delicate food, washed down with tea, are gaunt in form, weak in muscle and always taking medicine. Their food should have more bulk and solid, hard ingredients. A poor man's family never lack for an appetite with a crust of brown-bread. His neighbors' children, surfeited on rich cakes, highly seasoned dishes and natured in luxury, are the life of doctors and druggists, says science.

Stewed or Fried.

Dick G., was incorrigible. He was a bummer, and no discipline could make him anything else.

At a time when the soldiers considered it wrong to steal a chicken Dick confiscated them with a flourish. He would do this with impunity, although he was frequently punished for leaving the ranks. On one occasion he entered a yard ostenaibly, to get some water. While at the well he hissed the farmer's dog on the chickens. As the mistress of the house came to the door, Dick, in pursuit of the dog and chicken, was close upon a fine foul.—It fluttered toward the door, and the woman caught it. Dick reached out his hands and taking it from her, said cooly, with a bow,

Thank you, thank you.

The colonel thundered out, 'Take that chicken back, sir,

She gave it to me, sir—said I was welcome to take it—ask her if she didn't, and the poor bewildered woman could not say no.

The next day Dick was notified that if he fell out of ranks he would be punish at night sure. He kept up untill noon. Then, giving one of the boys his gun, he slipped out for a moment, but he did not come back, and the captain was furious.

At three o'clock a carriage driven by a stylish negro, passed the regiment at race-course speed. Dick reclined gracefully on the back seat, and as he passed, lifted his hat and made a most elaborate bow to the captain and company.

When the regiment went into quarters for the night, they found Dick with fire made, and chicken, potatoes, etc., cooking.

The captain sent for him and orderdered him tied hand and foot. Dick came limping up, dressed chichen in hand.

I'm sorry, Captain, doggoned if I ain't. I could't catch up, and so rather than disobey your orders, I hired a darkey to bring me on, and here I am in good time. I thought you'd be hungry, and I made a fire. I have this chicken, its very fat, ready to cook.—Will you have it stewed or fried, Captain?

Hang the chicken! I was talking about you, roared the Captain. After all my cautions and threats you dropped out.

But lardy, Cap., I was into camp afore you was, responded Dick. Will you have the chicken stewed or fried, Cap? and Dick showed the Captain how nice it was.

The officer glared at him a moment and then snapped out, Fried, curse it!" And Dick served the chichen in triumph, and escaped all punishment, as usual.

VOLLMER'S Elixir of PYROPHOSPHATE OF IRON AND PERUVIAN BARK.
In this preparation are combined the valuable properties and virtues of Peruvian Bark, with Phosphorus and Iron, in the shape of Pyrophosphate of Iron. This Elixir will be found of great advantage in Dyspepsia, Indigestion, weak and delicate Stomachs, and generally in weak and delicate states of the system.
The ingredients in this Elixir are skillfully blended into a delightful Cordial, making it the most agreeable and palatable combination to the taste, in use.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.
This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.
It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.
To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.
In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

WARM MEALS AT HOURS.

A Colored Epicure who Licks Red-hot Pokers, Swallows Boiling Oil, and Pours Molten Lead into his Mouth

San Francisco Chronicle.

Yesterday afternoon the reporters of the city press and about a dozen less prominent citizens were invited to participate in a private luncheon party given be 'Delhi, the African Fire King,' under the auspices of the manager of Woodward's Gardens. The collation took place at Desaway Hall.

About half-past one o'clock the guests were all assembled in the large hall, when a short, thick-set negro entered the room followed by two other sombre-hued myrmidons, one of whom carried a small oblong furnace, and the other a sack of charcoal and a variety of iron bars, rods, etc. The first was his majesty, King Delhi; the others his chefs de cuisine.

The furnace was placed on the floor in the center of the hall, and soon a fierce fire was in full blast. Four flat bars of iron, in size and shape very much like ordinary lath, were slipped through the bars of the furnace, so that the ends protruded from each side, which the center of each was surrounded by the live coals, and soon became red hot. A small fire shovel and some iron rods were also placed among the coals to warm up.

While the 'pot was a bilin'' the chief performer retired to one of the undressing rooms. 'He's jes gone in dar to shuck hissef,' remarked the chief cook in answer to one of the inquisitive reporters—a funny fellow.

What is he going to do with those hot irons? asked the reporter.

He's gwine to rub them over his face an' hands, and his feet

Hump, remarked the funny reporter; the whole thing will be apt to result in a fizzle, if that's the case.

The darkey didn't appear to see the point but continued his interesting disclosure.

He's born in Abyssinia, dis man was—used to know King Theodorus fust-rate.

Reporter—Indeed! Well, do you suppose he has seen Livingstone, or Stanley, or George Roberts, or any of those other explorers?

Chief Cook—Dunno, sah—dunno nuffin 'bout dat.

Further conversation was interrupted by the entrance of the Fire King in full African costume—to-wit:

A blue flannel undershirt and drawers, bespangled with several stars of our Union forever. The shirt was rather short waisted in the sleeves, and so were the drawers. His big black arms were bare from the biceps down, and below the knee his sable shanks were visible in all their primitive beauty. His feet—ah! here the pen must pause—for it can not do justice to those sublime feet. They looked like a pair of twin alligators, and the great national characteristic heels were the finest specimens that have yet appeared on these shores. They protruded astern to an unusual extent—so much so that if the 'subject' were standing erect and a guillotine blade dropped vertically from the back of the head, it would amputate about three inches of heel from each limb, if not prevented by intermediate obstructions

(N. B.) This calculation was made without the aid of a theodolite—without the aid of any light in fact, beyond that furnished by the charcoal fire.

After a few preliminary assurances that there was no deception about this performance, etc., the visitors were allowed to inspect the fire-proof African. The soles of his feet, his arms, shins—very fine shi nes; and the calves of his legs were examined by all who felt a sufficient interest to avail themselves of his offer. Then he advanced to the furnace, and taking out the shovel, began the first course.

The blade of the shovel was fairly red-hot, yet this cloudy salamander deliberately rubbed it over his hands, arms and legs without evincing any sign of pain whatever. The hot iron which would have burned its way through an inch board in a very short time, seemed to have no effect upon the man's skin. There was a light blue smoke emitted during the contact of iron and hide, but no scar or blister was left behind. The only inconvenience about the whole affair was manifested by those of the spectators who happened to be on the leeward side of the man, and to whose nostrils was wafted the delicate aroma. It smelt worse than Yorick's skull, when Hamlet, in his pitiful mood, made use of that ghastly relic for a nosegay, and evolved his brilliant fancy about stopping the bungholes of beer barrels with the dust of dead emperors. It more nearly resembled the odor of a horse's hoof when singed by the blacksmith's iron than any other perfume that is known to science. It was a very pervading stench.

The next illustration of the Fire King's in combustibility (copyright secured), was given with the iron bars, or slats. Each of these bars were red hot in the centre, and Delhi took them one at a time in his hand, laid one end on the floor, and then, placing his naked right foot on the hissing hot iron, bent it to an angle of forty-five degrees. Then turning the iron over he placed his left foot in the center and straightened it.

A small iron poker about a quarter of an inch in diameter, was next taken from the fiery furnace, and, opening his mouth the Fire King inserted the rod some five inches therein and closed his lips on the seething iron. After holding it in this position for a few moments, he drew it out, and remarked that this was one of the most difficult of all his performances, and that very frequently it rendered him quite hoarse—scarcely able to speak audibly.

The attendants next lifted from the the coals a section of gaspipe, about one inch in diameter and eight inches in length. By way of varying the entertainment, Delhi rolled this over the floor with his bare feet—sending forth the familiar old horse-hoof perfume again in generous profuseness, and causing a young lady who witnessed the feat and sniffed to retire in disorder. The Chronicle reporter meanwhile held his nose and gazed on in speechless admiration.

The spectators were next edified by an exhibition of Delhi's skill as a ball-tosser. A small globe of iron, similar in appearance to an ordinary base-ball, was pried out of its plutonic resting place among the coals. It was not exactly red-hot, but it was warm enough to burn a hole in the floor if allowed to stand awhile in one spot. This the salamander tossed in the air and caught first in one hand and then in the other, with as much nonchalance as the best catcher in the Eagle Club would manifest in handling a 'regulation' ball.

Another iron rod, somewhat larger than the palate-tickler, was now handed to the fire eater. One end of the rod was blazing hot, and this portion he licked with his tongue until the red heat faded out and the iron resumed its ordinary color. Taking hold of the hot end of the iron, and assuring 'de gemmen' that it was now comparatively cool, he offered it to one after another. A doubting Thomas reached forth and closed his fingers gingerly over the iron. A little of it seem to go a long way with the curious individual. He was not tenacious in his grip. He drew back his hand with a spasmodic jerk, and spent the next half hour in breathing on it and watching with commendable interest the development of a substantial blister.

The spectators were, of course, greatly amazed at these surprising exhibitions, and in the breasts of those who were not well grounded in Bible truths arose a doubt the efficacy of the blazing hereafter so vividly depicted in our Sunday schools as the punishment of sinners.

Much more likely, sir, that he's a descendant of either Shadrach, Meshac or Abednego, who were thrown into the fiery furnace and came forth unsinged. This is a stern tone of the Elevator, who was an interested spectator.

The colloquy was cut short by Delhi, who announced he would next warm his heart with melted lead. After taking in a quiver of the stalwart frame was noticeable and directly he opened his capacious bread-trap and dropped the 'medal.

There was one more astonishing performance—the swallowing of about a drachm of boiling oil. This cheering draught was poured from a sauce pan into a small tumbler, and quaffed with much apparent gusto. After getting this aperient down he seemed to be overcome by some tender emotion, for his eyes filled with tears

He next set fire to a spoonful of alcohol, and with a teaspoon poured the flaming liquid down his throat.

Everybody present was greatly astonished at the whole performance. There was no trick or slight of hand about any part of it. The fellow is certainly more thoroughly fire proof than any mortal we have ever heard or read of. He has been engaged to appear at Woodward's Gardens where he proposes to vary his entertainment by pouring molten lead over his bare arms.

A Parson's Strgalegy.

The following is old—it belonged to the last generation—but it may be new to many of the present. Old Parson Manson of Worcester, had occasionally to be absent from his flock on missionary tours into distant States. Upon a certain summer Sabbath, having just returned from one of these occasions, he found his congregation quite drowsy, and for the purpose of waking them up he broke off in the midst of his sermon and began to tell them of what wonderful things he had seen in York State. Among other wonders he said he had there seen the largest musquitoes it had ever been his fortune to fall in with—so large, in fact, that they would weigh a pound.

The good people were by this time wide awake.

Yes continued the parson; and moreover, they have been known to climb up a tree and bark!

The congregation were sleepy no more on that day. On the day following, two of the deacons of the church waited upon Parson Manson, and informed him that the members of his parish were much scandalized by the big stories he had told them from the pulpit.

What stories? said the parson with innocent surprise.

Why, sir, you said that you had seen musquitoes in York State that would weigh a pound.

I said, returned the parson explanatorily, many of them would weigh a pound; and I really think that a great many of them would weigh a pound.

Well—but continued the older deacon, with a slight choking in his utterance, you said they had been known to climb up a tree and bark.

Certainly, said the parson with an assuring nod. As to their climbing up on a tree I have seen them do that here in Worcester, haven't you deacon?

Oh, yes.

Well, how could they climb a tree without climbing on the bark?

The good deacons went away with something very like a musquito humming in their ears.

An undertaker's office recently bore the following inscription: Gone for a dead man—back soon.

He was Forgotten.

There is a fellow up in St. Lawrence county who is without doubt a lost case and confirmed sot. One of his eccentricities during the warm weather consists in getting drunk at night. This mortified his wife very much, and at last she attempted, with the assistance of a couple of neighbors, to break him of this habit, if not to frighten him into leading a more sober life. So one night these men dug a deep hole in the graveyard, and while he lay asleep, they took and placed him in it. Throwing a few shovelsful of dirt over him, they hid behind some shrubbery and awaited his waking.

About sunrise he gradually rose, and shook off his drunken sleep. Opening his eyes, and seeing where he was, and remembering where he went to sleep, he started up in a sitting posture, and looked up out of the hole.

Good Gracious! said he, just my luck. Resurrection's all over and I'm surely forgotten.

Badly Mixed.

What's the matter, Bob?

Sam, who am I?

Why, you are yourself, Bob Harrison, ain't you?

No, far from it.

What's the matter?

Well, sir, I'm so mixed up, I don't know who I am.

Don't take it so hard to heart.

I ain't I'm taking it in my handkerchief.

Well, what's the matter?

I am married.

Married? ha! ha! ha! why, sir, you should be happy.

Yes, but I ain't.

Why, all married men are supposed to be happy.

But how many are so?

Well, as I said before, don't take it hard—tell us all about it.

Well, Sam, I'll tell you how it is. You see I married a widder, and this widder had a daughter.

Oh yes! I see how it is. You have been making love to this daughter.

No! worse than that. You see my father was a widower, and be married this daughter, so that makes my father my son in law, don't it? Well, don't you see how I am mixed up?

Well, sir, is that all?

No, I only wish it was. Don't you see my stepdaughter is my stepmother, ain't she? Well, then, her mother is my grand mother, ain't she? So that makes me my own grandfather, doesn't it?

An Arkansas Letter.

From the St. Louis Democrat.

Dover, Ark., Oct. 23, 1872.

My Dear Bay:—The double-barrel that you sent came safely to hand, and I was only shot at once while I was carrying it home. Bill Silvers popped at me from behind the fence as I was passing his house, but I had loaded the two shooter as soon as I got it and he did'nt jump up from behind that fence but once.

I am glad that one of the barrels is a rifle, as I needed it for long range practice. The other I can fill with buck shot, and can riddle a man nicely at close quarters. I mean to try both barrels on those Jetts when I meet them. You see, old man Jett stole a mule from us in the war and when it was over pap laid for him and killed him. Then nigger Tom Jett, as we called him—the black faced one—he laid for pap and plugged him. Then I picked a fuss with Tom and cut him into giblets, and since that time his brother Sam has been laying for me. I know it is his turn but I think my double barrel will prove too much for him.

If you want to see fun come down for a while and bring a rifle. It don't make any difference which side you belong to, and it isn't even necessary to join the militia. It is easy to get up a grudge against somebody, and all you have to do is to lay for your man and knock him over.—Behind my pig pen is one of the sweetest hiding places I know of, and it is so handy. A good many people come within range in the course of a week, and a man can pass his time right pleasantly.

I wish you would send me a catalogue of Sunday school books, with the prices if there are any in St. Louis. If we can get them on time we will take a big lot of books. I am Superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school now, and am running it under a full head of steam. Old man Byers, who was turned out, is right mad about it, and swears that he will chaw me up; but he will chaw lead if he don't keep clear of me.

My wife wants to know if you can't send her a set of teeth without her getting measured for them. Her twenty-five dollar set was busted all to flinders by a pistol shot that went through her mouth; but it did'nt hurt her tongue. Write soon to your friend and part,

G——.

P. S.—That sneaking, ornery cuss, Sam Jett, crept up last night and fired at me through the window, but he did'nt happen to kill anybody except a nigger girl. I mean to go for him, though, to-day; will be ever so glad of a chance to try the double barrel.

The grammarian's question as to which is preferable, The house is building, or The house is being built, can be definitely settled in three ways. In favor of the former: The missionary is eating; The missionary is being eaten. Of the latter (according to the eternal fitness of things) Jonny is spanking; Johnny is being spanked. Immaterial: Hanna is kissing; Hannah is being kissed.

A GOOD STORY.

"I never did see such a sight in all my life," quoth Mrs. Narly, elevating her two rheumatism twisted old hands in the air 'Dust on those beautiful velvet carpets; glass in the conservatory windows all broken; chickens schratching up all the geraniums in the front lawn, and the lazy servants dawdling away their precious time while poor dear Mr. Avenel and Harry don't know any more what's going on than if they were boarders. Says I, 'Dear heart alive, Mr. Avenel, this is enough to make your poor wife turn in the grave.' Says he—you know his pleasant way, 'Well, I know it isn't just right, but what can I do?' And I answers, says I get a house-keeper,' says he, Where?' says I, Advertise.' says he Mrs. Narley, you've hit the nail on the head.' I'll advertise to-morrow.' And that's how that paragraph happened to be in the papers.

Here Mrs. Narley stopped to catch breath and nodded emphatically to her auditor, a pale woman dressed in deep mourning, with the becoming framework of a widow's cap, around her face.

"And you think I would suit the gentleman?" the latter asked timidly.

"You can try,' was Mrs. Narley's encouraging response. 'Mr. Avenel's as easy as a lamb, and not one of them as is everlasting checking off bills, and nickle pennies, and Harry's dreadfu' pleasant tempered. Any how, if I were you Mrs. Hawkhurst I'd go up and see'

And Mrs. Hawkhurst holding her pretty little daughter by the hand, went up accordingly to the handsome stone house on the hill.

There she found Mr. Avenel in a state of temporary siege, for others besides herself had seen the tempting advertisement, and made haste to answer it. There were fat women, and lean, tall women and short, Scotch and German, smiling slovenly, women and trim sharp visaged women, women who had seen better days and women who evidently hadn't.

Mrs. Hawkhurst looked around almost discouraged, by the formidable array of rivals.

'There's no hope for me,' she tho't despairingly, and was just about to turn away with the timid Juliet clinging to her hand hand, when Harry Avenel advanced.

'Do you wish to see my uncle, madam,' he asked courteously.

'I—I called about the housekeeper's situation, sir,' meekly murmured the widow.

And Harry showed her in at once.

The fat and the tall, the German and the Scotch, the sour and the sweet went. Avenel decided to engage Mrs. Hawkhurst as his house-keeper, with permission to keep Juliet with her.

"She is all I have,' said the house-keeper apologetically, "and she will try to be useful around the house.

'How old is she?' asked Mr. Avenel.

"Fifteen sir."

"Well, let her stay,' said the widower, good humordly. "She'll eat no more than a chicken, and I dare say she can do a great many odd things about the place.'

Mrs. Hawkhurst proved herself an executive officeress, of the greatest ability. Gradually the 'chaos and old tree' were reduced to system and order. The wheels of house keeping revolved so softly that no one knew they moved yet these were the results. You scarcely ever saw the housekeeper glide about the halls, yet the servants declared her to be omnipresent. Mr. Avenel actually found himself the inhabitant of a home, once more as the years passed away.

He was sitting on a piazza one day, smoking his sigar and watching the graceful movements of Juliet Hawkhurst as she was planting training vines in a marble vase that occupied the center of the lawn, when Mrs. Narley came out.

'A nice evening,' said Mrs. Narley. Oh there she is!

"Who?' Mr. Avenel asked.

"Why that foolish child Juliet. answered the old lady sharply. "I hain't got no patience with her that I hain't'

"What has she been doing now?" asked the widower, with an amused face.

"Why she's refused Ben Nickles oldest son, as likely and bef rehanded a young feller as there is in the country.'

Mr. Avenel stared.

"Ben Nickles! Why Mrs. Narley she is only a child.

"She's seventeen next week," nodded Mrs. Narley, and high time she thought of setting.'

Mr. Avenel looked across to where Juliet stood in her pink gingham dress the soft summer wind stiring her curls and her cheeks as softly tinted as the standard rose, on the lawn. Seventeen! Was it possible that little Juliet Hawkhurst had grown to be seventeen years old! Oh, relentless Time, that would not stand still! Oh cruel years, that went by and stole the fair brightness of childhood away! So Ben Nichols has asked Juliet Hawkhurst to be his wife.

"I wish you and Harry'd talk serious to her bout' it,' went on Mrs. Narley, Tain't likely she'll have many more such chances.'

'No, to be sure not,' said Avenel, abstractedly.

'And of course she'd oughter think it over well, added she.

'Oh, certainly—to be sure.'

When Harry Avenel came home from the city that evening he found his uncle in a brown study.

'Harry said, he.

'Yes uncle.

"I have been thinking—

'So I should conclude sir, by the ill shaped wrinkles between your brows,' laughed the young merchant. 'Well and what has been the topic of your meditations, uncl Joe?'

'Why I was thinking what would become of us if Mrs. Hawkhurst should take it into her head to leave us.

Harry opened wide his hazel eyes at the idea.

"What made you think of such a thing?' he asked.

'Oh, I don't know, she has a good place here, but one couldn't expect her to be contented with a housekeepers situation always Harry.'

"No to be sure not.

"She has become very essential in our domestic happiness, Harry'" went on Mr. Avenel

'Yes—I grant that Uncle Joe.

"And I realy don't know how we could manage to exist without her.'

"Raise her salary Uncle,' suggested Harry.

"No, I hardly think that would answer my purpose; but Harry—"

"Well Uncle'

Mr. Avenel looked slightly sheepish.

"Can't you imagine any other way of keeping her here?"

Harry stared at his uncle. Mr. Avenel felt disposed to give him a hearty shake for his stupidity.

"Oh, cried the young man with a sudden dawning of lucidity over the darkness of his brain. 'You don't mean—matrimony uncle?'

'Yes I do,' quoth Mr. Avenel, stoutly. Would you object Harry?'

"I uncle?'

'Because you are the only person interested besides myself and her.'

"My greatest interest uncle, is to see you happy, he answered wringing the elder's hand. And if I too should conclude to marry at no very distant day—"

"Why then replied Mr. Avenel gaily, 'we can all live together just as we do now, and be the happiest family in the world.

And he went into the house, whistling as he went "John Anderson, my Jo, John,' as blithly as a boy of sixteen.

Juliet Hawkhurst was standing by the little garden gate, that evening, thoughtfully watching over her right shoulder, of course, the slender silver crescent of the moon. Juliet had certainly blossomed into a perfect little rose of a maiden, during the years she had been an inmate of Avenel place,—she was fair haired and rosy, with long eyelashes, and deep blue eyes, full of shadowy purple gleams, and a complexion like rose colored satin; and moreover there was in her every movements a self possessed grace and dignity of mein, that was inexpressibly charming. Juliet Hawkhurst had beed born a lady, but untoward fate had made her a housekeepers daughter

As she stood there leaning over the [illegible] a footstep sounded behind her.

"Juliet!"

She turned with a little rose blush and a smile she fain would have concealed and Harry came and stood close beside her.

"Little elf, you thought you had hidden away from me, but you see I have contrived to find you out, even here! what makes you blush and look so confused."

"Do I?'

And she fixed her gaze very steadfastly at the green turf at her feet, where a single yellow dandelion was closing its eyes of dewy gold for the night.

"Listen cried Harry tryumphantly, I've got a piece of good news for you!'

'What is it?"

'What should you think of a step-father eh, little one?'

Juliet looked up this time in real and genuine astonishment.

'A stepfather, Harry?"

"My uncle has confided to me this evening that he thinks of marrying, Juliet, and from all that I can gather the bride is none other than your mother. So, when we are married there will be a nice little family circle of us eh?"

And the audacious young man belted her waist with his arm, and ventured to draw her a little closer to his side.

"Oh, but Harry, you are all wrong,' cried Juliet blushing and smiling like a June flower. 'I—I meant to tell you about it, but somehow the words would not come to my lips. Your uncle to'd me also that he intended to marry again, and he—asked me to be his wife."

"The—mischief he did! cried Harry, starting back as though some one had struck him a blow. 'You! Why Juliet you are young enough to be his daughter.

"Perhaps I am," said Juliet meekly

"And what did you tell him? You accepted him of course, he is rich and I am poor, and all of the girls like gold.'

'Harry!'

'Tell me quickly Juliet," he cried almost passionately. Don't keep me longer in suspence.'

'I told him, nsward Juliet innocently, 'that I had already promised to marry you."

"My little dove!" and Harry Avenel's dark face brightened into sunshine once again. "And you were right for May and November was never yet happily mated. My uncle is an old fool; and yet I can't blame him Juliet, when I look at your sweet face.'

The countenance of Mr. Avenel was slightly confused, when he met his nephew at the breakfast table, next morning, but farther than there was no sign of the discomfiture he had undergone. He gave Juliet an exquisite set of wedding pearls when she was married, and congratulated Harry after a very cordial fashion. But he never proposed to Mrs. Hawkhurst, and as she had never expected anything of the sort, there was no harm done.

And every thing goes on at Avenel Place just as it ought to. Mr. Avenel keeps his housekeeper, and Harry has gained a wife.

Owners of pearl jewelry should be careful to keep them from exposure to greasy surfaces, as contact of this kind destroys their lustre.

Ivory can be whitened by washing or boiling in a solution of alum in water keeping in a damp cloth afterward for a little while.

A silly country squire asked a merry-andrew why he played the fool?—For the same reason that you do, answered he; for want—you for want of wit, and I for want of money.

In an article on a recent fair in that city, the editor of a Macon paper, says a brother editor took a valuable premium; but an unkind policeman made him put it eight back where he took it from.

A new tin kettle takes a longer time to boil than an old one, because the bright surface reflects or throws off the heat of the fire; but the old one, having a dark surface, absorbs the heat.

We will meet in heaven, husband, dear is the affectionate epitaph which a Ohio woman has had inscribed upon the tombstone of each of three departed husbands. Trouble ahead in that family, certain.

Henry Ward Beecher, indorses Darwin, and remarks that he would just as lief spring from a monkey as from some men he knows of. He wants to know where he is going to, and dosn't care where he came from.

Some years ago, a fat fellow asked old Sir Francis Burdett, while in Parliament, for some position, saying:

Don't you remember me? I used to be a page.

Well, responded Sir Francis, you have grown into a volume.

Here is a good business-like epitaph.—Here lies Jane Smith, wife of Thomas Smith, marble cutter. This monument was erected by her husband as a tribute to her memory and a specimen of his [illegible]. Monuments of this same style [illegible].

"What time is it, my dear?" asked a wife of her husband, who she suspected of being drunk, but who was doing his best to look sober. "Well, darling, I can't tell, 'cause you see there are two hands on my watch, and each point to different figures, and I don't know which to believe."

People who honor their fathers and mothers have the comforting promise that their days shall be long in the land. They are not sufficiently numerous to make the life insurance companies think it worth their while to offer them special rates.

Josh Billings says that the difference between a blunder and a mistake is this:

When a man puts down a bad umbrella and takes up a good one, he makes a mistake; but when he puts down a good one and takes up a bad one, he makes a blunder.

An old carpenter who had been employed by a old woman to do some job work, was asked why people of his trade always charged more in proportion for coffins than they did for chairs and tables. "Well, you see ma'am its just because people won't bring coffins back to us to be repaired."

Hearing some one quoting the metrical expression,

"I would not live always,"

Marcus Aurelius said that he thought so too. Some ways of living must be very disagreeable. He would not care particularly about confining himself to one way of living, but as to living all ways, he had rather not.

This is how the Louisville Courier-Journal looks at it:

They should quit abusing Pere Hyacinthe for marrying. They should remember that the fascinations of a Yankee widow traveling as the agent of a patent corset are not to be whistled down the wind as you would the charms of an ordinary woman traveling merely for fun.

Between Baxter and Leavenworth the stage from Oskaloosa crosses the track of the Kansas Central Railway. The driver considers it dangerous for the narrow gauge cars, and to prevent their being run down, he is going to put up a warning for the engineer, like this: Crossing—Look out for the Oskaloosa hack.

She tripped lightly over the crossing, lisping dear Augustus, and was on the point of embracing him, when a rude boy ran up and holding out a bundle of papers cried out, Missus you dropped your reading room, and [illegible] down a dark alley.

THE ELECTION

As we go to press the news indicate, that Grant has carried this State with several other smaller ones.

The Republicans claim New York, Pennsylvania, and Michigan. They have also had the brass to claim Iowa, and Wisconsin.

The Errors of Mankind.

Dr. Chalmers beautifully gives the following: The light that I have seen in the world and knew of the history of mankind teaches me to look upon their errors in sorrow, not in anger. When I take the history of one poor heart that has sinned and sundered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it passed through—the brief pulsation of joy, the tears of regret, the feebleness of purpose, the scorn of the world that has little charity, the desolation of the soul's sanctuary, and threatening voice within, health gone, happiness gone—would fain leave the erring soul of my man with Him from whose hand it came.

Potent Poison.

M. Davaine read at the meeting of the French Academy of Medicine September 17, a paper on Septicæmia, some of the statements which startled the attention of the few auditors who, at this time of the year continued to attend. He described remarked the London, Medical Times and Gazette the various experience he had been making by the sub-cutaneous injections of septicæmetic blood—i. e., blood driven from an animal poisoned by putrified blood. He has practified 25 series of experiments on rabits and guinea-pigs thus finding that the virus acquires increased intensity of power and activity by passing through the animal organism. This becomes so tremendious that to quote the effects of the last passage, the "blood of the rabit killed by the ten millionth part of a drop was injected into five rabits in doses of one hundred millionth the billionth, the ten billionth the hundred billionth and the trillionth part of a drop. All died within twenty-five hours." The home-apathists will surely prick up their ears, at this announcement from so staid on experimental phisologist.

It is hardly a surprise for the country to learn from the advance sheets of the Postmaster General's report, that the expenses of the department have been increased nearly three millions of dollars over the same time last year.—It could not be otherwise, and it is a comfort to the tax-payers to reflect that General Grant is not up for election every year, or the postoffice would in time beggar us. General Grant, who boasts of paying the public debt, is more than any other man responsible for this additional postoffice expenditure, for it has been increased almost exclusively through extra demands of clerical force and transportation for the wrapping and transmission of those soul stirring campaign documents, which taught the nation how to "vote as it shot," and defined the ways of H. G. to the Democracy in the days of old. What Mr. Postmaster General Creswell knows about postoffices, concerns the country only to the extent of learning just how much it takes to run one department as an electioneering bureau.

A Female Elector.

A letter from Connecticut says that "Old Norwalk, long the Gibraltar of Republicanism in Connecticut, but which was carried by the Greeley party at the recent town election, has still further advanced, and to-day admitted to all the rights of an elector, Mrs. Sarah M. L. Huntington. The lady appeared before the Board of Selectmen, Messrs. Jas. P. Hanford Andrew Selbeck, Wm. A. Benton and Henry R. Selbeck, town Clerk, the officials by law required to examine and admit all persons legally entitled to suffrage, and demanded her rights by virtue of the Constitution of the United States. Her argument was clear and logical, and could only be answered by the plea that in the opinion of most persons the law did not contemplate women's voting. Mrs. Hurtington so ably and dexterously knocked aside the argument that the Board were forced to the unanimous judgement that she had proved herself equally entitled with the negroes to vote under the fifteenth amendment, and Selectman Selbeck administered to her the customary freeman's oath, her name was placed by the town clerk upon the voting list, and as a legally registered vote nothing can now prevent her voting at the coming election as she is absolutely determined to do. Thus Norwalk will be entitled to the distinction of being the first place in any State of the Union where a female has been permitted to vote and advanced to all the rights and privileges of an American citizen.

FOR SALE—Those Democrats who sold out so cheap at the late election, is now in the market.

A Well Merrited Rebuke.

A certain writer administers a sharp rebuke to those persons who are lavish in every thing but charity, and says—I have seen a woman professing to love Christ more than the world, clad in a silk dress costing $75, make up and trimming of the same, $40, bonnet or apology for one, 36, velvet mantle, $150, diamond ring, 500, watch chain, ring, and other trappings, 300, total, 1,100—all hung upon one frail, dying worm. I have seen her at a meeting in behalf of homeless wanderers in New York, wipe her eyes upon an expensive embroidered handkerchief at the story of their sufferings, and when the contribution box came round, take from a well fitted portmonnaie, of costly workmanship, 25 cents to aid the society to promote their welfare."

The Hoosac Tunnel contractors have at length discovered an explosive, the handling of which will not cause instant death to miners. An idea of its safety, compared with similar agents that have hitherto been used with such fatal consequences, may be formed from the fact that it requires three revolutions of an electrical machine to discharge it, whereas most of the others could be discharged with half a revolution. Since the boring of this tunnel was commenced, many lives have been lost through a failure to procure an explosive that might be carried from place to place without being a cause of continual apprehension to the men employing it. No matter how great and useful an undertaking may be, it is always unpleasant to be reminded that it has been accomplished at the expense of much human life. The assurance that the remainder of the work of the Hoosac Tunnel is likely to be done without further sacrifices is, therefore, encouraging.

The following is a synopsis of the report of the statistician, of the Department of Agriculture, upon the condition of the cotton crop in October.—the cotton prospect has undergone no serious change, since the September report. The condition is reduced from 91 in the first week of September, to 82 in October. In October of last year the average was 70, which was a material reduction from that of the previous month. It will be seen that the condition is still placed higher than in last year's report for October while the area according to our judgement was 13 per cent greater. The state averages are as follows: Virginia, 87, North Carolina, 90; South Carolina, 86; Florida, 75; Georgia, 88; Alabama, 82, Mississidpi, 78; Louisana 72; Texas, 85; Arkansas 75; Tennessee, 90. The local disparity existing in the condition of cotton is perhaps more marked than usual. Of the two counties in Alabama, producing most largely, both together yielding one ninth of the cotton in the State, Montgomery reports 100, and Dallas 50. In Georgia, Dawson, the first in amount of production returns, 100, while Sumter and Lee, both large producers, give only 66. In Mississippi, a few prominent counties report a high condition—Washington 60, Madison, 66, Warren, 65, and Hines, 60, while Noxubee, and Claiborne, report 100.

Death of Mrs. Horace Greeley

Our candidate for President of the United States, has been deeply afflicted yea, afflicted in a manner, beyond all other human misfortunes, in the loss of a true confiding and affectionate wife. In comparison to that what is the loss of the Presidency, the loss of any temporial power or gain! Mrs. Horace Greeley is dead; dying after a long and lingering illness of the most painful character. We have not before us a biography of Mr. Greeley, but we make no mistake when we assert that he married the lady whom he has just lost, in 1836 in North Carolina. She was employed as a school-teacher, having gone there in that comparatively early day, when but feeble facilities of education were given in that State and throughout the South, and when they were by no means extensive even in the North. She who was to be the wife of the greatest journalist, this country has ever produced, if indeed he is not to be considered its ablest man of his generation is to be commended for her enterprise and moral courage in going so far beyond the parental home in search of a fortune, or for means to relieve the necessities of its inmates. Mr. Greeley knew her in New York before she started, and probably an engagement subsisted, which was ratified a few years after.

This blow will fall with terrible severity, upon Mr. Greeley. There was never a better or more affectionate husband. He was as true as a needle to the pole. She was the mother of quite a number of children of whom alas but two survive.

While the barbed javelin of death is thus being launched at the most important person, in his household at the great object of his affection, the companion of his youth, the personal attacts of the Grant Press upon him, ought to cease, but they will not.—They will be the more bitter and envenomed, and it will be luckily if they in order to make political capital for Grant do not assail the memory of the departed

An exchange contains the following queer fantasy: "The restless Yankee has set his wife to work again, and this time, with the intention of imposing upon the trusting nature of trees. The bare condition of the trees during the bleak months of winter, strikes him as being far from pleasing to the general eye, and he proposes to remedy it by a system of steam pipes twining around the roots of shade trees and kept warm by steam from an ordinary furnace boiler. He doubtless thinks that he may thus cause the trees to immagine themselves in the midst of summer, and to suppose the bleak winds of December are merely passing eccentricities, not worth noticing, and above all not sufficient consequence to cause them to cast of their summer attire. We do not believe the trees can be imposed on to that extent, but the intention of the ingenious inventer, who by the way lives in Connecticut is none the less commendable. If this gentleman would turn his mind to some means of pursuading flies and mosquitoes that winter reigned all the year round, he would confer a greater bone fit to his suffering species, that by trying to take advantage of the trees.

Fire Burning a Hundred Years!

At Parkgate, near Sheffield England, a most extraordinary phenomenon can be seen by all interested in colliery wonders. About 100 years ago several Parkgate gentlemen sank a shaft known as the Old Basset Pit. They at once found a rich seam of coal—the Barnsley bed—nine feet in thickness. The coal was worked in a very careful fashion, for several years—great blocks and pillars of coal, containing many tons, being left to support the roof in place of the wooden props. For several seasons everything proceeded smoothly; but one day the pit caught fire.—Nobody knows how it was ignited and the ancient miners appear to have been dismayed, by the unexpected disaster, and left the pit to burn at will instead of closing up the shaft and commencing anew, as they had ought have done.

Many years afterwards the "burning pit was again approached, be the lord of the manor, Earl of Fitzwilliam, who began to work out the coal in that locality. A shaft was sunk at some distance from the Old Basset pit, and the coal in the direction of Rawmarch was got at—the new workings, being kept at what was considered a safe distance from the fiery pit. Every thing proceeded satisfactorily until 1868, a minor named Parkins decended the Bank Pit shaft—the name by which the new shaft was known—and was alarmed to find fire only ten feet from the pit bottom. He at once gave the alarm, the principle officers were upon the spot, and efforts was made to extinguish the fire: "Parkins flames were soon put out; but it was found that the whole pit was on fire, and as the Earl's collieries extended for miles, it was feared that the fire would spread over the entire workings. The Old Basset shaft was at once filled up; the old Bank shaft was also closed a third shaft, the Top Stubbin Pit was also filled up. A long and thick wall was built up to separate the old Basset shaft from the newly made opening of the pit. Explorations had to be conducted by crawling on hands and knees in the midst of suffocating smoke but the wall was at length completed at tremendious expenses, and great labor, it being 1,000 yards in length, and from one to five feet thick. Cross walls were also built to cut off airways, and help in choking the fire. Thick iron pipes with iron plugs, were inserted in the walls at intervals of 50 yards, so that views could be obtained of the interior of the old Basset workings by looking through these pipes. The great wall occupied the time of a large body of workmen for a whole year. A new "futtrel"—the entrance to a coal mine—had to be constructed. It had to be brick arched above and below with strong brick walls Entering by this place the wall is inspected daily, to get information if the old fire has reached it in any way.

The last fire was seen in 1871 and on being examined last week nothing but 'black damp' came through the orifices but the most dangerous places—where the workmen labored at a great wall at the peril of their lives—is believed to be the fiery stronghole. Here the flames are still believed to be raging, although securely imprisoned by the work of the underground heroes who built its prison walls. Until a year ago the farmers found that their crops, over this pit were materially accelerated in growth by the heat; and the fact that this acceleration is not so apparent now is the strongest proof to professional minds that the burning pit has about spent its strength after a 'long fire" of 100 years.

THE HEATHEN AT HOME.

Here is what that bad paper the Lexington Caucaston has to say of heathens at home:

Yes, countless multitudes of them. A quarter of a million of children in New York city alone, who never entered a house of worship. Wander through the long dismal slopy garbage strewn, back streets, and alleys of our great cities, and behold the swarms of filthy little caricatures of humanity—miserable little wretches—scarce three removes from the pigs and puppy's, their companions. Can it be possible that God made them? If so, what for? Have they within those tattering carcasses, souls, deathless souls that are destined to glow with radiance divine in heaven, or dying, never die in hell, forever? Can it, can it be? Oh, the emptiness of all our boasted enlightening, and christianising agencies! The hollow mockery of our foreign gospel spreading efforts! Ship loads of red flannel shirts and tracts of predestination, for the sportive young canibals on the banks of the Niger or Nyanza. Gushes of sympathy and cargoes of testaments, for the benighted Hindoes and Siamese. Fat tender juicy missionaries in prime order for barbecuing, for the Caribs, Feejees, and New Zelanders Barrels of crocodile tears, and bounteous shipments of hymn books, Parley's geography's, and school-marms. All this long range, solicitude for perishing humanity. And yet, here and there and every where, at our own doors, amid the blaze of gospel light, in hearing of the bells of a thousand glittering spires, wallowing in the reeking slums of all our great Babels, are millions of wretched little beings of our own race, our own flesh and blood native born Americans, who never heard of a heaven, a hell, a God or a devil, except in blasphemies, Millions of pitiable little creatures with skin beneath their clots of filth as white as ours, or yours, madam, who never saw the inside of a school-house, or a church; who are as deeply, darkly, terribly ignorant, debased, and brutalized as the young savages, who to-day worship the Cobra-de-Cadello, and eat their own lice on the sun scorched shores of Zamberi, or Lake Ngami—American heathen—American pagans! Away with Freed men's Evangelizing Societies, Polynesian Bible Associations, and Senegambia, Madagascar, or Terre Del Fuego Missions! Away with them! And let us begin our work at home—enlighten the heathen, reclaim the Arabs of our own streets and allies! Thronging all around us, even in our own highly favored, beautiful and beloved Lexington Meeting us daily on all our streets and high-ways; jostling us in every turn in all our lanes and byways. Scores of young immortals perishing fellow beings upon whose ears Christ's gospel never fell; whose erring death-bound feet have never crossed a sanctuary's threshold; into whose dark rayless homes a Bible never came! See them all through the week hanging around doggery or gambling hell doors; their only business, what Satan always finds for willing hands to do; their only language obscenity and profanity. See them on the holy Sabbath morning, dodging off to the woods or river, to to desecrate the sacred house of the one hallowed day in seven, by hunting, fishing, skating or boating. Heathens pagans, sitting in the darkness and shadow of death.

But these hopless ones are not all our gropers in the darkness of heathenism. Go to any of our large city churches. Enter the large folding door.—Have the dandified usher show you to a pew, among modern Zion's chtest children. Note the softly tinted light which falls on costumes georgeous and vulgar enough, for a fansy ball dress. See the coquetting, the wanton tossing of brainless heads; the alluring motion of jeweled fans; the whispering of indelicate compliments, and ill-natured criticism; the stroking of dyed and scented mustaches; and the nibbling of licentious cane-heads. Think you they came there to worship an infinitely pure and holy Jehovah, a meek and and lowly Savior? Nay, verily, God is not in all their thoughts.—They are there merely because opera-houses theaters, and club rooms are closed; because it's fashionable and an agreeable change from the revalries and disipations of other days. Humility—they're vain and scornful. Faith—they believe only in Mamon. Love—they care only for themselves and their pleasure. Adoration—they bow only to the shrine of luxury and lust. They're heathens. Keep your missionary at home.

See that blazing femanine, oriflamme of commingled rainbows, ostrich feathers, and grecian cinocsities. Behold her kneel with her false calves bow her painted face in her enameled hands; turn up her stunning array of false hair to the skies; and pretending to suplicate heaven to put a new heart in her bosom of saw dust, cotton batton, and pattent wire palpitators.—She is thinking only of herself and the display she is making.

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Vinegar Bitters are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetisers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual on the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS twice a week.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are the best safe-guard in cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their Sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef-steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

The brick block is almost ready for the roof.

Thanksgiving on the 28th of this month.

The weather has been favorable for building so far.

The new bridge across Cedar Creek makes a very nice appearance.

We are under obligations to W. H. McIntosh, Esq., for a lot of nice vegetables.

Three weddings took place at the Weaver House, all the same day, last week.—How's that?

Winter schools now agitate the minds of our young teachers. Several, to hear them tell it, are going to teach the first school west of town.

Any person wanting to rent a dwelling house can be accommodated by calling at the residence of Mr. Little, one door north of the Rainier House, on Main-st.

The Sedan hotel is to make a change in a week or so. Mrs. Shimp, now the proprietor, will occupy the large dwelling across the way, and turn it into a boarding house.

Chickens and turkeys will consult their earthly interests by fasting until after Thanksgiving, lest they get fat and fall a prey to the results of Grant's recent proclamation.

The straight out paper at Fort Wayne, has abandoned its late filed of uselessness and gone to New Haven, to seek an existence, it is hoped a wiser and a better man.

A change in the running of trains on the Air Line road, was made a few days ago. We have as yet seen no time card but will correct our table as soon as received.

RAIL ROAD MEETING.

A meeting will be held at the Court House this (Wednesday) evening in the interest of the Eel River Road. Our citizens should be on hand promptly.

We are glad to learn that Sheriff Miller and Auditor Reed have been reelected to their several positions in Whitley county by a handsome majority. From personal acquaintance we know them to be good and efficient officers.

Corunna girls are making application for an agency of the Grover & Baker sewing machine. We received our information through a letter picked up on the street. They will prove a success, sure, if talking will aid that business.

Personal.—We were pleased to receive a visit from Col. H M. Wright, the efficient Superintendent of the L. S. & M. S. Railroad with headquarters at Toledo.—Mr. W. is a gentleman, as well as an officer, and knows how to be agreeable and run a railroad.

Fresh Oysters.—If you want a good article of fresh oysters go to Christ Baker's. He recives the very best brands every day from the market. For sale by the can or dish. They are good, cheap and wholesome, and our people should eat more of them.

The Grantites in Chicago kicked up a fuss in regard to the Sunday laws at the wrong time. People can see no consistency in advocating temperance, as long as the "God and morality" party will support a man like Grant. The two things wont work together.

Selling peanuts at a cent a quart, would not be more satisfactory to the purchaser than is the way Davenport & Co, are selling blinds, window shades, wall paper, slates and a host of other things. They keep a cigar now, the best in the market and if you want a good one try their new brands.

The dance at Sedan, last Saturday evening, was patronized pretty well for such notice

See change in running time in table of Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago R. R.—This is one of the best roads we have in the west. The system which characterize the whole machinery makes it like clock work, and trains, therefore, are never late except through accident which seldom occurs.

The Eel River road is looking up. A meeting is to be held here Wednesday evening, Nov. 6th, and at Butler Thursday evening, Nov. 7th. This will be the last attempt to get this road through, and every man interested in the project should go to work, and it will result in a grand success.

The longest 'straight' we know of is that on the Peninsular railway, which makes a bee-line shoot of seventeen consecutive miles after leaving this city.—South Bend Union.

We can show you one in a few months on the Baltimore and Ohio that will knock that all hollow. An air line from Defiance Ohio to Syracuse, Ind a distance of seventy miles with only one slight curve.

The work in getting Right-of-way for the Baltimore and Ohio line is progressing favorbly and we may soon expect work to begin after this is obtained. There are a few holding out yet, hoping to profit by demanding more than the right-of-way 's worth but we think this can be surmounted. Let us secure the road at any rate.

Mr Williams, of the firm of Wood & Williams, has just returned from the east, where he has purchased an immense stock of new dress goods, and a fine assortment of miscellaneous dry goods. They are not the kind of merchants that stay at home and send off to Fort Wayne, or some other inland town for old goods, but want new, fresh supplies, and go and see what they want, and thus satisfy the public

The "pleasure of Saturday night" is a delusion and a snare. It means simply butter, eggs, tea, caffe, sugar, 'and sich.' It is the night you must face your grocer and 'stand him off' for another week. It is the night you must invent some plausible story for your butcher, and render an excuse to your children for your failure to bring home a basket full of toys. Any evening in the week is preferable to Saturday night.

The Aldine for November is a handsome number and its publishers cannot receive too great encouragement from the American public. They should be liberally patronized by all lovers of art and their journal should find its way into every cultivated American household. We never feel that we can commend this handsome and valuable magazine in too strong terms.—It is worthy of the highest praise and must be seen and read to be appreciated.

A young man from this place picked up a pocet-book, lying on the step of the hotel at Corunna, last Sunday, containing $11. He was busted at the time of finding it, but owing to the "splendid reputation" he has secured among that people and "wanting" it more thoroughly established he rushed frantically down Main-st. in pursuit of the loser. His "wind" was almost exhausted when he had the "good luck" to meet his man, and for the want of breath 'shelled' the money over without saying a word.

Something for the Ladies.—We want none but the ladies to read this item, because its private. We want to tell them that instead of looking forward with gloom and dispair, they can now anticipate with joy the coming of the wash-day, because Tyler's steam washer does away with the hard work and makes wash-day pleasant. Our friends all around us have tried it and they say they would not do without it. Mrs. AsKew will supply you with one at a moderate price, and you will surely find it a blessing in the household. Oct. 17,-4t.

Mr. Editor:—

With your permission I would like to make a statement of some facts in regard to the calamity of the Odd Fellows' hall. There has been considerable talk among small mechanics, and others. with respect to my work on that building, which, if believed, would be to my injury. As self commendation may be allowed in defense of false accusations, I would state, that I never slighted a job, however much I may have been the loser. My work on the hall was inspected day by day by a building committee, and frequent payments made on the same, without one word of disapprobation until it was demolished by no act or neglect of man.

My work speaks for itself and can be seen all over this part of the country; in DeKalb, Noble, Steuben, Allen and other counties, and in many parts of Ohio, and for any one to condemn it in this place, is simply ridiculous.

Now, I will wager fifty dollars, and leave it to the decision of any competent mechanics, that my son George, will do as much and as good work, in any given time, as any brick-layer in DeKalb County; and further, I will wager fifty dollars more, that Harlow Bumpus, who learned the trade under my instruction, will do the same.

Although I have one arm in the grave I ask no sympathy, but simply invite all blow-guns to come to the scratch, or forever after hold their peace.

Respectfully, yours,
F. Pickes.

The election passed off very quietly in this place.

The roads are very muddy.

To our Delinquent Subscribers.

We are compelled dear friends to the writing of this article, or it would not be writen. Many of you are not aware of the fact that the paper on which the Courier is printed is a cash article and has to be paid promptly on its purchase—that our compositors that set the type, make up the paper put it to press, &c., have to be paid every Saturday night for their skill and toil. Everything connected with the business is cash. But how can we pay without we are paid by our patrons? how can we pump water out of a well that is dry?

Friends we need the money and need it now! Many of you, warm personal friends of ours, have not paid us a cent since we took charge of the paper. Why not pay us now? We have a heavy payment to make, and we therefore solicit, not only solicit but urge you to pay us what you owe us. This is writen in a spirit of kindness, and hope it will be so recieved by all our patrons, who through inattention or neglect, have hitherto forgotten us when they had the money in their pocket books. Necessity, and necessity only compels this candid appeal. Who will not reach down immediately for his purse to do us justice.

THE RAIL ROAD.

Mr. Grosh, of the lower mill has handed us the second number of a spicy little sheet called The New Era, published at Albion by S. E. Alvord, Esq., from which we take the following;

"The Baltimore, Pittsburg and Chicago Railway Company have recently taken a loan of several millions, to be used in the speedy construction and completion of this great road. We understand it is the intention of the company to push the work forward, so that a continuous line will be ready for operation a year from the coming winter.

To effect this, it will be necessary only to build the road from Chicago to Havana in Huron county, Ohio, where they will connect with the Baltimore Newark and Sandusky road—giving a continuous line from Baltimore to Chicago. The remaining link of the direct line to Pittsburgh to be completed as soon as possible.

It is worthy of remark that, from the inception of this great enterprise there has been no delusive pretence, no shamming, or by-play on the part of the Company.—Every assurance given to the people has been carried out. The preliminary work has been prosecuted with the deliberation and prudence befittiting the great ends to be attained, viz:

The obtaining of the shortest, straitest line from Chicago to the Eastern cities, the easiest grades, and the most promising route for the development of a permanent and increasing local traffic. These things, combined, would made the road immeasurably superior to all its competitors—the favorite and leading line from the east to the west. These advantages, combined, would make the enterprise an unparalleled success—at once the most remunerative and honorable to its projectors and managers, and beneficial to the people, and to the great business interests of the country.

To grasp and secure such a combination of advantages, required patent investigation, and careful revision of surveys; and this course has been steadily pursued despite the clamorings of impatience, and the croakings of hostile interests. The result, is ample vindication. The line now virtually adopted, does combine all those grand advantages, in nearly the highest degree. We mean, of course, the general aspect of the line. That some unimportant variations, and changes in detail may occur, is possible. The general result having been reached—certain details, affecting individuals and localities, may well be subject to minor conditions and stipulations. The cordial co-operation of the people along the line, is a matter of great importance to an enterprise intended for permanent and honorable success.

This Company intends neither to swindle, nor be swindled. Wherever the general advantages of route will not thereby be sacrificed, it is both just and politic that they avoid contact with communities controlled by a spirit of narrow selfishness and avarice, and seek to establish relations with those where the prevalence of a different spirit promises future co-operation. good will and fair dealing. To suffer petty extortion, now, would be to invite petty annoyances, vexations and extortions in the future.

PAY UP.

All subscribers indebted to us for a year or more for the Courier must pay up by January 1st, or the paper will be discontinued, and the accounts placed in proper hands for collection. We can't afford to wait longer than two years for our money.

Notice is hereby given that I will attend at my office in Auburn, from the 15th of October until the third Monday in April, 1873, for the purpose of collecting the above Taxes.

On all taxes remaining unpaid on the third Monday of April, 1873, the law requires ten per cent. penalty, and six per cent. interest, besides cost of collection to be added. Each tax-payer will, therefore, find it to his or her advantage to call and pay their taxes before they become delinquent, as by so doing they will save themselves the penalty and costs, and me an unpleasant duty.

On the 15th of December I am required by law to advertise real estate for sale for all unpaid delinquincies for 1871, and former years, and all persons interested are requested to call and pay their delinquent tax before that date, and save expenses.

Tax-payers will please remember the Third Monday in April is the extent of time that can be given for receiving taxes without the penalty, as my settlement must be completed at a time fixed by law, and cannot be delayed a single day.

DEATHS.

Death of a Prominent Citizen.

Sad and startling as it may be, we are compelled to announce the death of one of our most valued citizens, C. S. Hare, Esq., well and favorably known as one of the most enterprising merchants in our community. His death took place at about seven o'clock last Monday evening, after an illness of several weeks, from typhoid fever. Just previous to his illness he lost his youngest daughter, and from wearing influence of both mind and body over this sad episode, Mr. Hare was soon contined to his bed, from which he was never more to rise.

Mr. Hare came to this county, from Cary, O., about eighteen years ago, full of hope and energy, and for a time was engaged as a contractor on the Eel River and Air Line Railroads. He was married about a year after to his now widowed wife, Miss Emma Abright. He entered the Boot & Shoe business a few years after which he successfully followed until the time of his death. In his business relations he was prompt, reliable and very attentive, and through his indomitable will and perseverance, established a good trade, through the revenues of which he has left a pleasant home to his afflicted family.

Socially he was always pleasant and affable with a warm heart, yet positive in his likes and dislikes. In fact he was a positive man and never flinched from doing what he thought was right. Always cheerful, with a peculiar humor, always finding expression, he had endeared himself not only to his family, whom he dearly loved, but to all with whom he met.—He was looked up to as a citizen, and held a high place in the esteem of all.

And now the excellent friend, the pleasant comrade, the reliable citizen is no more. But a few days ago he was with us, full of courage and buoyant with hope To-day the pale tenement of him we all loved has been consigned to its last resting place, and up out of the gloom of this bleak November day comes the sad refrain, never more shall earthly eyes behold him, yet even in our sadness there is a bright hope "springing eternal," of his having passed through the portals of the Heavenly mansion, and all is well.

The sympathy of the entire community is extended to his bereaved wife and children who have suffered so much from death's doings in the last few days. God grant that the light of peace may break in upon their hearts once more, and that they may feel that their loved ones have only gone before, soon, at the most, to be joined to them in a union that knows no severance, never more to part.

The deceased was a prominent member of the order of Odd Fellows, had filled the highest and most honorable place of trust and distinction, and was an exemplary member in all respects. He was buried with the honors of that order, a large number of visiting brethern being present. His funeral took place at one o'clock p. m., Wednesday, Nov. 6th.

Oh, how sweet it will be in that beautiful land
So free from all sorrow and pain,
With songs on our lips and harps in our hands
To meet one another again.

There are many among us suffering from derangement of the Liver and Bowels, Fever and Ague, Bilious Fevers and diseases arising from a torpid or imperfect action of the Liver. To all such we would recommend the use of "Liver Stimulant and Cathartic," which is advertised in our colums. It has been used with wonderful success in sections where these diseases prevail, and we feel confident it will prove a blessing to many a household. As a medicine to be kept in the family, to be used in place of pills, it has no equal.

It is for sale by all our druggists and dealers in medicine.—Nashua Telegraph

A blind man can be seen drunk on our streets to-day. Shame on the dealer who gave it to him.

Closing Exercises.

The closing exercises of the Auburn schools took place at the M.E. Church last Friday evening, before a crowded house Those who participated acquitted themselves splendidly and Mr. McIntosh and his assistants may feel gratified over the result. The programme was not a varied one, but consisted of declamations and music, as follows:

Manhood; How Lost, & Restored

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage etc; also Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self indulgence or sexual extravagance.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope only 6 cents.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a 30 year practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of medicine or application of the knife, but by means which every sufferer may cure himself cheaply and privately.

☞ This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and man.

Lent, under seal, to any address, in a plain envelope, postpaid on receipt of six cents.

Also Dr. Culverwell's Marriage Guide, 50 cent Address, CHAS. J. C. KLINE & Co. 127 Bowery. New York, Postoffice box, 4,586.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a certified copy of a Decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Common Pleas Court in a cause wherein Lafayette Miller is Plaintiff and Benjamin F. Osborn and Joseph Denew are Defendants requiring me to make the sum of one hundred and seventy nine dollars and sixteen cents, with interest on said Decree and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits, for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following property to-wit: The North-east quarter of Section number Thirty (30) Township Thirty-four (34) North of range Twelve (12) East and also the West half of the North-west quarter of section No. twenty-nine (29), Town and range aforesaid, containing two hundred and forty acres of land, more or less, in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said Decree, interest and costs. Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

Wonders of a Boarding House.

A carving knife that is not shaky in the handle, and which on great persuasion can be induced to cut.

A silver fork on which the precious metal is still extant and which has its proper complement of prongs.

A chamber looking glass which, if not propped up with hair brush never turns its back upon you when you go to shave.

[illegible] which does not leak, a[illegible] very dang[illegible]

A (very) grand piano whereof the key's don't rattle like the bones of negro minstrels, and whereof you can imagine, by a powerful flight, that the notes have in their infancy been ever heard in tune.

Door mat which is provided with a [illegible]

A table cloth or napkin without [illegible]

Window that has not at the least one sash cord broken, and that does not vibrate noisely with the very slightest breeze.

An easy chair which gives you an ease when sitting in it, and wherein you may take your usual after-dinner nap without any apprehension of a caster coming off.

Teapot out of which, with excessive [illegible] and patience, you can contrive to pour a cupful without dropping the lid into it.

Sitting room wherein, to avoid smoke and suffcation, you need not keep window and door open when you light the fire.

Half the day unmolested by an organ grinder.

Curtains which you can manage to pull up, even to the very top, without a wrinkle, and then not find it come down with a rattle on your head.

Have your waiter look as if she sometimes used a nail brush.

Ceiling and chimneys ornamented which are neither of them cracked.

Sofa a little softer than a hard deal board, and which has not its springs fractured exactly in the place whereon you want to sit.

Pictures or engraving hung up by way of ornament, which with any candor you can call a work of art.

Pair of decanters which are not an odd couple, and half a score of wine glasses that not to of which will match themselves.

Doors which does not let a hurricane of draught through it, and which you can actually shut without a slam.

Finally, a bed you may go to without trembling, and a bill that you may pay without a fear of be fleeced.

Away Down in the Sea.

The submarine investigations carried on at government expenses, under the direction of the British Association of Science, have disclosed some most interesting facts in regord to the bottom of the sea.

These researches have been carried on by means of a simple dredge—a rectangular iron frame forming the mouth of a bag of netting which is protected from wear by a leather or canvass flap. The whole aparatus attached to a rope of suitable length is dropped to the bottom of the sea and is draged along the surface a certain distance, scriping off the superficious layer of mud and sand in the bag, the meshes of which premit the dirt to be washed through while the larger substances are retained and brought up.

The depth at which the bottom of the sea has been thus explored has been really enormous, amounting in one instance to 3 miles, far exceeding that of any previous with the dredged though small quantities of sea bottom have been brought up at equally great distance from the surface, by means of the sounding line.

At this depth many species of marine animals have been found, some entirely new and others rare, and the temperature at the bottom indicates about thirty degrees. The surface water is shown to be effected by the heat of the sun, only to a depth of about 20 fathoms, but the Gulf stream influence the heat to a farther depth of 6 to 700 fathoms.

Philadelphia will build a $2,000,000 bridge over the Schuylkill.

California wants 500 large ships to carry off the wheat she has raised this year.

The nut crop is said to be good, and the boys are correspondingly happy.

The Grant candidate for Congress against James Brooks, of New York, is [illegible] G. Dung!

The N. Y. 'Post' cannot recommend the Pennsylvania election as the proper way to secure national reform.

The three cardinal virtues of Grantism in Pennsylvania have been 'addition, division and silence.' To these the saintly Simon Cameron has added multiplication.

A Western editor has come to the conclusion that the young ladies in his village are not at all like St. Paul, because they pay so much attention to 'things that are behind.'

When a Cleveland sewing-machine agent is attacked by an infuriated customer he smiles and lets the latter hit him on hi[illegible]. That is proof against any blow.

A barber of Circlevill, while cutting the hair of a rural customer, ran his shears against some hard substance, which proved to be a whet stone. The old farmer said he had missed that whetstone ever since haying time last July, and had looked all over a ten acre lot for it, but now remembered sticking it up over his ear.

The richest instance of humbug we have met with in a long time is that of an individual who advertises for sale a Siberian bloodhound which he calls A 1 when every one possessing the ordinary rudiments of an English education ought to know that the best is K 9.

A. T. Stewart, who knows Ulysses pretty well, pronounces him a stupidly, selfish and unprincipled cormorant.

In this preparation are combined the valuable properties and virtues of Peruvian Bark, with Phosphorous and Iron, in the shape of Pyrophosphate of Iron. This Elixir will be found of great advantage in Dyspepsia, Indigestion, weak and delicate Stomachs, and generally in weak and delicate states of the system. The ingredients in this Elixir are skillfully blended into a delightful Cordial, making it the most agreeable and palatable combination to the taste, in use.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.
This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.
It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.
To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.
In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

HOW TO GO WEST

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

W. W. WTHOIN[illegible]GTON, Supt.

A Conscienscious Thief.

Those who do not know me may, perhaps, believe the following story. Those who do know me will not. Still, it is nearly true.

Reginald was a pleasant old gentleman with a fine sense of humor. He had considerale property, and lived on Wimbledon Common.

He had one beautiful daughter—but that is not to the point.

One afternoon as old Reginald was reading books in his drawing room, it was announced to him that a common man desired to speak with him.

He gave orders that the common man should be admitted. And admitted the man was.

He was a very common man, indeed.—A tall, shambling, ill-looking fellow, with an irresolute manner and a shrinking eye He was dressed as costemongers are dressed when following their calling.

What is your pleasure, good sir? said old Reginald.

Beg pardon, gav'nor, said the common man. I hope you wont be hard with me, sir.

Not at all.

I'm—I'm a burglar, said the common man.

Indeed, said Reginald. Will you take a chair?

Thank you, kindly gov'nor, but I had rather stand.

And he did stand.

So far there is nothing incredible in my story, but it gets more remarkable as it goes on.

How do you like your profession? said old Reginald.

Well, gov'nor, said the common man, I don't like it noways.

That's what?

That's why I'm here. I belong to a gang of twelve wot's working these parts just now. We crack cribs by turns. Its my turn to-night.

And the man wept like a child.

This, I presume, is remorse, said old Reginald.

No, gov'nor, it ain't remorce, it's funk, said he.

The same thing, sir.

It ain't the being a burglar that I object to; its the having to commit burglaries. I like the credit of it; the danger I object to.

I see

Now, by the laws of our gang, we're bound to crack cribs in turn. That is to say, one of us cracks the crib, while the other eleven stop outside and give the office.

I thought burglars always worked in twos or threes?

P'raps I ought to know best, suggested the burglar.

Perhaps you are right. Indeed, I am sure you ought to know. What crib do you propose to crack to-night?

This here one.

Mine?

Yourn.

Go, and old Reginald prepared to ring the bell.

Please don't do that gov'nor. You aint a goin' to give me into custody?

I think I had better.

No, no, gov'nor, dont do that. Listen to me first:

I ain't going to hurt you. Its my turn to crack your crib to-night. Now, will you help me?

I hardly see my way, said old Reginald, thoughtfully. Still, if I can be of any use—

Look here, gov'nor, each member of our gang is bound to get fifty pounds worth of swag from each crib he cracks; if he don't he's shot. I see a handsome salver and coffee-pot and cream jug as I came in here. Wot might be the value of that handsome silver salver and a coffee-pot?

The cream jug is electro. The coffee-pot with sugar basin and salver, may be worth five and forty pounds.

That is near enough. I'll take 'em.—Here is a flimsy for fifty quid.

And he handed old Reginald a bank note for the amount.

Still I don't quite understand—

I want you, guv'nor, to be so good as to leave your bed room window open to-night, and place that salver and them silver traps where I can get 'em. I shall have cracked my crib, bagged my swag, and made myself safe until my turn comes again.

Certainly, said old Reginald, holding up the note to the light. But let me ask you how can you afford to pay so handsomely for your depredation?

There are a dozen on us, sir. Each of us cracks a crib once in three months, and each swags at least fifty pounds worth—often more, but at least that. After each plant the profits are divided. Last quarter the twelve cribs cracked brought us in elenen hundred pounds—ninety odd pounds apiece. When my turn comes I pay a fair price for my fifty pounds worth of swag, for I have been honorably brought up, and I gets forty pounds to good. And forty pounds to the quarter is one hundred and sixty pounds a year. And I lives on it. Sometimes its more—now and then its less, but whatever it is I lives on it.

And the honest fellow took a receipt for the note and departed.

Old Reginald was as good as his word He left his bed-room window open and placed the salver there, and about two o'clock the honest burglar came and got it.

So far all was simple and straightforward enough. But now comes the curious and incredible part of my story.

The fifty pound note was part of the proceeds of a previous burglary. The number of the note was known, and traced to old Reginald, who had to account for its being in his possession.

Now the twelve burglars had in meantime been arrested by the police (this is also incredible) and were condemned to penal servitude for life.

So old Reginald had no hesitation in stating the facts.

No one believed him, as no one will me And the honest burglar having discovered the whole thing, coffee-pot, salver and all, was the commonest electro, was so shocked at old Reginald's dishonesty that not only did he decline to corroborate his story, but actually, and I think very properly, identified him as an accomplice.

And old Reginal was also sentenced to penal servitude, and he and the honest burglar worked for many years together on the same works, and had many opportunities of talking the matter over from its social, moral and political point of view.

Death of a wild Man.

Twenty-two years ago the people of Deering Maine, had their cows milked every night, and their corn, soap grease and other articles stolen. One morning a woman going to milk discovered a repulsive human being in the hay-mow, with hair grown over his eyes, and both feet frozen. He was taken to the alms-house, and for twenty years has only spoken in monosyllable. He was extremely filthy in his habits, and nothing has ever been known of his history. Recently, to the surprise of all, he pronounced the word, England, and on being asked if he same from there, and would like to go back again, he said: Yes Then he refused to speak, refused food, and died last week—He has died and preserved his life's secret and the doctors cannot tell what ailed him, or if he was insane

A certain Dr. T——, of a town north of the Clyde, was a strong and decided Presbyterian, and his lady love was as strong and decided a Baptist. They were sitting together one evening, talking of their approaching nuptials, when the doctor remarked to her:

I am thinking, my dear, of two events which I shall number among the happiest of my life.

And pray what may they be, doctor? said the lady.

One is the hour when I shall call you my wife.

And the other?

It is when we shall present our first bairn for baptism.

What! sprinkled? Never shall a bairn of mine be sprinkled, Dr. T—?

Every bairn of mine, Miss McDan—shall be sprinkled.

They shall be, hey?

Yes, my love.

Well, sir, I can tell you, then, that your bairns won't be my bairns. So good-night, sir.

The lady left the room, and the doctor left the house. The sequel was no marriage, no bairns.

Stories of Peter Cartwright.

A DISPUTE WITH A DOCTOR.

Many anecdotes could be told of this eccentric and talented man, and there is one too good to let pass. He once had a dispute with a doctor relative to religion The doctor said he wanted honest and unequivocal answers to a few questions.

Did you ever hear religion?

No

Did you ever smell religion?

No

Did you ever taste religion?

No

Did you ever feel it?

Yes

Now, then, said the doctor, with apparent triumph, I have proved, beyond a doubt, by four respectable witnesses, that religion is not seen, heard, smelled, or tasted, and but one solitary witness, feeling, has testified that it is an experimental fact. The weight of evidence is overwhelming, and you must give it up

Cartwright asked.

Did you ever see a pain?

No

Did you ever hear a pain?

No

Did you ever smell a pain?

No.

Did you ever feel a pain?

Certainly I did

The doctor and his family were converted.

BLAZING HIS WAY.

Cartwright, having been brought up in a log cabin, did not like climbing stairs, and when he took up his quarters in a hotel he preferred rooms on a lower floor.—He once went to Chicago, and booked himself at the Tremont House. The preacher was assigned to a room on the eighth or ninth story.

Soon after being shown to his room Cartwright rang the bell. A waiter was promptly in attendance.

I want an ax, said Cartwright.

The astonished servant said he would procure one. Having obtained an ax, Cartwright asked the waiter to guide him down stairs. At the first turn in the stairs Cartwright blazed his mark in the walnut balaster. The dumbfounded waiter asked him what he meant.

I want to know my way back to my room again, said Cartwright.

The preacher was assigned to a room at a more reasonable distance from mother earth.

A good deed is never lost; he who sows courtesy reaps friendship, and he who plants kindness gathers love; pleasure bestowed upon a grateful mind was never sterile, but generally gratitude begets reward

In vain do they talk of happiness who never subdued an impulse in obedience of a principle. He who never sacrificed a present to a future good, or a personal to a general one, can speak of happiness only as the blind do of colors.

A western editor, in announcing the demise of his peper, says:

The brilliancy of our career has only been equaled by it's brevity; and the lack of business management has only been excelled by the lack of business itself.

A man asked a boy who was digging in a hill-side what he was digging for.

A Woodchuck.

You can't get him, said the man, he can dig faster than you.

I must get him, said the boy, our folks are out of meat.

George Smith do you recollect the story of David and Goliah?

Yes, sir, David was a tavern keeper, and Goliah was an intemperate man.

Who told that?

Nobody, I read it—and it said that David fixed a sling for Goliah, and Goliah got slewed with it.

An old man who believed that, what was to be would be, but who was very particular to have his gun with him when he went among the Indians, was once disappointed in one of his usual trips because his gun was not within reach. Tantalizing by the suggestion that he would not die till his time came, and that the want of his gun made no matter, But, said he, suppose I should meet an Indian whose time came, I would not like to be without my gun.

It is always safe to joke, even with the benighted Celestials. A fine young lady of Portland, Oregon, on hearing from one of her Chinese domestics his determination to return to his native land twitted him upon the subject of matrimony.

Well, Wam is going back to get a wife, I suppose?

Me?

Yes.

What sort of a girl is she?

Belly nice woman, hice woman.

Well, tell us, Wam, is she one of the aristocratic sort—A No. 1, you know—nice girls who have such little wee feet?

Ah Wam (very innocently) Oh, no, not little feet! great big feet—all the same as yours.

A "Fighting Editor."

The John Bull newspaper, edited by Theodore Hook, frequently indulged in offensive personalities in remarking on the conduct and character of public men. A military hero, who would persist in placing himself conspicuously before the world's gaze, received a copious share of what he consid red malignant and libellous abuse in the columns of said paper. His souldier's spirit resolved on revenge. An officer and a gentleman could not demean himself by calling up a hireling scribbler for honorable satisfaction. No! he would horsewhip the miscreant in his own den—the Bull would be taken by the horn!

Donning his uniform and arming himself with a huge whip, he called at the office, and scarcely concealing his agitation inquired for the editor. He was invited by the clerk to take a seat in the room.—He complied and was kept waiting while the clerk, who recognized the visitor ran up stairs and informed the editorial responsibility of his name and evident purport. After an aggravating delay, which served considerably to increase the ill-temper of the officer, the door opened, and a coarse, rough-looking man, over six feet in height, with a proportionate bredth of shoulder, and armed with a bludgeon, entered the room.

Walking up to the surprised and angry visitor, he said, in a voice of thunder:

Are you the chap as wants to see me, sir?

You! No. I wish to see the editor of the paper.

That's me.

There must be some mistake.

Not a morse! I'm the head hitter of this Bull, said the follow bringing the nobbed end of his bludgeon in fearful proxmity.

You the editor? Impossible.

Do you mean to say I'm telling a lie? roared the ruffian, as he agained raised his knotty argument.

Certainly not—by no means, said the officer rapidly cooling down and dropping the whip and his wrath at the same time.

Werry well, then. What are you wanting wi' me?

A mistake, my dear sir, all a mistake. I expected to meet another person. I'll call some other day, and the complaint backed to the door, bowing to the drawn stick before him.

And don't let me ketch you coming again without knowing who and what you want. We're always ready for all sorts of customers—army or naval, civil or military, horse, foot and dragon.

The officer retired, resolving to undergo another goring by the Bull before he again ventured to encounter the horse lean proportions of the fighting editor.

When the clerk informed the occupants of the editorial sanctum of the visit of the irate colonel, neither Hook nor the publishers cared to face the horsewhip.

A well known pugilist, the landlord of a tavern in the vicinity, was immediately sent for; a slight preparation fitted him for the part, in which he acquitted himself with complete success.

The story rapidly circulated, and the reputation of the fighting editor of the John Bull prevented further remonstrances from persons who felt themselves aggrived by the liberty of the press.

UNCLE JAP'S GHOST.

I suppose that there is no doubt that one good honest ghost, one that could be seen and touched, would do more towards making the world at large believe in the future life of the soul, than all the sermons and treatics ever writen. Indeed the world seems always to have been in a manner concious of this. Hence, the eager facination with which mankind even after being fooled for thousands of years still catch at anything like a plausible ghost story. In fact ghost-seeing has always been one of the worlds weak spots.

Of course nobody believe in ghosts now-a days; yet let any thing like a decently probable ghost story get a going, and it is a little surprising to see how curious people will become. Take the "haunted house" of Boston, for example. And almost every town or village has its spector.

I well remember the sensation which came up in the little parish where I used to live some yeary ago. It was a quaint little neighborhood, away back from the rest of the world—a church, (Baptist) a parsonage, a "tavern" some dozen or twenty houses, with a wild unsettled region stretching away on all sides.

At the period I refer to, old Elder McKay had just died and the new 'Elder," Mr. Granger, a pale, grave faced young man, had just come bringing a wife as pale and grave faced as himsel Both were of the calm spiritual sort—models in all respects.

But in marked distinction from them was the wifes sister, a girl of fifteen or sixteen who made her home with them. Nell Burnham, as we soon come to know her, was of quite a different sort. In Parish language she wasn't a "professor," and most certainly not a professor of much of that somber-visaged piety, more in vogue then, than now, perhaps.

In short, without being in any bad. Nell was a trump among girls—was "hail fellow well met," with any one who had a spark of fun about him and was always bent on having a good time.

The young folks liked Nell universaliy—all the more from the fact that she was known to be a subject of the most profound grief and solicitude, on the part of the reverend pair at the parsonage, as well as an object of distrust among all the deacons and deaconesses. Wherever she went, there was sure to be a good time and something to laugh at afterwards

This little neighborhood had also another unexpected characterin the shape of an old Mississippi negro known as Uncle Jap (an abbreviate form of Japan). He had come to the tavern one bleak winter evening some years previous—how, nobody knew exactly; had been a passenger on the "Underground Railway," probably sent in here for safe residence. For those were the days when 'Abolition" raised its cress against the "Fugitive Slave Law."—(What an ancient sound these terms do have). Uncle Jap's case was dimly understood. People sympathized with him. He built fires at the tavern where an attic had been given him for a lodging-place, and in process of time came to be sexton at the church and dug graves—when any body died.—and about this time one Martha Wilkins, did actually die; and uncle Jap, had the digging of her grave on his hands.

It was a late October evening, moon light, and the old fellow had gone up to the church yard to see something about it. One of my boy friend Zeke Edwards and I were playing "backgammon" down in the bar room at the tavern, with several others looking on, when all at once in rushed Uncle Jap, bareheaded and with a countenance frescoed with terror.

"Hello! Uncle Jap! What's the matter? What is it?" we all exclaimed.

He had fairly leaped behind the stove, in his fright and was turning the whites of his eyes towards the door.

'De Lord sabe us,' was his first words.

'Why, Uncle Jap, what is it?'

'De Lord knows! but I 'specs it was a spook.'

'A spook! what's a spook?'

'A spook or a bogey!' cried the old darkey, shivering. 'De Lord knows which.'

'Why where have you been?' asked Zeke.

"Up to de church-yard only. Wus jes a lookin along de side ub de Wilking lot, thinkin' how hard de frozen groun' would be to break up for ole' Martha to-morrow, when de spook ris right up all white and almos cotched me.'

This was the sum and substance of his story; the main point of which was that something had frightened him nearly to death, and Zeke and I ran out to see what it was. There was nothing in sight of the tavern, so we kept on up to the grave yard. But all was now still and quiet there—motionless as the dim moon-light which lay upon it. We were about going back laughing at Uncle Jap's stampede, when I suddenly caught the glimps of something white flitting around the corner of the church.

'D'ye see that,' whispered I.

'I did see something—I thought,' said Zeke. But gracious!' said he suddenly, jerking my arm, "look there."

I looked. Out of the shadow of one side of the church a dim white form was moving slowly towards us, not 20 rods off.

We were boys then; and I consider it no disgrace to say that we ran off in a perfect panic, never stopping until we reached the tavern.

We had seen a ghost. By the next day every body knew it, and talked of nothing else.

And when Sunday came, the congregation in the church kept casting fugitive glances out in the church-yard, and at noon little groups could be seen examining the places where the spector had appeared.

Good Mr. Granger was scandalized; and all the deacons—especially old deacon Grover—denounced the 'spook' as mockery, or a devise of Satan.

But only the next night, as the worthy deacon was going to call on his pastor, the spook suddenly arose in the path in front of him, and waved him back. At first the old man—if we may credit his accounts—and withstood it, abjuring it in the name of Heaven to give place. But it wouldn't budge.—And the deacon had in the end fled back to his dwelling in as great a fright as we had fled from the church yard.

The last 'scare' was a signal for a general hubbub throughout the parish. Every body was on the lookout; and during the next fortnight more than a dozen persons had got a glimpse of the spook. The most absurd and ridiculous accounts were current respecting it. The church yard seemed to be the favorite resort—Friday nights at least.

Indeed, so rampant grew the stories as to endanger the faith and spiritual wellfare of the church; so at least parson Granger thought. And after consultation with his deacons, it was decided that, as God's servants, it was their duty to confront and appease the spirit, if it were a good one; or by virtue of the piety and parochial office, to drive it off, if as most suspected it was a foul one and as the spook was nearly nocturnal in its habbits, and must be met on its own ground, they agreed, to go to the church yard on the next Friday evening, and there "confront' it.

Zeke and I heard of this decision, and determined to be one of the party. Or as they might (very properly) object to such an unsanctified addition as ourselves, we concluded to follow them unknown, and watch the proceedings from some safe covert. I realy don't think we would have cared to go there alone, but with so many good Christains ahead of us there would be but little danger; for in case of any sudden manifestation we judged that we could get off as fast as any of them.

I well recall that Friday evening.—Zeke and I were on the lookout, and at 8 'o clock, saw Mr. Granger and his deacons sally forth from the parsonage, and take their way to the church-yard.

The moon had not risen and we followed them unobserved as far as the gate, where we concealed ourselves in a clump of raspberry bushes, in such a way as to command a view of what went on inside of the yard, through the chinks of the fense. But the spook was in no hurry. For a long time, its would be interviewers, had nothing better to do than to sit on the tombstones and pace up and down the walk through the center of the yard.

An hour or two passed; but meanwhile the moon arose making it a little lighter.

'Call rather too early,' whispered Zeke.

"May not appear at all," said I.

Another hour passed. We were begining to wish ourselves at home when a sudden exclamation from Mr. Granger came to our ears.

'There! there 't is,' whispered Zeke.

Sure enough, just emerging from some low cedars bordering one of the lots, was the form in white. For a moment it paused as if uncertain then glided straight towards the intruding party.

'Pause, spirit!' cried Granger nervously; "Whether good or evil, stand still and answer us.

But with solemn gestures the spook came straight for the speaker, its arms extended as if to clasp him. Mr. Granger shrank back upon the nearest deacon, who shrank in turn behind his fellow. In short they all shrank; and by was of shrinking a little faster, turned and ran. In a trice, and before we could get up out of the briers, they were scampering out of the gate with the spook not two rods behind them.

We crouched down and watched them.

At the gate the figure stopped a moment, threw a hasty glance around, then darted on after the fugitive deacons, who were bounding along down the frozen road, trying to keep up with their pastor. But as it sprang away something white fluttered in the moon light, and fell to the ground—something that looked like a handkerchief.

A sudden suspicion shot through my head and as the phantom disappeared behind the church, I bounded out and secured the—yes it was a handkerchief.

In a jiffy we were out of the briers, and hiding behind a couple of headstones. We hadn't long to wait either for, in a few moments the spook came back shaking with suppressed laughter. We waited until she was almost abreast of us, then rose up in our turn. The ghost jumped back.

'Oho! old lady,' cried Zeke, leaping out and snatching off her tall paper cap. "Your little game is up, now!"

"Is that you Zeke,—and Kit too?" cried Nell laughing in spite of herself. "Well I am caught at last."

'Of course you are?'

'Yes, but now Zeke—and Kit don't tell the old folks. Say that you won't, now?'

'Don't [illegible]

'I know—such fun too! But please don't tell of this!'

'What will you give us?'

'Oh, any thing[illegible]

We thought that would do [illegible] and closed the bargain.

There were no more 'spooks' in that church-yard. But we kept the secret all three of us, and Mr. Granger and his deacons [illegible] that it was their [illegible] Nell Burnham who sent them [illegible] down the road that ghostly Friday evening.

Starting in Married Life.

I will tell you a story of my own experience in starting in the world.—When I was very young and very poor I married a very poor young [illegible] worked out by the day on the farms, and in [illegible] that the stormy days should not consume the income of the fair ones, something must be done.—What should it be? He had no trade for indoor labor, except making shingles. [illegible] build one. Heretofore he had spent the stormy days, like hundreds of young men in the country, lounging about public places in the village or at some neighbor's. [illegible] habit, and liked it.

Now, said I, James, if you ever get anything ahead, the winter must not consume what the summer yields.

True, replied he, but what can we do?

I hesitated a moment, looked at the neatly scoured floor of our little log cabin, and snow-white [illegible] window curtains, which, by the way, were pieced out from worn-out garments.

Get neighbor [illegible] some timber, get it sawed, and make the shingles for half.

Where? said he, right here in the house?

Yes, here in the house.

Year after year passed; [illegible] kitchen barrels were bottomed, barley forks were made and sold, and I used to pack the shingles. [illegible] was done in bad weather, and our children were growing up, enjoying the liberty of making all the litter desirable, whenever they were released from their hours of study. No one on earth loves neatness more than I; but I learned in time to sacrifice it, in a measure, to prosperity and happiness.

Husband is nervous and irritable by nature, and it will not do in all cases to try and [illegible] so I have picked up after him, hats and clothing, [illegible] him almost every Sunday morning and so to the boys, they made all sorts of farming implements in the house when they could not [illegible] whatever improvements they might wish to engage in [illegible] many efforts to teach the boys order about the house, but never fairly succeeded.

Now for the result of our course. We have a farm of [illegible] hundred acres, well stocked; there are several rooms in our house, but shingles are not made in any of them.—Sometimes when husband brings a barrel to hoop for our [illegible] I tell him to be careful not to scratch the paint of the floor. Husband is a hard working man, and when night comes he is at home, and so are the younger boys. [illegible] home-loving boys. No smoking cigars, or taking a glass, or [illegible] about with [illegible] good and true.

The Presidential Election.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of yesterday has the following appropriate and suggestive article on the Presidential election, which we take privilege of giving in full. "The most remarkable Presidential election ever known in our history is closed. It was extraordinary in the party associations which in produced, the personal character of the candidates, the means employ'd to elect them and the issues involved It now belongs to the past, and can be regarded only in that light. Never before did a great party, numbering its three or four millions of voters, and controlling half of the States in the Union, surrender its organizations, and support of its highest offices in the country, gentlemen who have hitherto been the most bitter opponents, and who have not profes ed to have changed. It can easily be imagined what were the feelings of this vast body of men, when they were called upon to make this sacrifice Nevertheless, as we have said, it was done. What must be the condition of the country and its future prospects, that would induce this? Must they not be in the judgement of a large number, if not of a majority, most deplorable? Nothing like it has never before been known. The Democracy and Liberal Republicans have felt, in this canvass, that the perpetuity of the Republic depended upon their efforts. They have felt no confidence in General Grant.—They have believed from his antecedents, associations and supporters, that he was a dangerous man to be trusted with National affairs. They have had confidence that if re-elected, he would continue, by the force of powerful agencies with which he is now surrounded, and which are daily becoming greater, and which he has employed in this canvass, that he would be above any such thing as the form of an election hereafter. In this they may have done him injustice. He may not have had the ambition to crush out the liberties of the country, on the altar of his own personal interest. Nevertheless, it looks that way.

General Grant was nominated against the wishes of his own party, by the power and influence of his office-holders. He has been re-elected by the influence of the same character. It will therefore be implied that Presidents of the United States can continue themselves in office at their own pleasure. If General Grant did not avail himself of that knowledge others will at the first opportunity. To this, of course there will be a powerful opposition. We do not doubt that a majority that voted for Grant, are sincerely friends to our Republican system, and opposed to its overthrow. But they have been mistaken a nd they are likely to be counted in some effort tending to that end, in a way precluding them from opposing it. The last ten years have been fruitful in showing how men have been let down, step by step, to favoring measures from which they at first revolted with great indignation. We hope we have been mistaken, and trust that we have done General Grant in his character injustice. But we cannot dismiss from our minds the great apprehensions which have been excited by the course of the campaign, and the policy resorted to, by his supporters by endeavoring to gain victory. They are evil omens to the perpetuity of the Republic.

"We are more than ever convinced of the mistakes made in the Federal Constitution, in not formally restricting the office of President to one term. It is to be deplored that General Washington did not set the example, as he intended, and the importance of which he recognized in all his official documents and and communications.—There is no law more vital to the preservation of our institution. A President under the present system, only makes his four years an opportunity for re-electing himself and selects every appointment and sustain every measure to that end. This power of corruption should be taken from him, by an amendment to the constitution, which was proposed by the honorable Senator of Massachusetts, Charles Sumner last winter. That went really to the foundation of all our difficulties. We truly are in great danger. There never has been such a corrupt President as General Grant. In the earlier part of our history he would have been ignominiously dismissed without the formality of a popular support.

"The party which opposed Grant will be the party of the future; that is if we are permitted to have elections hereafter. That party was a coalition of antagonistic and diverse elements, and as such was exposed to all the weakness naturally engendered by such a p sition. It was understood in the larger cities and towns, but in the country districts, there was not sufficient time to explain the motives, which led to its formation, and what was expected from it. Thousands and tens of thousands of friends were lost by this want of time, who next winter or spring will be warmly in favor of it. There is much truth in the remark of the Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees of Indiana, to this end as executory of his first speech in Congress,

"For those men claiming to be Democrats in the past, who have declined to support Mr. Greeley on the grounds of their peculiar purity of Democracy, we have no charity, and farther we will say we have no respect. The issue of the continuence of the Government in its present constitutional form, has been made to appear, and yet they, for some miserable contemptable reason, having only relation to their own personal prejudices and passions, they refuse to take any step to that end, but on the contrary, support directly or indirectly, the President in his usurpation. Extremes will meet. It is not the first time, that those pretending to be opposed have come together, and cordially co-operated on a common platform.

"Unless we are deprived of popular election altogether, what is now known as the Democratic and Liberal party, is hereafter to be known as the LIBERAL PARTY, and will be the predominant organization. Despite all opposition, it would really have won the victory, even over the corruption of the Administration, had it not been for election frauds, open and palpable, perpetrated in Pennsylvania, Indiana, and other States, which deprived us of a legal victory. Those unlawful advantages cannot long continue. We therefore bid the Democrats and Liberal Republicans, who have so fraternally united in this campaign, to be of good cheer—to continue united, whatever may be the result—for local and State purposes, until another opportunity offers, unless indeed, they are deprived of it, by the forcible military usurpation of the present incumbent to make a change in our National affairs.

Greeley, And the Tribune.

The undersigned resumes the editorship of the Tribune, which he relinquished on embarking in another line of business six months ago, Henceforth it shall be his endeaver to make this a thoroughly independent journal, treating all parties and political movements with judicial fairness and candor but courting the favor and depreciateing the worth of no one. If he can hereafter say anything that will tend to heartily unite the whole American people, on the broad platform of universal amnesty, and impartial suffrage he will gladly do so. For the present however, he can best commend that consummation by silence and forbearance. The victors in our late struggle can hardly fail to take the whole subject of Southern rights and wrongs into early and earnest consideration, and to them for the present, he remits it. Since he will never again be a candidate for any office and is not fully in accord with either of the great parties, which have hitherto divided the country, he will be able and will endeaver to give wider and studier regard to the progress of science, industry, and the arts, than a partisan journal can do, and he will not be provoked to indulge in those bitter personalities which are the recognized bane of journalism.—Sustained by a generous public he will do his best to make the Tribune a power in the broader field it now contemplates; as when human freedom was in peril it was in the arena of political partnership.

[Signed] Horace Greeley.
New York, Nov. 6, 1872.

"A lively sermon of the "Vice of the Age," was preached in St. Louis on Sunday last by Rev. Dr. Holland, of that city, and in the course of his remarks he said: "The middle classes spend their income in keeping up false appearances. They, too, must wear dove colored pantaloons and shiny boots. They must wear diamond studs and seal rings, and carry young ladies to the opera in hired carriages at the rate of three hours' use for three days' wages. They must take a turn now and then at billiards, stand treat to the cocktails, bet upon their veracity when called in question, and, last of all, lest they should be deemed timid, must demonstrate their nerve by "fighting the tiger," until it claws the last dime out of their pockets, and claws lasting scratches upon their souls What a fearful picture this is! Let our young readers remember that the only safeguard against this horrible vice is work; not work as the slave who works to eat and eats to work, but work to reach a higher plane of effort, not only of the body but of the mind. Work whatever it be, whether for a day, a week, a month, or a lifetime, honestly and cheerfully, as one who expects to contemplate its results forever. Think not of danger or hardship; press onward and onward, determined to triumph.

The telegraph vouchsafes us the pleasing tidings that General Grant is greatly gratified with this result—we should think so—not because he is elected—he don't care for such a trivial thing as that—he could elect himself any day, and not try very hard but as the honest man puts it 'because his private character has been indorsed." Now Simon Cameron could have saved him the trouble of a campaign, if a certificate of character was all that he required. Didn't Yerkes come from the Pennsylvania penitentiary, and give Hartranft a title clear to mansions at the State Capital, and didn't the mild-mannered Quakers straightway elect the ex-white washed convict!

Boston Chicagoed!

A TERRIBLE FIRE!

CONSUMES MILLIONS OF PROPERTY!

Boston, Nov. 10.—A terrible fire is raging in this city, and it is feared that the whole area from Summit street on the north to Washington on street on the west, and from Milk street on the north to the water on the east, will be laid waste.

Boston has been visited by the most disastrous fire ever known in New England. About 200 acres of the business portion of the city are in ashes.—There is not a wholesale boot and shoe house left standing and hide and leather stores are scarce. The leading newspaper and churches have been destroyed. The losses are estimated at 150,000,000. The fire was stopped by the blowing up of buildings.

Boston, Nov. 9, Midnight.—The greatest fire ever known in New England is now raging among the large wholesale stores in the very heart of the business portion of the city. I will not cease until it reaches the wharves. There was hardly a breath of wind stiring when the alarm was sounded, about 7:30 o'clock. The first alarm was followed by the second, third and fourth, in rapid succession, but the first engine was hardly on the ground, when the fire broke out from the fourth story of a large four-story granite store, on the corner of Summer and Kingston streets, occupied in the first story, by Tibbits Baldwin, & Davis, wholesale dry goods dealers.

ORIGIN OF THE FIRE.

It had caught in the engine room, and had spread with lightening rapidity up the large elevator, and were first seen climbing under the woodwork before any store caught. The buildings in the vicinity were all granite, four stories high, and each surmounted with a Mansard roof none of them were over five years old.

Detached splinters flew rapidly, as the air was set in motion, by the terrible heat, and soon the flames began to lick the Mansard roof, on the opposite side, far above the reach of streams directed upon them. From all quarters the fire was constantly in the air; one building after another, caught at the roof. The flames skipped lightly along, from one window sill to another so that in less than thirty minutes every cheek was blanched as it became evident than the whole city in one direction was at the mercy of the flames, which was leaping gaily from roof, to roof, and from one building to another.

The loss of property is by no means the only sad feature, but the fact that the flames cut down in their fiery swath, many of those historic land marks which were preserved with such jealous tenderness and pointed to with such laudible pride, by the people of "The Hub." These can never be restored. And in fact it is losses of this kind, both public and private, the gathered treasures of many generations which no abundance of wealth can ever replace, that lend to such a disaster its most severe blow.

For example, there was the Old South church, a noble historic monument connecting the past with the presend—a second Faneuil Hall. The first church building was erected more than two hundred years ago in 1669. The last building was erected as long ago as 1730, more than forty years before the Revolutionary.

The very atmosphere around it was full of cherished historic associations. When the old Faneuil Hall would not accommodate the Revolutionary fathers on account of its limited capacity they were accustomed to adjourn to the old South Church. It was in this church that the "Tea" meetings were held by the patriots, and its walls echoed to the fiery eloquence of Joseph Warren and old Sam Adams as they thundered forth their denounciations against Brittish tyranny. But it seems that the old South Church is no more, and with it went squares of massive granite buildings, which were the pride of Boston, and an honor to the whole country.

Afternoon Report.

Boston. November 11.—The fire was got fairly under control about 4 o'clock this morning.

The New Surveys.

The two naval expeditions organized to continue the surveys for a ship canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, through the Darien and Nicaragua routes and reported preparing to start, Commodore Selfridge in charge of the Darien, and Commander Lull in charge of the Nicaragua project. The first will begin on the Pacific side of the Isthmus, at the point from which the navigable waters of the Atrato River can be easiest reached. The second will start from Greytown, on the Atlantic side. The Navy Department expects to decide whether there are practicable routes for a canal within six months, though Commander Selfridge considers the question already decided affirmatively by his last survey, and goes out this time chiefly to find a cheaper route, the estimated cost of canal over the route already found being $48,000,000.

Moral—An old Spanish writer says:—To return evil for good is devilish; to return good for good is human; but to return good for evil is godlike.

If a man be gracious to strangers it shows he is a citizen of the world; and his heart is no island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins them—Lord Bacon.

Horace Greeley men should go west immediately.

The horse disease has reached Valparaiso.

Death of Gen. Meade.

This distinguished soldier whose name will be remembered as long as the battle of Gettysburg and the turning part it formed, in the famous invasion of Lee, died at his residence in Philadelphia, last Wednesday evening, of pneumonia. General Meade was born at Cadiz, in Spain, in 1816 entered the United States Military Academy, at West Point, from the district of Columbia, and was graduated there June 30th, 1835, and was appointed seccond Lieutenant in the Third Artilery. He resigned his commission October 20, 1836, but after living six years in retirement, he re-entered the service, and received the appointment of second Lieutenant, in the Topographicall Engineers, May 19, 1842. He was breveted first-lieutenant, for his galantry at Monterey, in 1846, became first-lieutenant, in August, 1851, and was made Captain May 19, 1856. On the 31st of August, 1891, he was commissioned Brigadier-General of volunteers, and received the commission of Major. in the regular army in June, 1862 He commanded a brigade in McCall's division of Pennsylvania, reserves in the Army of the Potomac until september 1862, when he took command of a divission in the army corps under General Reynolds. General Meade took part in the battle of Mechanicsville June 26; of Gain's Mills, June 27 (a few days after he was wounded. but not seriously); of Antietam, September, 17, in which he was slightly wounded, and had two horses shot from under him; and at Fredricksburg, in December, 1862, when the Union forces under General Burnside, were defeated with so much slaughter. Two days after this repulse he superceded General Butterfield, in in the command of the Fifth Army Corps; was appointed Commander-in-Chief, of the army of the Potomac, June 26, 1863, and fought the famous battle of Gettysburg. After this battle, and the retreat of Lee, General Mead continued at the head of the Union army, until General Grant took his position as Commander-in-Chief, in April, 1864, General Meade serving under him. He was soon intrusted in the execution of one of the earliest of the most important operations of the campaign, which resulted in the down fall of Richmond—the passage of the Rapidan, in attempting which he was almost utterly defeated. In the later operations conducted by General Grant, in that memorable campaign in which General Meade played a prominent part. Among his soldiers, although he is noted for great severity and strictness, in the execution of every measure of decipline, he was very much beloved, perhaps more so than most officers of the war.

The Girdle of the Earth.

"I'll put a girdle round the earth in forty minutes."

Said Mr. Puck, in Shakespeare's play—the Midsummer Night's Dream: and his declared intention has remained, like a dream, unsubstantial and unaccomplished. But the girdle is extending now, and we may soon see the day when its two ends will be united in a complete magnetic circle around the globe.

A few days ago, the morning papers published a telegraphic despatch which came direct from Melbourne, in Australia,—an English city lying in latitude 37 degs, 48 mins. south of the equator, and in longitude 144 degs. 58 mins, east of Greenwich. This telegram came across the Australian Continent, under the Indian Ocean, through the Sunda Islands to Hindostan; under the Arabian Sea, up the Red Sea, across the Isthmus of Suez, under the Mediterranean, across Western Europe to London; under the Atlantic Ocean to New York, whence it flashed across the American Continent to San Francisco, where it was published on the same date that it brought from Melbourne,—sixteen thousand miles distant by its route. San Francisco lies in latitude 37 degs. 47 mins. north of the equator, and in longitude 122 degs. 26 mins. west of Greenwich; separted from Melbourne by about three-fourths of the earth's circumference.

This is the first telegraphic message that ever travelled so great a distance. The magnetic line on which it traveled, begins and ends on remote shores of the Pacific Ocean, in Protestant countries, in English speaking communities, and is a type of the enterprise of the Anglo-Saxon race.

The difference in mean time between Melbourne and San Francisco, by the present route of the telegraph line, is about fifteen hours. If the forwarding machinery were perfect and expeditions in its workings, such a telegram out to reach our Pacific coast within a few moments after its departure from Australia; which would be, by our solar time, nearly fifteen hours before it was sent! As, if it was despatched at six o'clock in the morning, from Melbourne, it would reach San Francisco at three o'clock in the afternoon of our previous day. So slow is the sun!

And when the girdle is completed by a telegraphic cable across the Pacific Ocean, a telegram, flying west from Melbourne, encircling the earth, will return to its starting point in less time than Puck's "forty minutes." Indeed, why will it not reach its original twenty-four hours before it was written? This will be bringing the ends of the earth together in a manner that destroys all time.

WISHART'S
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY!
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs disease, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Vinegar Bitters are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whisky, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion. Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual on the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters twice a week.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are the best safe-guard in cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their Sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef-steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

THE roads need repairing badly.

Bring on the rest of that wood you promised us.

A fine brick house, across from Mr. Ensley's, is almost completed.

The roof ing of the brick block has begun, and the buildings will soon be occupied.

We attended the Institute a few minutes at Waterloo, and found quite a large number present.

AFTER numerous drawbacks the Odd Fellows' Hall is finally approaching a second completion.

THE County Commissioners met in special session Monday, to approve of the bonds of the incoming officers.

Mr. Snow has not put in a very positive appearance yet, but Jack Frost has been quite faithful.

THE new Sheriff and Treasure, presented their bonds to the Commissioners last Monday.

THE Alleghenians want to come here and give us a concert. Agreed, if a place can be found large enough. If not, wait until the new Hall is ready.

JOHN W. BAKER, editor of the Columbia City Commercial is a candidate for director of Northern Prison. We hope John will succeed.

TOBY.—Uncle Toby has arrived in the shape of fine cigars just received by Smith & Hare. Toby or not Toby is now the question.

Now is a splendid time to have a dance in Snyder's new building. Some of the dancists should look up the matter, and take advantage of this opportunity.

THE brick work of the Snyder building adjoining the Ensley block was finished last Tuesday. A few days more will see the whole block completed.

THE nicest and best oysters we have ate this season came from the popular establishment of the Baker Bros. They receive them daily, and warrant them fresh For sale by the dish or can.

Trotting Match.

A citizens purse of fifty dollars is offered to all three year olds in DeKalb county at a match to come off next Friday, Nov. 15. This being for our local interest we hope all will be out in good time and make it interesting. Admission free.

THE Indiana Conservatory of Music is in a prosperous condition, and a large number of pupils are in daily attendance.—The managment are spraing no efforts to make it the most thorough institution of the kind in Fort Wayne. See card.

VOCAL MUSIC.—Why do not our friends, interested in good music, organize a society or club and get up practices each week like other civilized people? Let Auburn have something above mediocre in this line, for she has abundant material. Get together in this matter and you will find it beneficial.

WE are to have a regular silver band.—There has not been much excitement about the matter as the project was quietly conceived and as silently accomplished The instruments have "arroven" and here's a toot, there's a toot, and yonder is another toot, comes up from this howling wilderness. Make it first class, boys.

JAMES E. ROSE, Esq., attorney at law, is now permanently located at this place. His office will now be found in Case's building up stairs, first door to left. His apartments are fitted up with an eye to neatness and comfort, and his numerous friends will find him just as agreeable and affable as ever.

The "unofficial organ" at Waterloo says that Treasurer Ryan is a month ahead with his notice to tax-payers, and insinuates that it should have been left for his successor. Mistaken as usual. Last year it was published on the 19th of October, and this year on the 31st, so that instead of being a month ahead, he is ten days behind this year.

Baltimore & Ohio.

The work of securing the right-of-way for the Baltimore & Ohio line is slowly but surely going forward. A little more energy upon the part of the people will do much towards this end. All should take hold of the matter in earnest and give it their personal attention.

WE don't believe that all young ladies depend upon moonshine and love as a standard article of diet. In fact we know they don't for did'nt we see several at [illegible] the other day, waiting for the [illegible] with a hunk of bologna sausage in one hand and a Boston cracker in the other. Vell, vot of it.

H. D. CARL, the gentleman who published a paper in this place a few years ago, has started a new paper at Roanoke, Huntington Co., called Roanoke Register. A political paper not being Mr. Carl's forte just now, he goes it on the neutral. We hope he may succeed, but his neutrality [illegible] don't auger much success.

THE newspaper is just as necessary to fit a man for his true position in life as food or raiment. Show us a ragged, barefoot boy, rather than an ignorant one.—His head will never his feet in after life if he is well supplied with newspapers. Show us the child that is eager for newspapers. He will make the man of mark in after life if you gratify that desire for knowledge. Other things being equal, it is a rule that never fails. Give the children newspapers.

SPENCERVILLE SCHOOL.—We learn that James Burrier, Esq., a graduate of Bethany College, West Virginia, takes charge of [illegible] during the coming winter term, commencing Monday Nov. 18th, '72. Mr. Burrier comes highly recommended as a teacher, and from what we saw of him at the institute last week, we feel safe in assuring our friends at the above place that they have secured the services of one who is capable and earnest, and who having the energy, will bring their interest to the highest point of success.

Detroit & Eel River Railroad.

A meeting was held at the Court House last Wednesday evening, James E. Rose, Esq., presiding. President Collins made some very interesting remarks, in which he stated that the road would be built eastward, providing the citizens along the line would give the encouragement it merited. After a brief review of the affairs of the road, he gave assurance that if a subscription of about $4,000 a mile was raised the road would be built to the Ohio line without delay. This should be ascertained by January 1st, so that the necessary ties could be got out during the winter. A Committee of five was appointed composed of the following gentlemen: Geo. Ensley, E. Weaver, F. D. Ryan, Wm. McIntyre and A. L. Hollopeter.

There are but few citizens in Auburn and vicinity but what can do something towards this project. It will be of great local importance to us, and will contribute largely to our material prosperity.—Let every one give what they can, and there will be no difficulty in securing the required amount.

THE editors of the Republican paper at Fort Wayne, are going for the Postoffice, the name of one is T. S. Taylor, and Alexander in the other. We bet on T. S. for when he goes for anything, he never fails to bring it. For instance that cake pyramid, railroad passes, &c. Dumm, of the Sentinel, neutralizes the matter thusly:

"The happiest man in the city is T. S. He has a document in hand which he reads in silence, and over which he grins as never T. S. grinned before. In fact he out Schuylers Colfax as a grinnist. Said document is a letter, said letter bears a frank in token of respect for a certain resolution in the Philadelphia platform, and the contents of said letter smell of Jay Count, and the rooms beneath the reader's feet. T. S. has been faithful, persistent, liberal, and why should he not be reward ed? A better fellow does not live in the city, or a more deserving one."

The Natural Method of Teaching.

Nature has her method of teaching, which is pleasant as well as instructive.—If the student will only persue nature's method, he need not complain of the tediousness of the journey to the temple of knowledge. And the teacher who adopts this method never fails to awaken an interest in the minds of his pupils. Man is made to learn as well as to eat, drink and sleep. Why, then, should so many remain in ignorance? The reason is found in the unnatural and mechanical processes generally taken to impart instruction. They commonly consist of such a hash of abstract rules and isolated facts, that the child which is compelled to swallow them must have an unusually strong mental constitution if it does not become heartily disgusted at the end of two or three terms of such teaching. Now, it is a fact patent to all, that the mind loves knowledge as the stomach craves food. The difficulty consists in not knowing how to feed the mind. As this is the first impediment in the way to successful instruction, it behooves the faithful teacher to study how he may remove it.

The ultimate rule of art, that nothing which is unnatural is agreeable, or lovely, must be applied to the practice of teaching as well as the other professions. In order to understand how to present truth in the most natural and easy manner, it is necessary to have a thorough acquaintance with the principles and habits of mental faculties, and the order in which they proceed in the discovery of truth, must be thoroughly understood. There is a certain order of connection, observed by the different powers of the mind, which leads from the known to the unknown.—And he who does not follow the natural order of mental action may study very diligently, and yet make but little progress in securing a practical education.—In our subsequent papers on this subject we shall endeavor, in as far as we are able, to show what the natural order of mental development is.

GREELEY

Entirely Defeated!

AND

Falls in the Bloody Chasm!

We have a mournful pleasure, or a pleasing magnanimity, we don't know which, to perform. Greeley, you know Greeley. He was for President. Now he ain't. Well, Greeley he wore running for an office, and Grant, being on horseback, beat him. You see there was a hole or a chasm as H. G. called it, in the way and he thought it was nothing, that he could reach across it just as easy as falling off a log. But he reckoned without a host (of voters). When U. S. came to it he jumped it with his horse, but uncle Horace in attempting to shake with a fellow on the side, fell in, and that was the eend on him. The main reason why H. G. was not elected was that he did not get enough States. If Grant hadn't been round, Greeley would have been ahead, as he beat O'Conner in every State. There was another reason, the hor(ace)se disease was bad in New York, and it kept spreading until it was everywhere. Whenever a thing spreads, then you may know it gets thin, and thus you may account for H. G's. vote. We'll be opposed hereafter to having elections when such things are around.

For the Courier.

Teachers' Institute.

The Teachers' Institute was held at Waterloo, Nov. 4th, 1872. Organized by Superintendent J. A. Barns, on Monday at 1½ o'clock p. m. Opened with prayer by Rev. Resolved, That we request the Legislature of this State to enact a law establishing County Superintendency.

Resolved, That the State Legislature be requested to so amend our school law as to make the present public fund contingent upon its being supplemented by a local tax sufficient to keep the schools in session at least six months in the year.

Resolved, That we return our thanks to the gentlemen who have instructed us during the session of the Institute—to the choir for their excellent music, and to Trustees of the Presbyterian and M. E. Churches for the use of their rooms.

Resolved, That we extend our thanks to the citizens of Waterloo for the very pleasant and liberal manner in which they have entertained the members of the Institute.

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be sent to our member of the House of Representatives, that they be published in the Auburn COURIER and Waterloo Press.

J. W. WANLOW,
J. J. VANAUKEN, } Committee.
L. L. HAMLIN,

A poetical selection, entitled The Bells was read by H P Colgrove, a short address to the teachers by the Examiner.—Closed.

In the evening, a song by the choir questions and answers, reading by L L Hamil and H P Colgrove, the Institute adjourned. The whole number in attendance was 138.

Upon each Dog, more than one, owned, kept or harbored within the county,	2.00

Notice is hereby given that I will attend at my office in Auburn, from the 15th of October until the third Monday in April, 1873, for the purpose of collecting the above Taxes.

On all taxes remaining unpaid on the third Monday of April, 1873, the law requires ten per cent. penalty, and six per cent. interest, besides cost of collection to be added. Each tax-payer will, therefore, find it to his or her advantage to call and pay their taxes before they become delinquent, as by so doing they will save themselves the penalty and costs, and me an unpleasant duty.

On the 15th of December I am required by law to advertise real estate for sale for all unpaid delinquincies for 1871, and former years, and all persons interested are requested to call and pay their delinquent tax before that date, and save expenses.

Tax-payers will please remember the Third Monday in April is the extent of time that can be given for receiving taxes without the penalty, as my settlement must be completed at a time fixed by law, and cannot be delayed a single day.

Resolutions.

Hall of Auburn Lodge No. 116, I. O. O. F November 6th, 1872.

WHEREAS, We have just returned from the burial services of our departed brother C. S. HARE, and that in his death we have lost a respected member, one who thus recently, yet heartily endorsed the principles and teachings of our noble order, our community a highly and esteemed citizen, to his family a kind husband and tender parent, therefore,

Resolved, That while we feel heavily smitten in this bereavement we acknowledge the hand of a righteous Providence who holds the destinies of individuals and nations in his own hands and "who doeth all things well."

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved widow and fatherless children, and pledge our Brotherhood to watch over and care for them in all their afflictions.

Resolved, That the Wardens chair, having been made vacant by the death of our Brother together with our Lodge room, be draped in mourning thirty days, as a token of respect to our departed Brother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to the family of the deceased, a copy be placed on file in this Lodge and that they be published in the Auburn COURIER.

W. GRISWOLD,
J. B. CASEBEER, } Committee.
A. ROBBINS,

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says:

WE have a letter from Claude De Haven poet and sketch writer, that Mrs. Josie Mansfield who was several times introduced to the late lamented Jim Fisk, and who is also slightly acquainted with Edward Stokes, gentleman, cell No. 44, Tombs, will deliver a lecture in Fort Wayne, in the early part of December. Her subject—not Jim Fisk—but the title of her lecture will be "Put yourself in her Place." That's what created all the disturbance. But let Josie come—Josie is pretty. New York will give her an audience—the elite of Boston will do her honor by a rousing attendance, and why shouldn't Ft. Wayne shake hands across the bloody chasm.

Brainard's Musical World, for November, fully sustains its high reputation as a literary and artistic Journal of the first rank, and is a welcome addition to our table.

This number contains three beautiful pieces of music. My own Bright Island home, a song and chorus of unusual excellence; Too Late, too late, Ye cannot enter now; Miss Lindsay's famous sacred song, and Mountain Sylph Schottische, one of the most sparkling compositions of the talented Charles Kinkel.

Subscription price $1.00 a year. Send ten cents to S. Brainard's Sons, Cleveland, Ohio, for a specimen copy and a copy of their new and attractive list of premiums for new subscribers.

A Representative House.

Among the multitude of different branches of trade in Fort Wayne, none are of more importance than the boot and shoe trade. This branch is well represented; prominent among them all is the shoe house of Markley, Schrader & Co. They came to Fort Wayne in 1866, and by their gentlemanly deportment and close attention to business, they have acquired a trade perhaps not excelled by any house in their line. Not satisfied with bargains given their customers heretofore, they propose to do still better for them in the future. Their stock is very large, being a full line of everything needed for mens, boys and youths, women, Misses and children's wear. They are giving great bargains; one cannot know how cheap they are selling, unless they call. Examine the goods and learn prices. We advise all in want of boots, shoes or rubbers to give them a call. tf.

PAY UP.

All subscribers indebted to us for a year or more for the COURIER must pay up by January 1st, or the paper will be discontinued, and the accounts placed in proper hands for collection. We can't afford to wait longer than two years for our money.

POCKET DICTIONARY.—Webster's pocket dictionary in its present shape, is a great improvement over all previous editions and all similar works. In the first place it is neatly printed, and bound in morocco Then it contains 200 pictorial illustrations which give a much clearer idea of the meaning of many words than could possibly be conveyed by the usual definition. The little volume, while being no larger than an ordinary pocket-book, embraces in its vocabulary a careful selection of over 18 000 of the most important words of the language, with definitions sufficiently clear, though necessarily brief, to meet the wants of any one. Prefixed to the work are tables of money, weight and measure, abbreviations, word and phrases from foreign languages, rules for spelling, etc. It is in fact a most valuable little book, and is doubly worth the dollar it costs. It is very beautifully and substantially bound, with tucks and gilt edges.—The Publishers Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., 138 and 140 Grand-st., New York will forward it by mail on receipt of One Dollar, or it can be bought almost anywhere.

To restore the impaired nervous system without injury to the constitution; and to eradicate kidney, bladder and glandular disease, diabetes, gravel, retention or incontinence of urine, female weakness and uterine complaints generally, and to tone and stimulate the nervous system, administer Smolander's Buchu. It will surely produce the desired effect and counteract any of the ills arising from any of these maladies.

Rather Slow.

A Railroad runs from Oswego to Syracuse. It is thirty miles long. I rode on it, and those cars moved so slow that if you want the draft in your face you have to ride backward to get it. They never have hot journals on that road; the great danger is the stuffing and gravy around the axles will freeze. The screech of the locomotive is very faint kind o' like the warble of a four-year-old boy blowing through a knot-hole in a board fence. It is capable of giving a grasshopper a thrill of alarm, but won't scare a crow worth a leather cuss. The conductor, engineer and fireman always walk ahead of the train to look for broken rails, and the cows always run on ahead of them to keep out of the dust. I tried an experiment.—Two trains were passing, and I stuck a match out of the window and let the head of it rub against a passenger car. It went so slow I couldn't strike a light. If you ever take a trip from Oswego to Syracuse over that road you want to take lots of clothes, a whole ham and barrel of corned beef along with you.—Ex.

Manhood; How Lost, & Restored

Just published, a new addition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of Spermatorrhœy or Seminal weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage etc; also Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self indulgence or sexual extravagance.

Price, in sealed envelope only 6 cents.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a 30 year practice that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of medicine or application of the knife, but by means which every sufferer may cure himself cheaply and privately.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and man.

Elegance Does Not Make a Home.

I never saw a garment to fine for man or a maid; there never was a chair too good for a cobler a cooper or a king; never a house too fine to shelter a humane head. These elements above us, the gorgeous sky, the imperial sun, are not too good for the human race. Elegance fits the man. But do we not value these little tools of house keeping more than they are worth and sometime mortgage a home for the mahogany that is in it? I had rather eat my meals off the head of a barrel, or dress after the fashion of John the Baptist in the wilderness, or sit on a block of wood all my lifetime, before I got to a home and take so much pains with the outside that the inside was as hollow as an empty nut shell. Beauty is a great thing but beauty of garments, house and furniture, is a very tawdry ornament compared with domestic love. All the elegance in the world will not make a house, and I would give more for a spoonfull of real hearty love, than for a whole shipload of furniture, and all the gorgeousness that all the upholsterers in the world can gather together.—Theodore Parker.

Hydrophobia.

Whatever charlatans may say there is no known remedy for canine madness. When bitten, the surest means to escape infection is the aplication of a red hot iron, with a firm hand, and as soon as possible. A curtain-rod, a small poker, a bit of stout wire a knife or any iron, nearest at hand, heated to a bright red will suffice. With this the wound must be sounded and burned. It is good to put the iron into the fire again and repeat the operation effectually. The pain is quite supportable. M. Leblanc, senior, says, that the cauterization, gives the person bitten, not exactly pleasure, but decided satisfaction, because the sense of preservation and safety completely overpowers the pain inflicted. In Hayti, where canine madness is common they apply gun powder to the wonded parts and then set fire to it. After this, a blister and mercurial treatment, carried to salivation, complete the cure or rather prevent the disease. Of course after these necessary precautions, any known nostrum may be employed.—Old women's precepts, and popular prescriptions can do no harm, and may do good in keeping up the patients spirits, and inspire him with hopes of a favorable result.

Out of twenty persons that is bitten it is uncertain how many will go mad perhaps none. But it is quite certain they will not all go mad. The cause of their escape is unknown; but such escapes makes the fortunes of charlatans, cunning men and practicers of superstitions. But it is a reassuring thought, likely to have a favorable influence, without hindering the employment of rational precaution, to know that, although bitten, it is quite possible not to be touched by the poison.

Sambo and the Rat.

The partiality of the darkey for the sun is proverbial. At noonday, with the fierce rays shining down on his bare head the musketoes singing round him, and the flies making amorous dalliancel with his nose and lips, he sleeps and dreams.

One old darkey, in New Orleans, has daily, for some months past, selected the doorstep of a prominent resident for his noonday nap.

Being driven off one day he comes the next.

With his head thrown back and his mouth wide open, he snores away to the exceeding discomfort of the inmates.

Called to the door by this novel diapason, a few days since, the lady of the house concluded she would try an experiment.

For this purpose she procured a small piece of ice and dropped it into the huge orifice that served as Sambo's mouth.

It disappeared like a shot, and with a cough and a snort Sambo started to his feet.

Ugh, he grunted, as the ice sent violent thrills through his stomach. What dis? and his fingers clutched nervously at the afflicted parts.

Just then some one in the house cried out that a big rat had run down Uncle Sam's throat.

This added terror to his pain. He rolled on the ground and called lustily for help.

For goodness, missus, he's knawin' out of me. I fee him. Oh, golly, he kill'n me.

And the whites of the darkey's eyes protruding like saucers, and the convulsed and anguished face showed that real pain was strongly enhanced by his imaginary terror.

Oh, golly, how he do jump and kick about.

And Sambo again gave himself up to a paroxysm of lamentation.

Drink warm water, Uncle Sam, and drown him, said the lady.

Without a moment's hesitation Sam started for the water plug.

He turned on the crank and the water started.

Sam glued his lips to the gozzle until his sides were puffed out like an inflated balloon.

How do you feel now, Uncle Sam, the lady inquired, as Sam staggered back to his feet.

I guess he's drowned, missus; but here's what's troublin' dis chile; how's dat rat gwine to git out'n dar?

A specimen of the 'coming obituary:—Died, in thirty-fifth year of his age, John Smith, husband of the Hon. Jane Smith, at her residence in Franklin, at 6 o'clock. Mr. Smith was a meek and quiet husband, beloved for the graces of a cultivated nature. He excelled the domestic virtues; as a cook he was surpassed by few; as a nurse he was equaled by none.

Jones, who never could understand a plain statement, always used to interrupt the conversation by the inquiry,

'How so?'

This peculiarity having come to the knowledge of an inventive genius he at once engaged Jones, and has applied for a patent on a new How-so-ing machine.

Call a lady a 'chicken,' and ten to one she will be angry with you. Tell her she is 'no chicken,' and twenty to one she will be more angry still.

VOLLMER'S Elixir of PYROPHOSPHATE OF IRON AND PERUVIAN BARK.
In this preparation are combined the valuable properties and virtues of Peruvian Bark, with Phospholeus and Iron, in the shape of Pyrophosphate of Iron. This Elixir will be found of great advantage in Dyspepsia, Indigestion, weak and delicate Stomachs, and generally in weak and delicate states of the system.
The ingredients in this Elixir are skillfully blended into a delightful Cordial, making it the most agreeable and palatable combination to the taste, in use. Oc. 30, '70.

FOUTZ'S CELEBRATED Horse and Cattle Powders.
This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.
It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.
To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.
In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

HOW TO GO WEST

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

W. W. WORTHINGTON, Supt.

A Man who knew Ann Street

In coming from Syracuse I met with a contretemps, or rather a country temps.

Says he, Be you from York?

Says I, I'm your vinegar.

Says he, Much acquainted down in that part?

That's me exactly.

Do you know Ann Street?

Unusally so.

Well, I declare, I want to know if you really do know Ann Street?

Sure as a pickery.

Well, how does she get along?

She is flourishing.

I suppose she is growing finely?

Growing. I suppose she is a growing! They are putting up a building seven or eight stories high on one of her corners for the 'Herald.'

He looked at me amazed, and says he,

Putting up a building on one of her cornors?

Yes.

Look here, stranger there's some mistake. I guess the Ann Street I mean and the Ann Street you mean are two different people. I was talking about a niece of mine who went to New York a year ago to learn the millinery business.

Why in thunder didn't you say so, says I?

I did.

BEFORE THE FLOOD.

Antediluvian life had its advantages; there is no denying that. With an existence of nine hundred sixty and nine years before him man could do much. He could be his own 'oldest inhabitant,' and never remember anything; if a Shakespeare, he could celebrate his own tercentenary; he could look back with pride upon at least two hundred constitutional crises, and nine hundred successive seasons which brought the green pea of the spring and the fresh oyster of the fall. In those blissful ages, when time was reckoned by months instead of hours, and men set their eight year clocks by the sixty-three year comets, a fellow could, if lazily inclined, lay in bed till September, or go on a ten years' drunk. When he went out to make a friendly call he could say to his family:

So-long; I'm just going to drop into Methusaleh's for a couple of years; don't wait dinner for me; or, addressing his toddling infant of eighty, he might give him permission to go out and play till 1895, but insist on his coming home then, so as not to keep his fond parents sitting up for him.

Life assurance would be cheaper under such a system, and the rate of interest, when a man gave notes at six hundred years renewable for three hundred years more, must necessarily have been proportionately low.

The peculiarities of pre-Noachic existence would have been made most strikingly manifest had three or four of these old sinners paddled their own canoe through the flood, survived, increased and multiplied.

So, would observe a hale old man of nine hundred to his companion, a jolly, middled aged septcenterarian, they are at it again, prating of reforms and amendments, and constitutionality, to us, who remembered the Heptarchy. Alfred died the year I was born, but I remember Wm as if it was only yesterday. I was only a child then. Well, Bill was a good fellow Once—

Yes, might interrupt here a beardless youth of four hundred and eighty, my uncle often told me that—

Little boys, would interpose the senior, in tones of dignified rebuke, must be seen not heard. If you cannot keep still while your elders are speaking, Elem, my son, the nurse must put you to bed. Well, as I was saying—

True, here would observe Lamech, and what snobbishness it is in folks to talk of their long decent, and Norman or Knickerbocker ancestors. We remember all that, don't we? Well, everybody had ancestors then, only they can't all trace them.

Parvenus, Lamech, parvenus, all of them Talk of your old families to me, whose great grandfather remembers Adam.—We've seen a thing or two in our century. Confound this rheumatism, I caught cold sitting in a draft about the end of the 15th century, and every hundred years or so I have a twinge of it.

That was about the time Christopher Columbus sailed to discovered America.

The same year. Poor Chris! I knew him well. You knew Smith?

Kirby?

No, John, the fellow that Pocahontas got struck with. But you were only a boy at that time.

The revival of these happy days has, however, not yet come. It is the error, not the fault, of many truly great and good men and women that they discount the future, and are abused for laboring under what appears to the vulgar and unsentimental hallucination. To play the antediluvian nonsense. It would be well, for pew-holder and preacher, reader and writer, could all remember that there has been a flood, and the duration of human life is dwindled to a span.—St. Louis Democrat.

Jonathan Abroad.

The other evening, during the playing of 'Yankee Doodle,' an immense American rose on his seat in the Champs Elysees, and roared out an accompaniment.

The musical critic says it sounded very much like the agony cry of a tom cat held up by the tail or a dog howling after a kicking.

On the termination of his little barkarolle, or else his cat scream, he sank in his seat overcome, exclaiming,

Hurrah for the United States.

Antidote for Poson.

We find the following commended:

If a person swallows any poison whatever, or has fallen into convulsions from having overloaded the stomach, an instantaneous remedy, more efficient and applicable in a larger number of cases than any half a dozen medicines we can now think of, is a heaping teaspoon of common salt, and as much ground mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacup of warm or cold water, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach, and lest there be any remnant of a poison, however small, let the white of an egg, or a teacup of strong coffee, be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet; because these very common articles nullify a large number of virulent poisions than any medicines in all the shops.

Advice for a Dinner.

At the restaurant of a wealthy and jolly old caterer in Hamburg, a gourmand who had not a shilling in his pocket feasted sumptuously on all the delicacies the bill of fare afforded. When he had finished his repast and also drank his bottle of Rudesheimer, he quietly said to his landlord:

I have no money to pay your bill, my friend; but if you will let me do so, I will give you a piece of advice that is worth more than the money.

The landlord, though taken aback at the cool effrontery of his impecunious guest, laughed and said to him:

Well, sir, if you have no money to pay for what you have eaten and drunk, let us have your advice.'

All right replied the stranger, now, listen:

If you ever should be sent to the penitentiary, and have there to walk on the treadmill, always be sure to choose the left side. You will find it, my friend, much easier.

Progress of Agriculture.

Our increase in all the chief articless of agricultural produce during the last decade, as shown by the census report, is something enormous.

Wine has increased fourteen-fold since 1850, and nearly double in the last decade, California being its chief producer.

Hops have increased ten-fold in the time, and more than doubled in the last ten years, New York growing two-thirds of the whole crop.

Barley has increased six-fold.

Flax six-fold.

Flaxseed trebled.

Wheat trebled.

Oats doubled.

Irish patotoes have only increased one-third.

Sweet potatoes have decreased one-half.

Live stock have doubled in value, and now amount to the handsome total of one thousand five hundred and twenty-five millions of dollars, or an average of nearly two hundred dollars for every family in the nation.

Animals slaughtered have nearly quadrupled in value, now amounting to four hundred millions of dollars annually.

Wool has increased from sixty to one hundred millions of pounds.

Cotton is half a million of bales above what it was in 1850, and three-fifth of its amount in 1860.

In only one instance is there a decrease of an important product, and that is in Indian corn, which falls short of the amount reported in 1860 by seventy-eight millions of bushels, or ten per cent. of the whole.

In some of the lesser products, however, the downcome is considerable Silk cocoons are only a third of their former amount; hemp a sixth; peas and beans and rice about a third each. Buckwheat has decreased from seventeen millions of bushels to nine, and rye from twenty one millions of bushels to sixteen.

Don't do it.

Don't throw brick-bats in your neighbor's garden. You might need them to patch your chimney.

Don't bite a ten-penny nail into in your anger. In view of the recent advance in the price of nails, it might be considered extravagant.

Don't wear nankeen pants in January. It isn't fashionable.

Don't ask a poor man to endorse your note at a bank. Poor men have trouble enough.

Don't throw a full jeweled gold watch at a dog. You might cripple the dog for life.

Don't bite off your nose to spite your face. A man looks so odd without any nose.

Don't speak ill of your neighbor. He might resent it.

Don't go to church to show your new clothes. Inquisitive boys might ask what tailor had been victimized.

Don't quarrel with a mad bull when you are drunk. You might get a horn too much.

Don't chop down a hickory tree with a dull axe. It spoils the looks of the wood entirely.

Don't never cheat your boot-black. 'Tis wrong to teach the young to distrust mankind.

Don't spank the baby in your wife's presence. Mothers prefer to monopolize that business.

Don't ask a miser for charity. The statute against cruelty to animals protects hogs.

Don't try to beat a butcher out of a steak. 'Tis foolish to stake your reputation for a trifle.

Brains.

Dickens in an old number of his paper, All the Year Round, says:

The part of the holding of a farmer or land owner which pays best for cultivation, is the small estate within the ring fence of his skull. Let him begin with the right tillage of his brains, and it shall be well with his grains, roots, herbage and forage, sheep and cattle; they shall thrive and he shall thrive. Practice with science, is now the adopted motto of the Royal Agricultural Society.

A clerical passenger by the Metis who floated around all night, and reached land at last, with vived thoughts of his wife's anxiety, rushed to the nearest telegraph office and sent his message:

Dear P, I am saved. Break it gently to my wife!

Of all the reverses experienced by me, said a penurious Croesus dwelling in a fashionable avenue, the only one that gave me satisfaction was my discovery that I could reverse paper shirt colars and wear them again.

A very genteel and aimable young man is now insane. He splits his hair in the middle. The other day in combing it he chanced to get two more hairs on one side than on the other. This destroyed the balance of the head and overturned his brain. He makes a very gentle lunatic, however.

Anecdote of the Road.

A lawyer riding through a town, stoppep at a cottage to inquire the way. The lady of the house told him he must keep straight on for some time, and then turn to the right; but said that she herself was going to pass the road he must take, and that if he would wait a few minutes she would show him the way.

Well, bad company is better than none—make haste.

After jogging on five or six miles, the gentleman asked if he had yet come to the road he must take.

Oh. yes, said she, we passed it two or three miles back, but I thought, as bad company was better than none, I would keep you along with me.

A Good Hitching Post.

The following anecdote, which first appeared in the newspapers many years ago is said to have been founded on an actual occurrence. Although it may not illustrate the democratic simplicity of the people of Vermont to-day, it is nevertheless a good story, and also good for many years longer life in the newspapers:

Hallo, you man with a pail and frock, can you inform me whether his honor the Governor of Vermont resides here? said a British officer, as he brought his fiery horse to a stand in front of Governor Chittenden's dwelling.

He does, was the respose of the man, still wending his way to a pig-sty.

Is his honor at home? continued the man of spurs.

Most certainly, sir.

Take my horse by the bit, then, said the officer. I have business to transact with your master.

Yes, sir.

Without a secon bidding, the man did as requested, and the officer alighted, and made his way to the door, giving the panel several hearty raps with the butt of of his whip. The good dame answered the summons in person; and having seated the officer and ascertained his desire to see the Governor, departed to inform her husband of the guest's arrival; but on ascertaining that the officer had made a hitching post of her husbaed, she immediately returned and informed him that her husband was engaged in the yard, and could not well wait upon him and his horse at the same time. The predicament can be better imagined than it can be described.

Gambling for a Life.

BY COLONEL PRENTISS INGRAHAM

All was a scene of gaity at the pretty village of F——, situated in one of the most fertile districts in the rich State of Kentuckey. The occasion of the joyous demonstration was one of mingled pleasure and pain. The United States had called on her sons to brave the dangers of war, the country was aroused, and an army under the starry flag was about to invade Mexico.

In F—, a gallant company of citizen soldiers had been raised, and upon the morrow were to leave their pleasant homes for the scene of war.

It was the night before their departure, and one of the wealthy citizens of of the town had given a grand entertainment in their honor, and thus all was pleased confusion, in preparing for the gay scene, at Judge Bonner's large and handsome mansion.

The generous Judge had spared neither pains nor expense to make their entertainment one of great magnificence, and when the evening arrived, he recieved his numerous guests aided by his only child, a child of seventeen years of age.

Lida Bonner was the acknowledged belle of F—' and she was beloved for her beauty, and lovely character, not only by her young gallants of the village, but also by her school companions for at the opening of this story she was yet a schoolgirl.

The company from F—, was commanded by Captain Roy Worthington, a planter of means, and as handsome as he was popular. His first Lieutenant was one of his most intimate friends and yet between the two there came a slight feud for both Roy Worthington and Dart Bradford loved Lida Bonner To both of the young men the beautiful girl listened, for she was a sad coquette, but toward the gallant young captain her heart had awakened, with feelings of love, and yet neither knew his fate at her hands upon that day. the eve of their departure for the far off Mexico.

"Lida, are you totally indifferent to me? Can I not hope, even if I may hope to return to dear old F—, that you will not have forgotten me?" said Roy.

Indeed you are dear to me Roy, and I promise that you shall not be forgotten.

"Do you love me Lida? Will you promise me this little hand of my return?'

"I promise, Roy."

And thus the two pledged their love and once more they entered the briliently illuminated parlors, of the mansion, for they had wandered of in the garden.

"Miss Lida this is my dance, I believe?" and Dart Bradford stood before the lovers.

'Yes, I'll see you again, Roy,'

And the young girl was whirled away in the dance.

"Will you promenade once around the garden Lida?"

'Yes Dart, for how could I refuse you soldiers any thing,"

The blue eyes were turned with full force upon her companion.

For some moments they walked in silence, and then Dart stopped suddenly and said:

'Lida I asked you to come here that I might tell you that I love you,; that I—"

"Oh Dart do not pain me, let me be frank with you, for I would not raise a hope in your heart that I cannot fulfill. I am engaged to another.' said she.

'The other is—'

"Roy Worthington, your best friend.'

'Be it so, Miss Bonner, shall we return to the mansion?'

And offering her his arm they were soon again mingling mid the gay dances.

From the villiage in Kentuckey the scene is changed to sunny Mexico.—seated in a tent within the Mexican lines are two young officers unarmed, and their surroundings prove that they are prisoners. Though pale, and with saddened faces, easily to be recognized is Roy Worthington and Dart Bradford. The former wears his arm in a sling, and appears to be suffering, although his face looks brave and determined.

'Well Dart, this will settle the ambition of one of us,'

'Yes, Roy. Our poor company sacrificed in the last desperate charge and ourselves prisoners, you wounded, and one of us condemned to die, in retaliation of that officer spy whom General Taylor shot some days since it is really too bad"

An officer entered, dressed in gorgeous Mexican uniform.

"Gentlemen, he said, it is the dicition that one of you must die. The commanding officer has determined not to make a selection, but that you shall play a game of chance—that is gamble for your lives—the victor is to be spared.

"That is useless. Let me be the victim.' And Roy Worthington stepped forward, while a gleam of hope overspread Dart's face.

'You are brave and generous, but I prefer a game of chance to settle it, said the commanding officer entering the tent, accompanied by his aids.

'What say you, Dart?'

'Very well, let this end the farce'

And Dart Bradford's face darkened.

Seated at the table dice were placed before the two young officers and while the Mexicans stood around eagerly watching the result, the throwing for life or death commenced. Three dice were used, and three throws allowed to each officer, the one throwing the highest number escaped. Roy Worthington was the first to throw the dice, and with a firm hand he rattled the dice in the box, and threw them upon the table.

Three, five, and six—fourteen! Throw again, sir," said the Mexican commander, 'You throw well sir.—Once more. Two sixes and a three—

Fifteen! Twice fifteen and fourteen are forty four. Now it is your turn sir,' and the box as handed to Dart Bradford, who took it with a hand that slightly trembled and threw the dice on the table.

'One to, and—" But before the number could be counted, Dart's hat fell upon the table, and one of them was knocked to the ground.

'How unluckey! You'll have to commence over again.'

Again taking the box, Dart made another throw, and the Mexican called out.

'Two three, four—nine! A decided pallor spread over the young mans face. He again threw the dice on the table. 'Three sixes! You are lucky, sir, that throw may save your life.—Now try again.'

The hand holding the dice box visibly shook, as the last throw was made; but ere the dice could be counted, the table gave way, with the weight upon it, and again the little regular blocks upon whose numbers a life hung, were scattered.

A frown darkened the commander's brow, and several of the staff conversed together in low tones, as the table was being set up again and the last chance was made.

Three sixes! Eighteen and twenty seven are forty five. You have won. A close game of chance,' said the Mexican, as Dart sprang to his feet, unable to conceal his great joy of having escaped.

'Well Dart, I have lost. Here old fellow are my papers, watch and pocket book. This ring now belongs to Lida. I made my will in her favor before I left F—. Good bye, old fellow, and tell them that I died bravely.—Gentlemen I am ready.' And with a firm pearing the American turned to his captors and was led away for execution, while Dart Bradford was forwarded to the lines, to be exchanged for a Mexican officer of equal rank with himself.

Three years went by. Peace once more reigned in the land, and the shattered remnants of the F— guards returned home, crowned with a glorious victory.

Dart bradford returned with them with the rank of Colonel, for he had been promoted to that grade.

After reaching the American lines, after the game of chance he had played with Roy Worthington, he had forwarded the things to Lida Bonner, entrusted to his care, and told her what had happened, and that he had begged Roy to die in his stead, as no ties of requited love bound him to the world with aticipations of future happiness

Lida deeply mourned for him and wrote Dart a beautiful letter, thanking him for the noble part he had acted, toward his rival and his friend, for she believed all he had said, and upon the return of the gallant Colonel, it was not many weeks before he gained the promise of Lida Bonner to become his wife.

The joy of her bridal eve was dimmed to Lida Bonner, by the thought of poor Roy lying far away in a foreign land; for although she loved Dart with a true affection, she could not feel for him the same deep love she had given to his friend Roy Worthington.

All was in readiness for the ceremony; the minister stood book in hand, ready to join Dart Bradford and Lida Bonner together as man and wife when the maiden uttered a shriek just as she entered the parlor, leaned upon the arm of her farther, and swooned away.

All present was transfixed with amasement, for there before them, before the open balcony window stood Roy Worthington, emancipated and pale, as if by long suffering, and dressed in his blue uniform. He stood before them, and gazed upon his former friend.

'Why Roy we all thougnt you dead! what does this mean?" asked Dart stepping forward.

'It means sir, that by false representation, you are now standing where I should be, the promssed husband of Lida Bonner—"

'Sir, you presume, I—'

'Pardon me—not that I anticipate that I shall ever again win the affections of Miss Bonner, but to open her eyes to the character of the man she is about to marry, I now say what I do,' and as Roy Worthington spoke, he stepped forward, and faced the assembled guests, while Lida having returned to concieusness was an attentive listener.

'When a prisoner in Mexico with Col. Bradford, one of us was doomed to die. A game of chance was decided between us, I lost fairly, I believe, for I trusted my friend was honorable; he won life, and was exchanged the same day. The commander of the Mexicans spared my life; long years was I a prisoner, but now that the was is over, I have returned home, and with me is my friend, General Valdo de, Riva. who will now explain the conduct of Col. Bradford, when he gambled for our lives.

Roy Worthington ceased speaking as he did so, a gorgeously uniformed officer stepped from the balcony and stood beside him. The dark skin, and quick black eyes, donoted his nation, as well as did his uniform, and in broken accounts said:

"This gentleman and that one were my prisoners; my government demanded one shot in retaliation for a Mexican officer, shot by General Taylor. I wished not to make a choice of them, so I left it to a game of chance, who should die. Captain Worthington acted most honorably, that one dishonorably and a coward, for he cheated, as my staff and I will verify, while his friend nobly offered to take his place. Then I saved Captain Worthington's life, and confined him a prisoner for the war. Now we stand here to face that coward." and the Mexican's eyes fell on Dart.

'Go! Never come near me again!" and Lida Bonner pointed to the door, while her angry eyes fell on the man, who, in a few moments more would have been her husband.

'Captain Worthington, you have my warmest welcome home; Colonel Bradford leave my house.' and as Judge Bonner spoke he grasped Roy Worthington's hand.

'Curse you for all this," exclaimed Dart Bradford, as he left the house. Nay, more, he left the State, and has never been heard from; while the brave man he had deceived, soon after married Lida Bonner, the only woman he had ever loved, and General De Riva was the groomsman, for between the American and Mexican a strong friendship had sprung into existance.

'Necessary' Articles

A few years ago a cow, a pig, the family Bible, with one suit of clothes, a knife and fork, plate, cup and saucer, for each member of the family, were all that were exempt from execution in a matter of debt in most States of this Union. But now by legislative enactments or the decisions of the courts, there is little that can be taken from an unwilling debtor by process of law. In most of the Western States the homestead is exempt from execution, and if the owner is a farmer such stock, instruments and seed as are necessary for carrying on the farm, together with suitable provisions for the family till the next harvest.

In the case of a mechanic he is entitled to the tools that are needed to carry on his trade. So, too, professional men can hold their libraries, or such portions of them as are necessary for carrying on their business. By slow degrees the courts have greatly enlarged the number of things that shall be regarded as necessaries.

Quite recently Judge Ingraham, of New York, decided that watches are necessary, and that they are therefore exempt, under the statute of the State from seizure and sale on execution.—He based his decision on the ground that the laws of that State exepted clothing and 'other necessary articles.' As this is a progressive age, and one in which creditors have few rights that debtor are bound to respect, it is by no means improbable that the coming judge shall include diamond breastpins, dogs and trotting horses among the 'necessary things' that may be exempt from execution.

Marriage Ceremony.

A Dutch Justice of Sullivan county New York, was called upon a few days since to join a loving couple in the holy bonds of wedlock' which ceremony he performed in the following words, as taken down by our corresdent.

Justice—We mite shust so vell go on mit dings. Stfland up a leedle here. But your hands together.—Herr Grospy, do you like dees young voman vell enuff to pe your vife?

A.—Yes.

Justice.—Vill you sherish und norish her in sickness und in health, und off dis yound vomans have anydings to do mit aundder man, vill you sherish her und share mit her?

A.—Yes.

Justice.—Mees Miller, do you like dis mans vell enuff to pe your husband?

A.—Yes.

Justice.—Vill you sherish and norish him in sickness und in health, und off dis young mans has anydings to do mit anodder vomans, vill you sherish and share mit him is dis?

A.—Yes.

Justice.—Vell, stick to it! I pronounce you man und vife, so help me Gott, mit der United States of America.

In Court.

In the Paris Court of Correctional Police, a woman, by no means young, advanced coquettishly to the witness stand to give her testimon.

'What is your name?'

'Virginia Loustatot.'

'Your age?'

'Twenth five,' (explanations of incredulity from the audience).

The woman's evidence being taken she regained her place, and the next witness was introduced. This was an over-grown young man.

'Your name?' said the Judge.

'Isadore Loustatot.'

'Your age?'

'Twenty seven.'

'Are you a relative to the other witness?'

'I'm her son.'

Ah, murmured the magistrate, your mother must have married when she was young.

It is just as impossible to get along without advertising as it is for a cross-eyed man to borrow a gun.

The Courier.

AUBURN, IND., NOV. 21, 1872.

Gov. Baker and T. A. Hendricks will change places on January 1. Mr Hendricks become Governor of Indiana, and Gov. Baker takes Mr. Hendricks' place in his law firm.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says: 'An old hunter informs us that deer will be almost as plenty as sheep this winter. This is, perhaps one of his flourishes, tending towards exaggeration but we believe there is a good deal in what he says. All ready our market is supplied with venison.

Shooting of W. C. Moreau at Logansport.

Logansport, Ind., Nov 13.—Judge Dykeman, a prominent citizen of this place, shot W. C. Moreau, to day, late sponsor to Mr. O'Conner, from the Louisville Convention, and new editor of the Logansport Sun. The cause of the shooting was the appearance of an article in last week's issue of the Sun, denouncing Dykeman! Moreau's wound is serious, but not fatal. Last evening a mob comprising of about 50 attempted to tar and feather Moreau, but were foiled by the police. 6 were arrested.

Grant vs. The Gallant Hancock.

With characteristic smallness of soul, says an exchange, Grant gives out that he means to keep up his ignoble spite against General Hancock. The death of General Meade gave General Hancock, as next in rank on the list of Major Generals, thro' right, by military custom and law, of the place vacated by his senior. And the Washington rumor is to the effect that Terry or Ord, both excellent officers, but incomparably the inferiors, in record and achievements, of Hancock, are discussed by the Kitchen Ring for the place to which Hancock is inviolably entitled Grant has been guilty of some petty dastardly revenges in a small way, and he should be warned by the result of his Thomas' action that the business of battling such men as Hancock does not tend to raise him in the esteem of the country. It is useless for an army officer to expect justice at the hand of Grant's military cabal, but the country should protest against this additional affront upon one of the most brilliant soldiers of his time.

The Horse Disease.

According to the Toronto papers, the disease is a kind of catarrhal fever of an epizootic nature, the result of some atmospheric influence, as is shown by the fact that it appears in various places at once, and attacks horses of all conditions—whether young or old, weak or strong. The best vettinary surgeons pronounce it epizootic influenza. The premonitory symptoms are dullness, a staring coat and a watery discharge from the nose. These are followed by a sore throat, slight swelling of the glands, loss of appetite, a severe hacking cough, with a discharge of brownish-yellow matter from the nostrils, a quickened pulse and respiration, feebleness of the eyes, and an unnatural coldness of the ears and legs. The respiratory organs are the principal parts affected, but the disease, being a blood poison, any animal which has had previous diseases affected certain organs, will be sure to show a derangement of those organs when attacked by the influenza.

Concerning the remedies, the London (O. W.) Free Press says:

With medicine given by advice of a surgeon, the following treatment will, it is said, hardly fail to cure.

The horses quite well, or only slightly affected with the disorder, should not be taken out in wet weather; or, if they must be used, they should be warmly covered and carefully worked. All affected animals should be kept in a well ventilated stable and be fed upon hot, soft food that can be easily digested, such as linseed tea, oat meal, gruel and boiled oats and barley. The appetite of the invalid or convalescent horse should be tempted by carrots, apples, or any other delicacy our sick quadruped is known to have a failing for. All excrements should be speedily and thoroughly removed; the stable and premises carefully cleansed and kept as quiet as possible. In all stables a carbolic acid disinfectant should be freely and frequently used.

Pies.

Girls! They make pies in New York. One firm in this city makes and bakes one hundred thousand pies per day, and sell all they make. Some of them are good pies, but they never taste so good as do some of the mince apple berry, or pumpkin pies, made at these home like homes in the country. We used to help the girls make pies, It was fun. First, we had to take the girls out to the orchard, to see which fruit would do the best, and then we had to climb the tree, and shake off a few apples. Then we must help pear and slice the apples—then stand around while Delida Jane would mix the dough, put in the shortning, and rolled out the crust. Then came the crimping edges, and stamped tops, on the pies, with "key holes"—then the baking and telling of pretty little stories, or stealing sweet little kisses, from pert little lips, just in flavor the pies and turnovers. Pies! We know all about them, but they don't beat them that are made in the country, not at all.

Floods in Italy.

The London Times of the 15th, in an editorial on the floods in Italy, says two-thirds of the province of Mantua and one third of that of Ferrara have been flooded. More than twenty thousand families are homeless, and vast tracts in the territories of Porma Nggeoe are turned into lakes, on the surface of which may be seen the tops of trees, roofs of houses, and floating carcasses of drowned cattle. Not only the solid barns and substantial farm houses, peculiar to these districts, but even churches have in many cases been unable to withstand the violence of the flood. Many human beings have perished both of those who allowed themselves to be caught within the lower buildings and of those who fled for safety to loftier edifices. But hardly less wretched is the condition of the survivors. The cattle, then that have been rescued from the flood are perishing from want of fodder, and they themselves are thrown for sustenance on their neighbor's charity. The harvest they have lately garnered, the fields they have just sown are laid waste, and was a month ago the richest of plains is now a chaotic marsh, not unlikely to bear for many years, the marks of a few hour's havoc. Nor are the ravages limited to the lower lands of the Po, but all around over the vast level and up to the mountain sides the devastation extends. The rivers are everywhere breaking bounds and the waters are out throughout the Peninsula. The distress is immense and threatens to exhaust the ordinary resources of public and private charity To repair the damages done to their lakes by the Po and the Aglio, in the Province of Mantua alone during the present inundation. It is reckoned that the sum of $120,000 will be required.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

We give below a few extracts from the Governor's message delivered last Thursday, before the Indiana Legislature,

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The growth of the State, in population and wealth, and the consequent increased diversities and importance of the subjects and interests requiring legislative supervisions and protection, render it impracticable to the General Assembly, to transact all the business demanding its attention, during the regular bieniel sessions, (limited as these are by the Constitution to the term of sixty-one days each.) even when nothing extraordinary occurs to impede or prevent legislation.—When, however, to these considerations the fact is added, that the last three sessions were prematurely and abruptly terminated, by the resignation of members, and by reasons thereof, much important and necessary legislation, failed to be enacted. No other reasons need to be offered in explanation of the exercise of the constitutional power of calling you together at this time, in special session.

The Garret suit against the Wabash ann Eric canal.

Those of you who are members of the late General Assembly will remember that my regular message, at the commencement of this session, I called special attention to the fact that a suit has been commenced in the Circuit Court of Carroll County, by John W. Garrett, Esq., to enforce against the Wabash and Erie Canal, an alledged lien created by the State prior to 1841 and held by Garrett and others, for whose benefit the suit is brought. The State, between the years 1834 and 1841, issued a large number of bonds, for internal improvement purposes One hundred and ninety-one of these bonds or thereabouts, of $1,000 each, exclusive of interest, are still outstanding, the rest having been surrendered under the legislation of 1846 and 1847, commonly called "the Butler bill." Mr. Garrett assumes to be, and I suppose is, the holder of forty one of these hundred and ninety-one old bonds, and he sues for himself as well as for the holders of the residue, to enforce a lien on the Canal, and its revenues, which, it is alleged was created by legislation, under which the bonds were issued.—Horace P. Biddle Judge of the Court, on the hearing of a demurer in the cause, decided that the bonds was a lien on the canal paramount to the title of the Trustees derived from the State in 1847, under the "Butler Bill" and I am fully satisfied that the decision was a correct one. Garrett's action has been removed by change of venue, from the Circuit Court of Carrol County to the Circuit Court of Cass County, where it is now pending. The term of the Cass Circuit Court commenced two days ago, viz: on the 11, instant, and a judgement may be rendered in a very short time, subjecting the canal or its revenues to the satisfaction of the claim. The State is not a party to the suit, and cannot therefore exercise the right of appeal, nor can she under existing legislation, insist that the Trustees shall appeal if they do not desire to do so; and if ever the Trustees do desire to appeal, they may not be able to stay the execution of the judgement, by giving the necessary appeal bond, and security, in the absence of any provisions by the State for indemnifying the sureties in appeal bond.

The last General Assembly passed a joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of this State, in relation to the debt charged to the Wabash and Erie Canal under the adjustment made by the State with its creditors in 1847. The proposed amendment, provides that no law nor resolution, shall ever be passed by the General Assembly to the State of Indiana, that shall recognize any liability of the State, to pay or redeem any certificate issued in pursuance of "An act to provide for the funded debt of the State of Indiana, and for the completion of the Wabash and Erie Canal as far as Evansville," passed January 19, 1846, and an act supplemental to said act, passed January 29, 1847, which, by the provision of the said act or either of them shall be payable exclusive from the proceeds of the canal lands, and the tolls and revenue of the canal in said acts mentioned, and no such certificates of stock shall ever be paid by the State. I earnestly recommend the amendment the substance of which I have just stated be promptly agreed to and adopted by the present General Assembly at this session, and that provisions be made by law for its speedy submission to the people for ratification.

On the 28 of January of the present year, Col. Norman Eddy, Secretary of State departed his life at his residence in this city, after having faithfully discharged his duties, for about one year or half of the term for which he was elected. The singular beauty and integrity, of Colonel Eddy's public and private life, his gallant service as a soldier of the Union, in the war to suppress the late rebellion, and the industry, fidelity, and skill with which he performed the duties of the many public trusts to which he was called, render it fitting that I should leave on record this brief tribute to his memory He died in circumstances by no means affluent, and Col John H. Farquhar whom I appointed to fill the vacancy, appointed Mr Owen M. Eddy son of, the deceased Secretary, his deputy, and generously allowed the entire salary, and all of the perquisites of the office to go to the widow and family of his deceased predecessor. Although the labors of the office have been mainly preformed by the deputy its responsibilities and some of its cares, and duties have necessarily fallen upon Col. Farquhar, and I would consider myself remiss of duty if I did not publicly express my greatful appreciation of his conduct. May the bread which he has cast upon the water, be found by him or his, though it be after many days.

FEES AND SALARIES

The act of Febuary 21, 1871 entitled, "An Act regulating the Fees and Salaries and Duties of certain officers therein named, and prescribing penalties for the violations of its provision' has proved to be a very defective and ill-considered piece of legislation. Some of the provisions of the act are of such doubtful constitutionality that a portion of the Circuit and Common Pleas Judges have held them to be null and void while the Judges of other districts have adjudged the same provisions to be constitutional. The judges of the Supreme Court itself, are equally divided on one or more of these questions and therefore, unable to reverse confliction and contradictory decisions of the lower Courts. The result is not only that we have all the evils of local legislation, by having one law or rule of action in one county, or circuit, and another law or rule of action in an adjoining county or circuit, but diverse rules prevail in the same country where the Judges of the court thereof, differ in opinion as to the constitutionality of certain provisions of the act. This evil is even greater than the extortions that were practised under the former law, and if questionable constitutionality cannot be affected, and passed at the present session, it would be better to appeal the act alluded to, and revive the old law which was supplanted by it, than to suffer longer under existing evils. There can be no question that the former law needed revis on and its revival could nobly be justified as a temporary expedient until a just, Constitutional and satisfactory measure can be perfected and passed. I respectfully recommend that a commission to consist of five or more experienced and competent persons be appointed without the least practicable delay, to prepare and report a fee and salary bill to the General assembly, for its consideration.

It is now twenty one years since the present Constitution became the fundamental law of Indiana, and in my judgment, the time has come, when the best interest of the State should require that provisions should be made, for calling a Convention, to be elected by the people, for the purpose of revising and amending that instrument.

The Indiana Hospital for the Insane has a capacity for about 490, patients, although by crowding it, 520, patients have been in the institution at the same time. Experience proves that it ought not to be thus crowded. By making the addition and improvements suggested by the Superintendent, in his report the capacity of the institution can be so enlarged as to accommodate 600 patients, that being an addition to the present capacity of the building of rooms sufficient for 110 patients. The estimate cost of these additions and improvements is $50,000 a much less sum than would provide for the same number of patients in the erection of a new institution. For this reason, and because of the pressing necessity for increased accommodations to the insane, I urgently reccommend that the sum named above be made at the present session, and with as little delay as practicable so that the capacity of the hospital may be increased, at the first opportunity.

TIPPECANOE BATTLE GROUND

The Constitution of Indiana declares that it shall be the duty of the General Assembly, to provide for the permanent inclosure and preservation of the Tippecanoe Battle Ground. Allow me to call your attention to the fact, that this duty has never been performed by our predecessors. The Battle Ground never was permanently inclosed by the State, and the temporary fence by which it was once surrounded, has long since disappeared. It is the property of the State and is full of historic interest; and as the people have enjoined in their Constitution, that it shall be enclosed, I cannot imagine any valid excuse, for a longer failure to obey this junction.

A Boston Merchant's Story.

Mr. Isaac Fenno, a heavy dealer in whole sale clothing, whose place was sacrificed, tells this story of the fire, as given in the New York Tribune:

I was aroused about 10:30 o'clock, Saturday night, while preparing to retire, by a neighbor, who informed me that there was a large fire down town. Though aprehending no danger of the destruction of my own store, yet the lurlid light in the heavens was undoubted evidence that the conflagration was one of unusual magnitude. I immediately proceeded to the spot, and there witnessed a scene which I believe was never surpassed in any of the great fires that have occurred. The night was a splended one for a fire. The moon shone brightly, though it was paled by the glare below, and the sky was perfectly cloudless. The wind was light, though the moving air evidently fed the flames. But instead of driving the fire in one direction, it rather aided its progress towards all points of the compass. Directly in the teeth of the wind the flames ate their way. Solid granite, and hard marble could not stay them; stone actually cracked and crumbled, and the iron shutters curled up like so many shavens. The fire would catch hold of a block of granite structures and one after another would be consumed the ruined walls crashed down as their support was destroyed. In less than an hour the whole block would be leveled to the ground. I went to my store and found that every one in the neighborhood like myself, had not the slightest apprehensions of danger. the fire then being several blocks away. Dozens of massive buildings stood between my place and the fire, and the wind was blowing in an opposite direction; but the fire drew nearer, and soon after midnight, the flames crossed the street and worked their way towards my store. Before the columns of flames the firemen worked with a will and merchants and their clerks throwed water on the roofs of their stores. Almost before we were aware of it, our stores were blazing, and we retired in good order, from the conflict. I never saw before, so terrible an occasion, where such extreme order was preserved. The military, police, and firemen were perfectly organized, and they labored as in one cause, as allies in battle and spent their strength to the best advantage. Suddenly morning dawned, and thousands of people flocked to the ruins. Newspaper extras were sold up town in enumerous numbers, and the sole topic of conversation was the conflagration. I saw no scene of distress or suffering, for—with the exceptions of a few tenement houses—there were no dwellings destroyed, The streets that were devastated are completely blocked up, and no one is allowed to enter among the ruins. The thieves were hard at work, and I saw many persons commit robery, right before the eyes of the whole crowd, and no effort was made to stop them. This morning I stood on Washington street, at the outskirts of the burned district, and I could look plainly out on the harbor, something that had not been done for years. As we left the city the smoke overhead could be plainly seen until we were miles away.

WISHART'S

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While we publish less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Now is the time to examine your chimneys, stove-pipes, ash-barrels, etc. Also, keep your eye on the coal oil. If you get "on it" Saturday night, and stay in your barn till mid-night never strike a match to find yourself. A little "look out" may save thousands.

The Musical Convention, at Waterloo, is progressing finely. A deep interest is manifested by a large number of the citizens, and the attendance is good. The Convention will close its work by a grand Concert, on Friday evening, Nov. 29th.

Though good weather has prolonged its stay with us this fall, yet its successor has come a little too soon for the completion of the brick buildings now in course of erection. Two weeks more would have put them under roof. We hope that Old Boreas will blow gently for a brief time that this may be accomplished.

Epizootic.—The horse disease has no abiding place here at present. There are no evidences of its presence yet, though we expect it, from the fact that all firstclass towns have it. The transfer business has not therefore been in the least impeded, and street railroads continue their runs as before.

Notice.—Owing to the bad weather and interruptions by meeting, we will defer our Lectures to Friday night, when we will give a private Lecture to gentlemen, and a double Lecture Saturday night to close the course.

A. Langworthy.

The Rev. Mr. Fowler, of Waterloo, advertised a few weeks ago that his grey horse had strayed or was stolen away. It now transpires that the horse was stolen, and the thief was arrested a few days ago at Marshal, and is now in our county jail. His name is Snyder, and the horse is now at Cold Water, and is undergoing an attack of the epizootic

Cold freezing winter is upon us, and as we sit by our cosy fires, with many comforts around us, do we think of the poor? Perhaps there are some near us that need a helping hand,—they may not have the necessaries of life, and the cold weather is upon them without their having the means to meet it. We say, God have mercy on the poor! but that don't help them much Let us make our sympathy more tangible.

One of our brick masons, not finding anything for his hands to do this cold weather, disguised himself as an old man, by donning a flaxen wig, clothes to match and with a cane, he held forth his trembling hand, with a countenance that said, "Pity the sorrows of a poor old man" and by this means raised 60 cents in three days. Had he been a genuine beggar, he would have starved to death. This sum was sufficient, however, to start on a 'bust' and he's been busted ever since.

Important Meeting.

We are requested to announce that a meeting will be held at the Court House, next Tuesday at 1 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of getting up a Colony to go west and locate land. Soldiers and all others should attend. By an exchange of opinion on the subject, and the means for accomplishing this end decided upon, a great interest may be built up for the good of all interested.

The following named gentlemen were elected directors of the D. E. R. & I. R. R. for the ensuing year at the 31st of October:

C. H. Buell, James F. Joy, Harvey E. Baldwin, Detroit; Allen Sheldon, D. L. Quirk, Ypsilanti; Elijah Smith, Boston; W. W. Crapo, West Bedford, Mass.; James S. Collins, Columbia City; John L. Davis, Auburn; Cornelius Hallerman, Roann and George E. Adams, Logansport.

Turkey for Thanksgiving.

It has arrived. One of these great big gobble, gobble fellows, away up in the twenties. He's a buster, and stands three feet without shoes on. If he lives and has good health our prospects are flattering, for a good roast, though its death to the turkey. We are under obligations to our best farmer for this handsome present, D. D. Metcalf, Esq., Knowing of the uncertain life led by the printer, this gentleman whose heart is as big as the turkey, almost, felt like doing something for humanity's sake. We admire his excellent judgment in the selection he made to further this great object. We feel like doing something for this cause ourselves, and, therefore, announce that similar inflictions will be submitted to upon our part without a murmur. Many thanks, Daniel, for your fine donation.

There seems to be a general satisfaction over the fact that the elections are all past and all political excitement has died away. Although the general campaign has been conducted on personalities to a lamentable extent, we believe there is an unusal good feeling throughout the country. The bitter and lasting animosities which former campaigns have engendered are only applicable to this one in isolated cases and peculiarly exceptional places. It is not probable that the next quarter of a century will witness such bitter political contests as the last ten years developed, and it is sincerely to be hoped that it may not.

The Laporte Argus says, it can hardly be said that the Alleghanians are a success as concertists. None of them excel as vocalists, and their instrumental music is notably bad. In most cases they appear ill at ease on the stage and impress an observer with the belief that they are novices at the business. Their entertainment would be fair for a parlor and is pleasant enough for small towns like Elkhart or South bend, but in a city like Laporte such concerts don't take very well. We have a score of local singers who are far superior to any member of the troupe in question.

This troupe wants to come here bad, but if they are not first-class they had better stay away. The old Alleghenains are good but we notice the above troupe do not use the word "old" and consequently are trying to humbug the people on some one elses reputation.

California, with more wheat than she knows what to with, is preparing to raise more the coming year than she did this Splendid Lectures.

Dr. Langworthy is giving a series of lectures in this place at the M. E. Church, on the subjects of Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene. To say that they are interesting is but drawing it mildly, for the Dr. is thoroughly master of his subjects, and introduces many attractive features, not attempted by others who lecture in these courses.

The English Diagrams, of which he has a complete set, are exhibited by him for the first time in this part of the country. He is the most pleasing lecturer we have heard, and delivers his ideas in a plain common sense manner.

He has not been very well patronized as yet, but we still hope that there are yet enough people in Auburn, who are willing to patronize any affair of merit, that will pay back in facts and important information, not to be computed by dollar and cents. We think it only necessary to apprise them of the great intellectual treat offered them in these lectures to see the house well filled. Come out and hear them, and we will guarantee you will not regret it.

Dr. Langworthy

By request will make his

Friday Evening

Lecture a Private

Special Lecture to Gentlemen.

No one under 16 years old admitted. The truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, will be frankly and freely spoken. Those who are afraid he will say something to make them condemn themselves, or their habits, hab better stay away.

Oh, wad the power some giftie gie us,
To see oursels as ithers see us;
It wad from many an error free us,
And foolish notion.

The lectures will be continued Friday and Saturday evenings. Afternoon free lectures to children by Dr. Butler, every day at 3 o'clock, or ringing of the bell, at the M. E. Church Lectures 25 cents, children 15 cts.

Continental Railroad.

Newark, O., Nov. 15th, 1872.

Mr. Editor:

I am credibly informed that the Baltimore & Ohio Company have in contemplation the building of a branch road from their road to Lake Michigan, and if they do, as a matter of course, will want a road from Newark, Ohio, to connect with it, and I suppose that Auburn will be the starting point for the said branch, and I will give a few reasons why I think so:

First. I suppose Auburn will make a much larger and more business place than Defiance or other points along the road

Second. It would make a shorter route between Baltimore and Chicago on the Auburn route than the Defiance route.

Third. The Auburn route would run through Ohio, a very heavy timbered country.

I suppose the branch road will run via Kendallville, Goshen, Elkhart, Niles and St. Joe, Michigan, and as for the road from Newark the subject has been carried out, Thus far they have voted at Delaware one hundred dollars, and at Ada, fifty thousand dollars. I will give you the following items from several papers in Ohio which will be read, I suppose, with interest.

J. H. Shinn.

The south part of Perry county contains that wonderful development of coal known as the great, or twelve foot vein in the same Fills, and almost the whole of this magnificent showing of coal, so easy of access and so ready to the miners' hands, that it can be mined at the least possible cost.

Shawnee is the name of a new town located at the present terminus of the Newark and Straitsville Railroad, and is in the midst of the great coal vein. The town was started about a month ago, and already numbers some twenty houses, while lots which sold at the sale for $135 are now selling for $600. Some eight large coal companies are organized and are now driving entries, and it is thought that the place will soon become quite a mining center.

Great preparations are making for mining coal at Shawnee, Perry county. The shipments from that place the coming fall and winter will be immese.

Cleveland capitalists have bought seven thousand acres of coal lands in the great fields of Hocking county, and propose to spend a million dollars in developing this land.

The Hickory Sentinel states that within the last few weeks, Col. James Taylor, of Perry county, as trustee, has executed deeds for mineral lands in Perry and Athens counties to the amount of $2,371-000. The lands embraced in Taylor's original purchases are equal in area to town ships, and include the richest coal and iron regions of Sunday Creek. At the lowest estimate, these lands contain fifteen thousand million tons of coal, and even a greater number of tons of iron ore.

The probabilities for the building, and that, too, at a very early day, of the railroad from Logan, on the C. & H. V. R., to Gallipolis, on the Ohio River, by way of McArthur in Vinton county, have become more than probabilities—a fixed fact.—Gallia county has voted a tax for the building of the same through that county It will be a valuable feature to our road, and will open up a vast coal and iron region.

Nature is completely relieved from the prostrating influences of kidney, bladder and glandular diseases mental and physical debility, female weakness, and, in fact all maladies of the urino-genital organs, in either-sex, by partaking of Smolander's Buchu, which has proved itself to be a valuable vegetable remedial agent.

The are muddy and slopy after the snow storm.

The Natural Method of Teaching.

We have said that it is necessary for him who would be a successful teacher, to have a thorough knowledge of the different mental faculties, and the order and manner in which they proceed in the discovery of truth. What sensible person would think of employing as a physician a man entirely ignorant of anatomy and physiology, and the laws which determine the conditions of sickness and health? And shall the care of the mind whose sound action and healthy development is of much greater consequence, be committed to those who are wholly unacquainted with its powers and their object? The useful instructor must know both what to teach, and how to teach.—Let us proceed, then, to consider the order and manner of mental development. And first, as to the order in which the mind advances in the discovery of truth. Our first knowledge is of the world external to ourselves denominated the material world. We become acquainted with the qualities and relations of material existence through the operations of the senses.—That is, we have five different mediums of communication with things external to us which give rise to as many different kinds of knowledge.

These media are denominated the senses of which there are five. Each of these gives us a peculiar kind of knowledge, which cannot be acquired by any of the others. The action of the senses is called perception, and is the first condition of mental exercise. If it were possible for an individual to live without the possession of sense, that individual would be wholly unconscious of his existence, and, consequently, without thought. Perception belongs to the mind in infancy, youth and age, and the knowledge acquired by it is the most pleasing to the inquirer, and at the same time, is the most easily retained, and the most readily recalled.—This results from the subjects of its investigation being tangible objects, with which we are brought in immediate contact. The child uses perception long before it abstracts and reasons to any great extent. By the employment of this faculty, children in the short period of four or five years, become acquainted with all the various objects by which they are surrounded. They learn to distinguish their different uses, and the names that belong to them; so that at the age of five, most children have mastered the language of their parents.

Why is it that the mind at this tender age, and in this imperfect state of development, advances so much more rapidly in the aquisition of knowledge than at any subsequent stage in life? Because, the natural order of mental development is observed. Instead of conforming to the establishment of nature, the most of our instructors have entirely overlooked the necessity and importance of employing the powers of perception in the acquisition of knowledge. They have proceeded to the more mechanical and difficult operations of abstraction and reasoning, before the mind is sufficiently matured to understand or apply them. Abstraction and reasoning should always be preceded by a careful observation of the phenomena from which they are deduced, No one can become a good reasoner without first becoming a good observer. They who think that education consists in cramming the mind with abstract rules and incoherent facts have entirely mistaken the object of schools, and are not worthy the name of teachers.

Education means to lead out, and its chief end is to develop the mind And this can only be done by pursuing the easy and pleasant course pointed out by nature. We lay it down, then, as a fundamental maxim of instruction that the first duty of the teacher is to train and develop the perceptive faculties. And so much for perception, as to the order which it occupies in mental action.

Meeting of the Editorial Association.

A regular meeting of the Editors' and Publishers Association of the Tenth and Eleventh Congressional Districts of Indiana, was held at LaPorte on Thursday, Nov. 14, 1872. A quorum being present, the meeting was called to order by the President who announced that the election of officers would be in order.

President—C. G. Powell, LePorte Herald.

Vice Presidents—Dr. J. H. Rerick, LaGrange Standard; J. B. Connor, Kentland Gazette.

Recording Secretary—Platt McDonald Plymoth Democrat.

Corresponding Secretary—Q. A. Hossler Indianian, Warsaw.

Treasurer—A. Beal, South Bend Register.

The treasurer was directed to notify all members of the association that the annual dues of one dollar is ordered to be paid which amount is to be remitted to him, and that all who do not pay before the first of January, will be considered as not wishing to continue their membership.—The following payment of dues was made: C. G. Powell, $1; P. McDonald, $1; H. E. Wadsworth, $1; G. K. Baxter, $1; J. Millikan, $1; J. B. Stoll, $1; D. Van Valkenburgh, $1; T. C. Mays, $1. D. E. Van Valkenburgh paid into the treasury $22, balance due.

The treasurer was directed to procure certificates of membership and forward to each member of the Association.

The following resolution offered by H. E. Wadsworth, of the LaPorte Argus, was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That our thanks are hereby tendered to the Wide Awake hose company of the LaPorte firemen, for the use of their rooms for the meeting of the association.

The following resolution was offered and adopted:

Resolved, That we deprecate the practice, by members of the association, of cutting under established rates, for the purpose of taking work from other members who adhere to the rules of the association and that they should either cease to violate the rules which they were careful to observe when it was to their advantage to do so, or cease to be members.

On motion of D. E. Van Valkenburg, a committee, consisting of J. B. Stoll, C. G. Powell, and A. Beal, was appointed to work, in conjunction with a committee of the State Editorial Association, to secure the legislation contemplated in Mr. Wadsworth's suggestion.

At the request of Stoll, Ligonier was selected as the place of holding the next meeting of the association, which will be on the second Friday of April, 1873.

And on motion, the meeting adjourned.

A Representative House.

Among the multitude of different branches of trade in Fort Wayne, none are of more importance than the boot and shoe trade. This branch is well represented; prominent among them all is the shoe house of Markley, Schrader & Co. They came to Fort Wayne in 1866, and by their gentlemanly deportment and close attention to business, they have acquired a trade perhaps not excelled by any house in their line. Not satisfied with bargains given their customers heretofore, they propose to do still better for them in the future. Their stock is very large, being a full line of everything needed for mens, boys and youths, women, Misses and children's wear. They are giving great bargains; one cannot know how cheap they are selling, unless they call. Examine the goods and learn prices. We advise all in want of boots, shoes or rubbers to give them a call. tf.

Lots of people that have never been in Fort Wayne and are not acquainted can find the Red Front clothing hall, No. 5, Keystone block. Any woman or child can find this place, and you will save from 20 to 25 cents on each dollar.

$75,000 in cash for $1.—We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column of the Nebraska State Orphan Asylum. Here is a chance to win a fortune in a public legal drawing and at the same time help a noble and worthy institution. Oct. 17.—8t.

When you go to Fort Wayne to buy clothing ask for one of our price list before you purchase your goods, and get posted on prices and not be cheated by outsiders. No. 5 Keystone block.

Everybody that goes to Fort Wayne should not fail to call at the Red Front Clothing Hall, No. 5 Keystone block, and see the largest stock of clothing in the city. It has all been bought for cash before the late advance of wool.

Manhood; How Lost, & Restored

Just published, a new addition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of Spermatorrhoea or Seminal weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc; also Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self indulgence or sexual extravagance.

Price, in sealed envelope only 6 cents.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a 30 year practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of medicine or application of the knife, but by means which every sufferer may cure himself cheaply and privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and man.

Sent, under seal, to any address, in a plain envelope, postpaid on receipt of six cents.

VOLLMER'S Elixir of PYROPHOSPHATE OF IRON AND PERUVIAN BARK.
In this preparation are combined the valuable properties and virtues of Peruvian Bark, with Phosphorus and Iron, in the shape of Pyrophosphate of Iron. This Elixir will be found of great advantage in Dyspepsia, Indigestion, weak and delicate Stomachs, and generally in weak and delicate states of the system.
The ingredients in this Elixir are skillfully blended into a delightful Cordial, making it the most agreeable and palatable combination to the taste, in use.
—ec. 30, '70.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.
This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.
It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.
To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.
In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

HOW TO GO WEST

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

W. W. WORTHINGTON, Supt.

Read.

A very worthy fisherman by the name of Grizzle was drowned some time since, and all search of his body provved unavailing. After it had been in the water some months, however, it was discovered floating on the surface and taken to the shore, whereupon Mr. Smith was dispatched to convey the intelligence to the much afflicted widow.

Well, Mrs. Grizzle, we have found Mr. Grizzle's body?

You don't say so!

Yes we have—the jury has sat on it and found it full of eels!

You don't say so!

Yes, it is; and we want to know what you will have done with it?

Why, how many eels do you think there is in him?

Oh, about a bushel.

Well, then, I think you had better send the eels up to the house and then set him agaic.

Presidential Nags.

In President Grant's stables seven horses are quartered at present. 'Cincinnati' the old wor-worn animal which the General rode during so many of his fatiguing campaigns, is quietly resting on his noble earned laurels, and patiently awaits day by day his liberal rations of provender.—He is a thoroughbred animal, sired directly by Lexington, is dark bay, and some 15 years of age.

Egypt is Miss Nellie Grant's favorite horse, and is generally used by her before her park phaeton. He is a handsome dark bay, about seventeen years old, and is highly valued by the ladies of the Presidential mansion.

The carriage or family team is a pair of dark bays. Their names are St. Louis and Washington. The former is eleven and the latter eight years of age. Together they form a very gentle, kind and exceedingly handsome carriage accompaniment.

The President's single driving horse is a Hambletonian colt—a mare—named Rebecca, three years old. She is a great favorite of the President and the ribbons attached to her bits are those most frequently handled by him in his dashes up and down the avenue.

A pair of handsome grays—one steel, the other a brighter shade—also occupy the Executive stables. These horses are generally reserved for cases of a more special feature. They are tolerably well matched and are aged respectively thirteen and fourteen years.

A Dutchman's Strike.

A German, called Jacob, who had lately arrived in this country, got a situation in a planing mill, at a salary of $10 per week. Returning home one evening with one of the young hands of the mill, whom he called John, he told him that he got $15 per week.

Vot? cried Jake, you vas gotten fifdeen toolars a week? Thunder and plixen, I was so old like you a couple off dimes, un I get me only ten toolars. How des vas, eh?

Well, replied John, if you don't get enough, you strike the boss for more.

Vot you say? Strike the boss for more? You dink I vos got more bier. vages if I vos strink ter boss ain id?

Yes, I think you would.

So on Monday Jacob went to work as usual; he took his station by the door, and as the proprietor came down the way, Jacob stepped out in front of him, and struck him with all his force, felling him to the ground, saying at the same time he done it.

Dare! I vos strike you for more higher vages.

The proprietor brawled Police! which had the effect of bringing an officer, and Jacob was arrainged for assault and battery. When the Mayor asked him what he had to say, he replied,

Vell, ves could find me out vot der matter vos. I go me home mit a man vot work by me. He tole me to got more vages I vas petter go strike der boss he vos come dish mording. I striken him for dot vages higher and now I vas got here for salt und batter; I don't quite understand me dot.

During the laughter which followed, the German was informed that when he wanted to stricke again, not to make such a striking demand, and the employer withdrawing the charge, he was then discharged.

Why is a dressing gown the most lasting garment in a gentleman's wardrobe? Because he never wears it out.

Do not get drunk. It is wicked, and besides you are liable to wake up with a new head on you in the morning.

Too close intimacy with other men's wives brings ruin and disgrace upon you unless you are a clergyman. Beware!

Hard up says the report of a debut always reminds him of his record at the bank, because it is generally an 'overdraw account.'

An innocent minded Brooklyn girl said to a gentleman, the other night: The mosquitoes are terrible. I wish you could see my back!

I wish I could, was the reply.

Never beat your wife, save with a poker stove leg or like trifling weapon. This rule will not apply to mother-in-law. Man is justified in treating them with all possible cruelty.

A Lowell girl claims that she won her husband by a stratagem. He fell in the river, she grabbled him, and, when he came to the surface he was very much excited, and proposed marrying.

How to Get Along

Do not stop to tell stories in business hours.

If your have a place of business, be there when wanted.

No man can get rich by sitting 'round stores and saloons.

Never 'fool' in business matter of any kind.

Have order, system, regularity and promptness.

Do not meddle with a business you know nothing of.

Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities.

Do not kick every stone in the path More smiles can be made in one by going on than by stopping.

Pay as you go.

A man of honor respects his word as does his bond.

Help others when you can, but never give what you cannot afford, simply because it is fashionable.

Learn to say no. No necessity of snapping it out, but say it firmly and respectfully.

Use your own brains rather than those of others.

Learn to think and act for yourself Keep ahead of rather than behind the times.

Let whisky alone in all business transactions.

Young men cut this out, and if there be folly in the argument, let us know.

Good Advice to Mothers.

What do we do with our daughters?—Send them to school? Yes, and they learn Latin and French, mathematics and history—all useful and valuable to give mental breadth and depth and also add strength.

What do they do when they come home study their lessons? Yes, and in the intervals, worsted work crochet—a novel, perhaps—something always that keeps their hands close to their breasts, and their sight and energy concentrated in a narrow point—a game of authors, conversation, or a pretty little drawing under the evening lamp, always the cramped position, the narrow, concentrated field.

Throw away the crochet and the crewel work—scatter the cards! Shorten the study hours at home. You are the buyer in school matters; insist on your choice; fewer studies—more room to breathe, in between the 'ologies. Drop an exercise here, a theorem there. Insist that in five or six mortal hours the lessons should all be done.

Then, in and out of school time, let your daughters take part in the steady business of home. When tea time comes a dainty tea table is a pretty thing. Let not your daughters come to it as though in a hotel, unobserved and uninteresting. If they have helped to make, to have the toast crisp, to arrange the china and silver, and have it all fresh and bright, think you they have no enjoyment of the occasion?

Then comes the Saturday holliday; devoted, as girls go, to unmeaning calls, or refreshing themselves with a novel by the parlor 'register.'

Make diversion here. The Saturday sweeping and baking; an hour in the linen closet, those lavender sanctuaries, dear to every woman's heart; the marketing, the grocer's orders; here is a wide field of variety for young interest and young energy.

I would give a girl household ambition I would make her positively unhappy until she could produce a loaf of bread lighter than Bridget's. I would make the order and neatness of her own room, or the library or parlor, her especial accountability and charge.

Would you leave no time for play?

Yes, time for play, time to dance, time for skating and croquet. But I would fill in the hours ingeniously.

But how will servants stand it to have children bothering round, interfering with their work? My dear madam, are you mistress of the house? Do you give or take orders? It will require tact and judgement on your part, of course, so to adjust matters in the outlying provinces, but it has its reward.

But this shortening of the study hours will surely keep the girls years longer at school than they would otherwise be!—Very like, very like. What if it add a full decade to their lives as well?

Instead of being shot out on Commencement Day, utterly finished in more senses than one; you will have balance and fitness, readiness for any place in the wide world.

A typo, whose nose shone like a beacon from the copious libation of stimulants, having been asked why his craft were dissipated, made the following poetic reply:

When others shunned the murky sky,
Where flash on flash was brightening,
Great Franklin went to fly his kite
And bottle up the lightning.

And since his time, when cares oppress,
And the hard times are tightning,
The printer seeks to drown his woes
In draughts of "bottle lightning."

When badly tattered—his warm heart
A place for grief to rankle in—
He takes the "lightning," flies his kite,
And thinks himself a Franklin.

The Diplomatic Corps.

From a Washington letter to the Boston Post.

Speaking of the foreigners reminds me of the impertinencies in which the secretaries and attaches of the legations are prone to indulge. You see they are so rapidly spoiled after their arrival here by by the attentions they receive. But then it is true it is very easy to spoil them.—They imagine no one in America understands French, and sometimes a lady standing at her window will first receive an insolent stare from two or three of them who happen to be passing by, and will overhear herself critised aloud in French. Again, they have an idea they can say what they please to American girls.

Said one to a lovely young girl whom he met at a party the second time he had talked with her:

You have very handsome eyes, Madamoiselle.

Sir, exclaimed the lady in amazment at his assurance, what do you mean?

Don't you like that? he asked. But I think so. I admire your eyes but your noise I do not like.

You are very impertinent, said the lady indignantly, and turned away.

The man burst into a laugh and exclaimed,

How very funny; I really believe you are angry.

I am, indeed, answered the lady; I consider your impertinence in presuming to criticise my face unbearable.

How droll, said the other, and laughed again.

Of course, the next time she met him the lady refused to speak, but she told the matter to another young lady she was surprised by hearing,

Oh, you mustn't mind that; these foreigners say all sorts of queer things.

Snipe on Toast.

I had some snipe on toast in Phil. I saw a bill of fare:

SNIPE ON TOAST, 50 CENTS.

Snipe on toast would be almost too hearty food to feed people on who had been floating on a raft three weeks, feeding on old boot legs.

Says I to the waiter, Give me snipe on toast.

Yes, sir.

By-and-bye he came in and put down some toast, and I kept on reading about what an almighty donkey Grant was, and what a cussed set every one is who is running for office; and I sat there an hour—Then I rang the gong. The waiter entered, and says I, Where in thunder is my meat?

Says he, They've been on the table an hour.

Says I, I did'nt order plain toast; I want a snipe on it.

There is a snipe on it.

Then I drew up to the table, and I saw a little black speck on the toast, and says I, You'll swear that's a snipe?

Yes.

Says I, You'd make a good linen buyer, you would.

Says he, It's a snipe on toast, sir, any how.

How did it get on?

That snipe is all right. It's a full sized one, too.

Says I, I am glad of it. I'm glad you told me that's a full-sized snipe, for do you know, young man, when I sat there reading I saw a black speck on that toast but I took it for a fly, and I am glad to be informed it's a snipe. Now you can take that snipe away and bring me a turkey on toast; and darn it! I want a full sized turkey, too.

I aint hankering after snipe since that episode. I swear I could have blown that snipe through a putty-blower without hurting the snipe or the putty blower either.

Snipe on toast may be game, but it's a mean game.

Cider and stewed snipe is ripe.

An old lady of Lowell, Mass., died at an almost centerian age a few days ago. Before her death she gave minute directions for her funeral. Among other things, she said she wanted to be 'laid out' in her black silk gown; and they must not take out the back breadth, as they did when Sally Smith was laid out. For, said the old lady, deprecatingly but seriously, what a figure Sally will cut at the resurrection without any back breadth in her gown.

MARRYING A WIFE AND A FORTUNE!

'Have you heard the news about Miss Temple, Ned?' said Charley Ashton as he sauntered leisurely up to the desk, which Edward Farnham occupied in Messrs. Smith & Jones, office on Wall Street.

The warm blood colored Ned's cheek in spite of his struggles to prevent it, as he replied.

"No, no harm I hope.'

'Well I should guess it wasn't.—Put up your books, and as we go up town I'll tell you.'

'No, I can't leave yet. I have not finished my balanee'

'Oh' pshaw; finish to-morrow before ten o'clock. I wouldn't work as hard as you do for any man living much less, these bankers, who think that all a man is made for is to work and make money for them. Come along.

'No, I can't go.'

'Well then, the tale in short is, she had a big fortune left her, some say $500,000.

An involuntaoy sigh escaped Ned, and he said.

'I'm sorry to hear it.'

'Why, what's got into you, you ninny?' Sorry! What, I havn't heard anything to please me so much in many a day. I always liked the girl, but I'm not philosopher enough to marry her for love alone. My doctrine is that when poverty comes in at the door love goes out at the window.

'I am afraid that I don't agree with you in all things, however, I have no time to discuss it now. Miss Temple in my opinion, is fortune enough for any man though she did not have a cent of money.'

'Pshaw, Ned; that's old foggy.—Love in a cottage! Ha! ha! Well, I liked her pretty well before, but I can't help thinking her attractions pretty considerably enlarged, since I heard that news. Never should have thought of anything but a pleasant acquaintance—guess I'll go in for her now. Good bye, don't hurt your self working.'

Ned made no reply but felt as though he would like to grind beneath his heel one who would speak so irreverently of her, who to his idea, combined every grace of heart, and perfection of form and feature which would make up a perfect woman. His thoughts turned to action, and he caught himself stamping his heel on the desk stool with such force as to almost dent a hole in it, and looking up saw Mr. Smith's steady gaze fixed on him.

Back to his work he tried to bring his thoughts, but they were not subject to his will, and he found himself in great danger of writing the thought which passed through his mind. "She is lost to me now! Oh how I wish it had never happened.' He shut his book, put away his papers, and with that dreary, just far away kind of look passed unheedingly out of the throng of the money mart of the newly made world.

Charley Ashton lost no time in improving his opportunities, for that night found him seated tete a tete with Miss Temple in 21st Street.

Miss Temple was an orphan and had for years lived with an aunt—her father's sister. An income of four hundred dollars a year had been left for her, which at least supplied all necessary wants. She was not ashamed to assist her aunt about a great many things, some would call menial, and in form and feature, heart, and mind, all her acquaintances said, fully sustained the high opinion Ned Farnham had of her.

Er'e the evening was over Charley Ashton had succeeded in appearing deeply in love, and not many days, ere he had proposed and was accepted. Of all her mail acquaintances, Miss Temple had always prefered the two young men just mentioned. It was true she had leaned to the quiet side of steady Mr. Farnham but of late he had ceased to visit her, while Mr. Ashton's presence was almost constant. Hence she persuaded that she loved and had accepted him.

Charley urged a speedy marriage why, came in a conversation too long for me to discribe, within it appeared that some of the 'boys' on the 'street" were fixing up a pool to buy a certain stock, and our friend Ashton wanted some of the five hundred thousand dollars to put in it. Anna Temple prefered a longer time; urged that time would make them know each other better, especially in the intimate relation they now stood. Charley vowed that he would never change, and he knew that time could not develop any fault in her.

"But, said Miss Temple 'there is another reason and I think I can be free with you now; I have spent so much of my little income—and aunt has no spare money—that I have no means of defraying the necessary expenses.

"But you have the fortune left you by your Australian uncle, and even if you have not received it your agents will make an advance.

"I have no fortune, my dear Charley. Some thought it was mine, but the fortune to which you probably allude was left to my cousin, Miss Anna Thompson Temple to whom I introduced you.

'Ah, it was, indeed! She is a favored young lady, how much does she receive?'

'Report said, five hundred thousand dollars, but cousin Nan has been informed by the agents, that there is but ten thousand dollars in money, the rest in houses and lots at Melbourne. valued at ninety thousand dollars.

'Ah, well realy! How things do spread. But to out matters; I guess Miss Anna, you had better have your way.

The hours of that evening dragged heavily along, and as they lengthened. Mr. Charles Ashton's manner became more and more formal, He left, and Anna's warm heart as softened as she thought over his cool manner and still cooler parting. No sleep came to her eyes that night.

'Can it be?' she said to herself a thousand times, and yet it must be, for his manner changed almost from my telling him of Nannie's fortune.

The next night, and Charley was not in his usual place, and the next, and still more. About a week afterward, a short note informed Miss Temple that, "having lost all his savings in a bad speculation, he could not think of holding her to an engagement which would be out of his power to fulfill.

To say this did not grieve her would be false, but it did not take many days to teach her that she had not loved Charles Ashton as she would the man she was to marry.

Again our two young men met.—This time on breadway. Charley gravely sauntering along hailed Ned in his old way.

'Well old boy, off to-day?'

'I have been promoted and am not obliged to work so late, though I do often; then I think of taking a ride to the park. My head has ached much of late.

'Shouldn't work so hard; don't get any thanks for it. By-the-by, that fortune of Miss Temple's turned out to be all in my eye.

'How—what's that, was the eager reply.

'Well a Miss somebody Temple had about a hundred thousand dollars left to her but it was not our pretty little friend.'

'But I heard you were very attentive, some said engaged.'

'There is no telling what might have happened, but for that fool of an uncle, making mistakes in names.—However, it's all over now. You know that I at least cannot afford to marry a poor woman, no matter if she is a Pearl. I know that you entertain some foolish sort of notions, what love etc., will do, but its all bosh. Give me the dimes my boy. When poverty comes in at the door, etc., you know. Take my advice and drop all such foolishness.

Ashton might as well have talked to the lamp post for all the hearing Ned Farnham did. What he was thinking of we cannot sap, but he did go to the park that afternoon, but that night found him in the little parlor, which had so often been graced by Charley's presence. Ere the evening was over he had explained his long absence, told of his better prospects, and offered his heart and hand. She asked three weeks to consider, he to visit her as often as he pleased. At the end of that time he was accepted, and Anna learned what true love was.

Here my story might end, but there is a sequel. Some months after the engagement Smith tapped Ned on the shoulder, and motioned him to the private office.

'Going to marry my niece?" he asked.

'I am engaged to Miss Anna Temple, sir, and we expect in a quiet way, to be married one month from to-day. But I was not aware that she was your niece'

'Neither was I until a few days since. As to your quiet way, understand me, sir—the child of my only sister, can be married no place else than in my own house. Come now, no flinching. I've heard all about it. But she's poor—poor as Sob's turkey and I've too many children to give her more than a decent wedding.

Ned did not understand the expression of Mr. Smith's face, but felt a little answered and said.

'I should never have addressed her, and I would release her this moment, were she an heiress.

'No you don't, no you don't. I know you, and I know the whole story. You can go.

Ned pondered long over this singular conversation, but got no satisfaction from his own thoughts, or Anna. she replied only by a smile and a kiss.

Notwithstanding all the urging of her newly found uncle, Anna refused to leave her aunt until the time for the wedding. That event came and the ceremony was over. Then Mr. Smith called the young complete in his library, and drawing a strong iron box from his safe, said:

'Now young man, you're tied hard and fast, and I tell you you've got an heiress, and a rich one too. A foolish brother of her father's would go Australia, took it into his head to die, not long since, and left such a batched up will, that it has taken six months to get at the straight of it. We were his agents, and kept the matter to our selves, because it was a large sum, and might create imposition. We soon disposed of the one hundred thousand dollars to Miss Anna Thompson Temple, but the contents of this pox, one hundred thousand pounds, in consuls, we used more scrutany in assigning, and in the course of our investigations, I not only found the rightful owner of our trust, but the child of my only sister. Sir, you are worthy of her, and what is of less value, her fortune. The morning papers will announce you a partner in our house.

No-Brains.

Judge Ray, the temperance lecturer, in one of his efforts got off the following hard hit at 'moderate drinkers.'

All those who in youth acquire a habit of drinking whiskey, at forty years of age will be total abstainers or drunkards. No person can use whiskey for years with moderation. If there is a person in the audience before me whose experience disputes this, let him make it known. I will account for it, or acknowledge that I am mistaken.

A tall large man arose, folding his arms across his breast, said:

I offer myself as one whose experience contradicts your statements.

Are you a moderate drinker?

I am.

And never were intoxicated?

Never.

Not once?

No, sir, never.

Well, remarked the Judge, scanning the subject from head to foot, yours is a singular case; yet I think it is easily accounted for. I am reminded by it of a little story.

A colored man, with a loaf of bread and a bottle of whiskey, sat down to dine, on the bank of a clear stream. In breaking the bread he dropped some crumbs into the water. The fish seized them. That circumstance gave the darkey the idea of dipping the bread into whiskey and feeding it to them. Some of the fish ate it, and became drunk. In this way he easily caught a large number. But in the school was a large fish, very unlike the rest. It partook freely of the bread with no perceptible effect. It was shy of every effort of the darkey to take it. He resolved to take it all hazards, that he might learn its name and nature. He procured a net, and after much effort caught the fish, carried it to a colored neighbor, and asked his opinion of the matter. The other surveyed the wonder and said:

Sambo, I understand dis here; dat fish is a mullet head, it aint got no brains.

In other words, added the judge, alcohol affects only the brain, and, of course those having none, may drink without injury.

The storm of laughter which followed this story, drove the "moderate drinker" from the house.

We suppose the position was claimed solely on the basis of color for Langston has never been charged with with posessing any legal ability. He is a young man, of "silver drip" complexion, and in point of ability, is considerable inferior to Fred. Douglas but as he would be associated with Grant, Robeson, & co., his inferiority would be noticeable only compared with the able men who have in past administrations filled the very important office of chief law officer of the government.

The telegraph says the Chinese autherities have issued a proclamation against the practice of drowning female children, which has been carried on to an alarming extent in that counury. The world is moving even in China. The law of mental and moral progress, seems every where to govern, except among a few politicians in the United States, who imagine it possible to return to an old order of things and who themselves stand where they were twenty years ago, and where we presume they will stand twenty years from now. Let them learn a lesson from the Chinese, and be at least intelligent.

We hear a great deal said about the tremendous sweep which Grant has made of the political field. It is true that General Grant has acheived a decided victory, but not a decicive one—The total vote will be about 7,500,000 and Grant's majority is about six per cent, of the whole. Where Grant gets 100 votes, Greeley gets about 93.—Grant owes his entire re-election to the negro vote, which, for the first time has been cast for President. Out of the one million of negro voters, probably not a hundred thousand of them can read or write, and of course, they voted with no inteligent understanding of the principles at issue in the contest. Of the white men of the country—the element which has heretofore made Presidents, Greeley will have a majority of fully five hundred thousand.

The notorious Will. C. Moreau who was a leader in the O'Conor movement if it would be dignified by the name of "a movement," has come to grief. For some time he has been editing a Bourbon paper at Logansport and has been shamefully abusive in his attacks upon Judge Dykeman, a member of the city council. The matter finally became unbearable, and the Judge wrote Moreau a note, warning him to desist or take the consequences of his outrageous course. The note brought forth a tirade of invective such as are rarely witnessed in the columns of a journal, that makes any pretentions to respectibility. The conclusion was, the parties met on the street, and Dykeman shot his assailant, in a serious, but not fatal manner. Dykeman has been placed under bonds, and so the matter rests. The city authorities have had great difficulty to restrain the populace from mobbing Moreau.

The popular vote of the United States may be pretty nearly approximated in the following estimate:

White for Greeley	3,300,000
White for Grant	2,900,000
White majority for Greeley	400,000
Negroes for Grant	950,000
Negroes for Greeley	50,000
Negro majority for Grant	900,000

Grant's total majority, white and negro combined. is 500,000. The total vote is fully 7,500,000. Grant's majority on this is about 7 per cent.—in other words, he has 100 votes to Greeley's 93. This is the extent of the tremendous sweep we hear so much about.

The Legislature.

The special session of the Indiana Legislature, met on Wednesday of last week. In the House, 95 members responded to the roll call. W. K. Edwards was chosen speaker, and C. T. Nixen cheif clerk. In the Senate, Jos. W. Friedley, was elected president, and D. H. Oliver prinicpal Secretary. These gentlemen were all nominees of the Republican caucus, and chosen by a strict party vote—53, to 43 in the House, and and 26 to 21 in the Senate.

Quite a number of bills have been introduced; among the more important, is one to modify the Fee and Salary bill, and one to raise the salary of all the Judges in the State, also bills to repeal the Kankakee Drainage Law and to change the time for the fall election to the second Tuesday in November.

Joke on a Joker.

One of the best dressed and most brilliant young men in Chicago, who parts his hair in the middle essayed to please a party of select young ladies and gentlemen, by a few flashes of wit. The most noticeable scintillation of his wit, was a conundrum. "Haw—," said he, 'Aw—when is a lady not a lady?' Nobody could tell, and the propounder of the conundrum gave the answer. "When she's a little buggy" he said. A dead silence fell upon the company, and the funny man was the focus of a good many singular glances. He soon became conscious that "some one had blundered." So he dived into a vest pocket, and brought out a news paper scrap, and read it attentively three or four times and then brightened up. "Haw—yes of course,—Haw, yes of course, he said, when she's a sulkey. Knew it was some kind of a wagon.'

National Telegraph.

It is already foreshadowed that an effort will again be made, at this winter's session, of Congress, to place in in the hands of the Government, the telegraph business of the country. The measure had many friends at the last session, and its adoption was vigorously urged by the opposition party, but never regularly brought up for legislative action. Washington advices concur that the Postmaster General will recommend the project in his forthcoming report and the President favor it in his message.

The scheme is one that should meet the stern opposition of every one who prizes individual rights and is a foe to the centralization of power in the general government. If the precedent be established in this instance, of the federal head assuming the control of private business, it will be difficult to fix the limits of its encroachments. A warrent would be found in it to direct the management of stages, railroads, steam boats, express companies and all common cariers, as a member of congress stated, last winter, was the case in Prusia, and other countries, in Europe where the first step has been taken, and where the scheme was adopted to establish a more thorough system of spying over all private business, and political messages. This condition of affairs is not desirable on the part of individuals, nor is it necessary in our republican system.

It is alleged in behalf of the project that public and private business alike, would be attended to with more promptness regularity and accuracy than under the present system. This is to be questioned seriously. The administration of our existing postal service, in the hands of the government officials exclusively does not show anymore expedition or punctuality, than the telegraph service in private hands and the latter system is certainly to be prefered since it is liable to indemnities, for losses and inconveniences, while the former refuses to be responsible for the losses of any mail matter. And on the score of cheap transmission, the arrangement now existing, is again entitled to the preference, for the reason that the seeming reduction, would be an imposition to them who do not use the telegraph, to be made up by them in increased taxes. The most alarming feature of this centralizing project, is the immence army of federal office holders, in addition to the postmasters, revenue assessors, and collectors, it would create in each county throughout the Union—adding at least 20,000 to the multitude who are now holding places upon their tenure of their allegiance to the administration. No sound reason exists for the project and there are many reasons why it should not find favor,

Missouri, like New York, is in the height of the shooting season. Five shooting affrays are reported in one week as occurring in different parts of the State. Three were the results of political quarrels, and the other two of long standing feuds. The victims represent both political parties. The State authorities, however, have shown themselves fully competent to deal with such offenders, and the indictment of the Cass county lynchers indicates a healthy feeling of respect for the majesty of the law.

The Diamond Excitement at Denver.

DENVER, Col., Nob. 20—Mr. Stanton, the man with the $250,000 ruby, arrived here from Arizona last night and freeley exhibited the gem, which is very beautiful, though the jewelers are in doubt as to its being anything more than a garnet. He also shows what he calls a $15,000 diamond Another diamond company is organizing here, and the excitement is growing, although much mystery surrounds the whole subject, and but little or no positive evidence is to be obtained as to any substatial basis for it.

Pork is selling at Cincinnati and other hog-centres at 3½ @ 4c. If any change in price the supposition is that there will be decline rather than an advance. Corn in the far West is so plenty that it has no market value, and but little better, is the condition in Ohio. Corn and hogs are the main reliance of Western farmers for tax-money and other winter outlays. These are abundant, and with fair and remunerative prices, immense sales would be made. With the present depression of prices and difficulty in marketing, money is likely to be scarce during the the winter, and serious trouble may therefore be anticipated by all classes, particularly the mercantile.

There is a great deal of just animadversion on the system of duelling, once prevalent and not yet entirely extinct in the South. But duelling is fair play compared to the fashionable style of murder in New York. In a duel a man has a chance for his life. Here the pistol bullet bears at once the challenge and the doom. In a duel both parties might happily be killed, and the public spared the expense and unpleasantness of detaining a murderer for several months in a cell where, if he is at all consumptive, the disease is likely to take a fatal hold upon him.—After all, the system of dueling has its advantages.

Does Advertising Pay.

The question is answered in a sensible manner by the Maquoketa Sentinel. A grocer of that town, kept a column advertisement in that paper, the year around, but went to the office saying that he must cut it down, as he did'nt see as it was paying him; his neighbor in the same business did not advertise at all, and he claimed that he sold as many goods as he did. The newspaper man doubted this, and proposed to settle the mattor by having the advertiser go to the railroad freight office and get the number of pounds of goods received by each, during the past six months. This was done, and resulted in the following aggregate result: Number of pounds received by the advertiser, 367,860. Number of pounds received by the dealer who didn't advertise, 159,629. Leaving a ballance in favor of the advertiser, of 208,260 pounds. The advertiser did'nt take out, nor cut down his advertisement.

HORACE GREELEY.

New York, Nov. 25.—A morning newspaper publishes to-day the story. current in all news paper circles for nearly a week, that Horace Greeley is insane, and an inmate of the asylum at White Plains. The same paper makes public, an interview with Whitelaw Reid managing editor of the Tribune in which that gentleman is made to say in answer to a question, that Greeley has been under medical treatment, for some time. He is always eccentric in his manner, and very likely could be considered by some, stark mad, but, he is simply nervously prostrated. For months prior to the death of his wife, he did not sleep an hour a night, and since her death he has been in the same condition. In answer to the question, Is it true that Greeley drew a knife on one of his friends?" Ried. was made to answer by the interview "I tell you that Greeley has done nothing which to those who know him, seems strange. He was always an eccentric man, and at best acts as if he was queer, but now, when nearvously prostrated, strangers might think him crazy. I have seen him positively furious, when a first proof has been brought him instead of a revise; but I know and understand him. Reid said that notwithstanding the loss of appetite, Greeley was in general good health, and made a request of the reporter to say, that he was only nervously, prostrated, as there is no use in saying more, as Greeley has enough to weary him, what he needs is quiet and rest.

During the last few years thousands of cattle have been driven into Montany from Texas, Colorado, and Wyoming. It is estimated that over 100,000 head are now in the Territory, the owners intending to let their herds increase, until the Northern Pacific Road gives them an outlet to market.

The Iowa Homestead advocates the burning of corn for fuel in the western counties of the State, where coal can not be bought for less than 20 cents a bushel.

The Indianapolis Sentinel makes the following suggestion to the Legislature now in session which we think is worthy of attention at the hands of our lawmakers. It says:

"This session of the Legislature should by no means fail to pass, at this session, a bill making it the duty of township assessors to collect the agricultural statistics of their respective townships, taking a complete statement of the condition of the crops, and the yield of each. This was formerly the duty of the assessors, but for some reason the section requiring that statistical information to be made was repealed. There are no means now, except direct inquiry by letter, to ascertain the condition or yield of the corps of the State, and thus our people are left at the mercy of the bulls and bears, who can inflate or depress the markets by exaggerated reports, and from 'rings' whereby the people may be deceived and caused to dispose of their products at unprofitable prices. It is to be hoped that this Legislature, which seems a practical body, will give due attention to this matter.

The New York Sun is the first to enter the field for the campaign of 1876. Read its platform.

1 No centralization. No extension of the functions, of the Federal Government.

2 Congress and the President to be deprived of all excessive and unauthorized powers, assumed during and since the war, and to be brought back within the limits of the Constitution.

3 The State to control their own affairs, and especially their own elections.

4 Reform of the civil service.

5 Restoration of specie payments.

6 Revenue reform, all internal taxes to be put on a revenue basis.

7 Only one term for the President.

8 No re-election of Grant in 1876

General McClellen, has followed the reduction examples of the Grand Vizer of Turkey. His salary as Engineer of the Docks at New York, has been reduced from 20,000 to 10,000, at his own request.

At Portland, Oregon, on a recent Sunday morning, a courtesan named Belle Martin, was found dead in a house of ill-fame, on her knees at her bed side, and her arms resting on the bed as if in the atitude of prayer.

The lectures will be continued Friday and Saturday evenings. Afternoon free lectures to children by Dr. Butler, every day at 3 o'clock, on ringing of the bell, at the M. E. Church Lectures 25 cents, children 15 cts.

One of the most deplorable features of the Boston fire, is the large number of working girls thrown out of employment, in the tailoring establishments. It is estimated that about ten thousand are thus thrown out upon the world. There is great danger that many of them will be driven to sell themselves for bread, unless means are taken for their relief.

Thousands upon thousands of buffalo hides are being brought in here by hunters. In some places, whole acres of ground are covered with hides spread out, with the fleshy side up to dry. It is estimated that there are south of Arkansas and west of Wichita, from one to two thousand men, shooting buffalo for the hide alone. Is it any wonder that the red man sometimes protest against this wanton destruction of his cattle.

GREAT REDUCTION ON
Raisins, Currants, Peaches, Prunes, Teas,

Etc. We purchased 1000 boxes No 1. Layer Raisins before the advance, and now offer them at 12½c per pound, or $2.50 per box of 25 lbs. This is equal to 10c per lb, and the lowest they have ever been in this market.

We also purchased a large lot of Zanta Currants. This fruit is generally considered low at 15c, we now offer the best quality at 10c.

The greatest reduction is on teas—selling 2 and 3 chests a day—no intermediate profits to pay, as we purchase direct of the importers and sell to the customers, thereby saving the profits of the Jobber, speculator and wholesaler. The failure of five of the largest tea importers of N. Y has broken the tea market. We have taken advantage of the situation, and purchased large quantities at low rates, and we now offer all grades 15c per pound lower than former price.

WISHART'S
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT next week.

"Ep-miz-zoo-tic" is what they call it in Fort Wayne.

Live turkeys are numerous on our streets.

THE chicken "epizootic" is spreading rapidly. Beware.

A GREAT many 'roosters' will crow their last this morning.

OATS has raised five cents on the bushel—making it 35 cents.

OUR business men are making preparation for the holidays. Look at their advertisements.

THE weather has opened pleasant again, and now work should be pushed forward on the buildings not yet finished.

A PRINTER named Malcomb beat the horse disease at Goshen last week. He lit out, leaving a number of unpaid bills behind.

The brick-layers' commenced working again on last Tuesday. It is hoped that good weather will prevail for a week or two yet.

A Greeley girl in Ohio would'nt have her bustle made with a paper containing election returns, She said the figures were bad.

Music Lessons.

Instruction given on the Piano and Organ at the M. E. Parsonage, by Mrs. S. M. Cone.

Fort Wayne is now a first-class city.—It has a variety theater. G. G. Grady, of circus notoriety, is the manager.—From what the papers say it is doing a good business.

M. John Hamil, forer proprietor of the Waterloo Marble Works, has disposed of his interest in that establishment and removed his family to this city, where he intends to make it his future home.—Fort Wayne Journal.

You may dig potatoes all day and all night, but you cannot look over the advertising columns of your local paper without finding the names of the most enterprising men in your place. And you cannot look them over without finding something that you want.

C. ORFF & Co., at Fort Wayne, are out in a new advertisement, announcing greater bargains than ever. For the holidays they offer extra bargains, and those wanting to make a nice present to their friends will find just what they want at their popular establishment.

THE dedication of the new Baptist church takes place on Wednesday evening, Debember 11th. Rev. J. R. Stone, of Fort Wayne, and Elder Ward officiating. Dr. Stone is one of the first ministers in the city, and those desiring to hear a pleasing and eloquent discourse should attend

The cars on the Eel River road are running within three miles of this city. The managers are building a first-class road and they are pushing the work rapidly.—Mr. Geo. E. Adams, director, deserves great credit for untiring energy in working for the completion of this important line to our city.—Logansport Pharos.

A draft of wind may bring unpleasant results. A draft horse will draw large loads or break a trace; but a draught of Capt. White's good Teas brings nothing but pleasure. If you don't believe it, try it. The fruit house announces a new price list for the holidays. See advertisement in another colum.

Gen. Mansfield, the heavy man and wit of the D., E. R. & I. Railroad, called on us last Saturday. Buttons flew in all directions and we are now laid up for repairs. He is the most jovial, mirth inspiring, whole souled, genial Michigander we ever met. An hour with him will effectually cure the worst kind of a case dyspepsia.—Pharos.

The General Assembly at Indianapolis, moved and instigated by one Butts, has tried to transmogrify itself into a brevet prayer meeting. We understand that the aforesaid Butts intends to introduce a bil, making it obligatory upon all public officers, above the rank of School Director, to have at least ten minutes worship each morning.—*Col. Church Dedication.

The Baptists of this place expect to dedicate their new church building to the worship of God, on Wdnesday evening, December 11th. Sermon by Dr. J. R Stone, of Fort Wayne.

There will also be services on Sabbath morning, December 8th, and on the following Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

S. B. WARD, Pastor.

Horse Disease.

The following is a recipe for making a remedy for the horse distemper which has proved efficacious in several cases of New York City:

"Take of powdered camphor, tartar emetic, powdered niter, powdered resin and powdered licorice root, each two ounces; of powdered copperas, chlorite of potassa and powdered elecampane, one ounce each; of powdered digitalis, half an ounce. Mix well and give a tablespoonful two times a day in warm bran mash."

Uncle L——. Sammy, tell me, have you read that beautiful story of Joseph?

O yes, uncle.

Uncle L——. Well sir, then, what wrong did they do when they sold their brother?

Sam—They sold him too awful cheap I think.

No one has accepted the $50 wager Mr Pinker offered in regard to fast brick-laying; consequently his hands are as plastic in that business.

THE Auburn girls have become so modest that they remain home from the mites, because the boys want ten cents worth of "snap-and-catch-'em."

IN a neighboring town we frequently hear of parties and oyster suppers, indulged in by the young folks. The young society in Auburn used to do likewise, but of late they give signs of "epizootic." Disturb not its slumbers.

ELECTION.—The election of a Director of the Building, Loan and Savings Association will take place at the meeting of the stockholders this (Thursday) evening A full attendance is desired.

AN Amateur Minstrel troupe will give us a first-class entertainment, providing a Hall can be procured at a reasonable price. Let's have a show if possible, and every one ought to encourage the new beginners.

EPIZOOTIC.—We've got it. We mean the horses. The horses of our livery stable are all suffering more or less with the disease, except one—that one is dead. He died at 4 o'clock in the morning, and her name was Flora. Mr. Ryan, the proprietor informs us that the patients are getting along very well.

Indiana State Teachers' Association.

The State Teachers' Association will meet at Logansport, December 31, and January 1st, 2nd and 31, 1872—'73. Teachers attending the association, will be taken at half fare on all railroads leading into the city. Hotels and boarding houses will entertain the members of the association as half the usual rates. Let all attend who can. JAMES A. BARNS.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—We learn that a peddler was robbed of about sixty dollars by two young scamps from the country through the means of that ever popular sensation—the horse disease. These young men prevailed upon the peddler to accompany them into the country to see several sick horses, he being an ameteur veterinary. When at the lower end of town they presented a pistol, and he came down with several pounds, and escaped without wounds. He is a wiser but a poorer man to-day.

THE hen disease will soon take the place of the horse disease. New York State and city are already afflicted. It is calculated that this will spread at the same rate as the Epizootic disease. The disease runs its course very swiftly, and the fowls are taken with staggering fits, a running at the beak, and in fact bearing all the symptoms of the epizooty. These fits recur with decreasing intervals and increasing violence until death, which generally ensues a few hours after the attack. As soon as the chickens are attacked they hide in holes or crawl off to some corner and then die.

THAT great blatherskite, Morean, the head and front of the O'Conor party in this State, got shot at Logansport, the other day, for publishing a column like the following, against Judge Dykeman, the shooter:

"In his mother's womb, Omniscience knew the vile imposition that was assuming shape, knew the unbounded liar, the base panderer, the licentious lecher, the unstinted thief, embodied in the human form, developing there, and in His infinite pity for humanity, sent him forth so marked by deformity, that the world should know the villain, and be on its guard."

A correspondent of the Goshen Times in that paper last week says, I am credibly informed that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company contemplate building a Branch road, from their new extension road to Lake Michigan, and I am satisfied that Auburn, in DeKalb County, in this State, is the proper starting point; thence passing Kendallville, Goshen, Elkhart and Miles, and terminating at St. Joseph, Mich. I have also reason to believe that they will built a road from Newwark, Ohio, to connect with their branch road at Auburn. This would give one continuous line of new railroad from St. Joseph to the coal fields of Ohio, and would, I think, no doubt, be one of the most important roads in the State.

DARING ROBBERY.—While our exchanges have from time to time given the details of every class of robbery, we have enjoyed an immunity from the presence of the light fingered gentry, until now. But our record in this respect is no longer clear. A daring robbery has been perpetrated in our midst. The residence of W. H. McIntosh was entered during the absence of the family, and $400 in cash taken therefrom. The money was placed in a cup and covered with rice, but even this precaution did not suffice. The family being absent several days, could not tell when the robbery took place. Mr. M. seems to be unfortunate in the loss of large sums, as but a year or so ago he was bled to the tune of $1000. But it is an ill-wind that blows nobody good, and our citizens should take advantage of it by securing their premises, and guarding themselves against the exploits of theives and burglars.

AN editor is a man who lives on what other men owe him, until he starves to death. A subscriber is a person who takes a paper and says he is very much pleased with it, and he tells everybody else that ought to "subscribe." After he has "subscribed" about seven years the editor writes to him and asks him to let him have $2.60 (two dollars and fifty cents,) and then the subscriber writes back to the editor and tells him not to send him his old paper any more, for there is nothing in it, and then the poor editor goes and starves some more.

A remarkable instance of resuscitation has lately occurred near Pine Creek, Elkhart county. A young lady named Parks it seems, died last week and was laid out Her brothers and sisters refused to be comforted. They were loud and impassionate in their manifestations of grief. The supposed dead came to, and, rising from her bier, asked why they called her back to earth. She said she had been to the other land. She sat up and talked a full hour better than she had before for months, and then expired after bidding them all good-bye.—Ligonier Banner.

THE HORSE DISEASE.

Dr. Langworthy, the eminent professor who has been delivering a course of lectures at this place, during the past week, varied programme one evening by special request; by touching briefly upon the symptoms and treatment of the new sensation, the horse disease. We are permitted to give the following as his views upon the subject:

On the first appearance of the disease give the horse a thorough steaming with boiled oats in a bag and so fastened to the head that the steam from the oats will be inhaled. Repeat until the nostrils are free, of a natural color. Then take leather, or what is better, carbolic disinfectant, in grains like large sized cannon powder place it in a shallow pan and burn it where the horse will be obliged to breathe it. If the throat is sore [which generally will be the case] apply frequently hot vinegar, rubbing it well in with the hand, and wrap the throat in flannel dipped in vinegar. Sponge out the nostrils frequently with warm vinegar. Blanket well night and day, but not enough to produce sweating, and give plenty of fresh, clean bedding. Give several bran mashes, with from one half to one ounce of powdered nitre in each, and use linseed meal or flax seed in the oats. Use tepid water in the mash. The hay and oats should be moistened with water—preferable tar water.—Most cases, if taken in time, will yield to the above treatment; but should the attack be very severe, accompanied with considerable fever and very sore throat, instead of the vinegar an embrocation of equal parts of linseed oil, turpentine, tincture of cantharides and hartshorn should be rubbed in night and morning. Give as a drench, night and morning, the following:

Spirit of nitre ether, 1 ounce; laudanum, 4 drachums; nitrate of potassa, 3 drachms; water, 1 pint Mix.

Should the horse refuse his feed, offer him frequently thin gruel with a handful of pulverized slippery elm bark and licorice root stirred in it.

When convalescing exercise gently daily and stimulate the appetite with the following ball:

Extract of gentian, 6 drachms; powdered ginger, 2 dranchms. Mix.

A handful of wood ashes mixed with a little salt thrown into the feed trough for the horse to lick up will be relished by him and will be beneficial.

The Central Hotel.

Fort Wayne has just been provided with a new feature in the hotel line. The O'Connell Brothers had a grand opening of their new Central Hotel, which is to be conducted on the European plan, with excellent dining rooms attached. By this arrangement you can engage a room at this hotel by the day or week and board where you please. It is very convenient for business men, and will be found a great convenience by all.

The formal opening of the Central took place last Thursday evening, which we had the pleasure of attending. One of the halls was prepared for those who delight in a hop, Leifel's band being present, but for our part we enjoyed the other hal which said supper. We had a seat about the center of the table, because it was the "Central," and reached both ways. And what good things from a delicious viralze up through a long list of animals and birds with entres of every kind, to satisfy the most delicate. Dan and John know how to cater to the public taste, and we have not the least doubt of their entire success. When you go to the city, try the Central.

IN MEMORIAM.

Bt a regular meeting of Butler Lodge, No. 282, I. O. O. F., of Butler, DeKalb Co., Ind., the following premble and resolutions were unanimously adopted;

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in his wise providence to take from our midst our worthy Sister, Hannah Maxwell, wife of Brother George W. Maxwell, therefore

Resolved, That in our bereavement we have lost a dear, much beloved, faithful and kind Sister, a warm hearted and generous friend.

Resolued, That although to us darkness and mystery encompass the removal of one so kind, whose life seemed so full of usefullness, yet in the deepest humility we recognize the hand of a Divine Master who doth all things well.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our dear Brother, the husband, the children and friends in their loss of an affectionate wife, kind mother and dear friend, and invoke the divine blessing in this their great affliction.

Resolved, That although we greatly mourn her loss, yet we feel that our great loss is her great gain.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect our Lodge room shall be draped in mourning thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the Auburn COURIER and one copy be presented to the husband of the Sister and one be kept on the files of the Lodge.

A. F. PINCHIN,

CHAS. HAYNES,

There was a terrible suicide near Hanna Station on Monday morning last. A short time ago a German named Jacob Schmidt a machinist from Chicago (so he said), came to Morgan station, where he remained a little while. Leaving his watch and his baggage checks at Morgan (with orders to send the same to his children at Chicago), he came to Hanna the first of last week. He was plainly deranged in mind, and being almost naked, was supplied with some articles of clothing by Mr Phipps, and kindly looked after by the villagers. On Sunday he went out and laid down on the railroad track—evidently with the intention of having the cars run over him; but he was observed by the engineer of a freight train and brought back to the station. Monday morning he went quietly out of town, it seems, and hid himself in a clump of bushes close to the track, a little west of Hanna. When the express train came up, and just a few moments before it reached the where he was lying, he issued from the cover, put his neck on the rail and in an instant the trucks severed his head from his body.—The insanity of the deceased was perhaps owing to some domestic or business infelicity.—Laporte Herald.

The Melancholy Days.

The melancholy days have come,
And though their rather late,
The boys and girls do just the same—
Still swing on the gate.

The melancholy days have come,
The saddest of the year;
Too warm for whisky punches,
Too cold for lager beer.

The melancholy days have come,
The elections made them so;
And Massa Greeley hangs right up
Do shubbel and de hoe.

Peters' Musical Monthly completes its tenth Volume with the December number and it is doing Mr. Peters but simple justice to state that his excellent magazine is improving with age.

The December number, price 30 cents contains three Ballads, a Christmas Song, an Anthem, a Four-hand Piece, as played at Theodore Thomas' Orchestral Concerts and three splendid Piano Pieces, any single piece being worth in sheet-music from more than Mr. Peters asks for the entire lot.

Giving so much real good music for such a small sum, it is no wonder that Peters' Musical Monthly has hosts of friends among our music loving people.—Send the Publisher, J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York, $1, and secure the last four numbers as sample copies, or $3 for a years' subscription.

Dr. Langworthy

By request, will make his

Special Lecture to Gentlemen.

No one under 16 years old admitted. The truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, will be frankly and freely spoken. Those who are afraid he will say something to make them condemn themselves, or their habits, hab better stay away.

Oh, wad the power some giftie gie us,
To see oursels as ithers see us;
It wad from many an error free us,
And foolish notion.

DEATHS.

In memory of Mrs. Ellen Fetterly, who was born November 10th, 1853, and departed this life November 18th, 1872.

Ella possesed a genial spirit, flowing like the current of youth with buoyancy that secured the warmest friendship of those who knew her best.

That terrible destryer, consumption, like a worm in the bud fed upon her damask cheek, until happily released, her new fledged spirit took its upward flight.

She bore her affliction with christian fortitude, and gave the happiest assurance to her friends that the promised place possessed her soul.

Repose gentle spirit, the life has been won,
Though lost for a while on the billowy wave
Thine anchor was cast, and its hold is secure
In the morning we'll meet thee, Jesus will save

A Representative House.

Among the multitude of different branches of trade in Fort Wayne, none are of more importance than the boot and shoe trade. This branch is well represented; prominent among them all is the shoe house of Markley, Schrader & Co. They came to Fort Wayne in 1866, and by their gentlemanly deportment and close attention to business, they have acquired a trade perhaps not excelled by any house in their line. Not satisfied with bargains given their customers heretofore, they propose to do still better for them in the future. Their stock is very large, being a full line of everything needed for mens, boys and youths, women, Misses and children's wear. They are giving great bargains; one cannot know how cheap they are selling, unless they call. Examine the goods and learn prices. We advise all in want of boots, shoes or rubbers to give them a call. tf.

Lots of people that have never been in Fort Wayne and are not acquainted can find the Red Front clothing hall, No. 5, Keystone block. Any woman or child can find this place, and you will save from 20 to 25 cents on each dollar.

When you go to Fort Wayne to buy clothing ask for one of our price list before you purchase your goods, and get posted on prices and not be cheated by outsiders. No. 5 Keystone block.

Everybody that goes to Fort Wayne should not fail to call at the Red Front Clothing Hall, No. 5 Keystone block, and see the largest stock of clothing in the city. It has all been bought for cash before the late advance of wool.

Menagerie Misteries.

A New York curiosity seeker penetrated the menagerie misteries, and brings forth some points of general interest. One dealer, who confided that he imported every species of wild animal, from the ghoul to the guinea pig, developed some of the tricks of the show trade in a way Mr. Barnum would not appreciate. Does the proprietor of a menagerie lose his elephant he repairs to this gentleman's repository. He states which he would prefer, an African or an Asiatic, elephant.—He gives his orders according to his fancy, and in due time the animal arrives, and is immediately shipped to wherever his new owner's caravan may happen to be. If an African lion is wanted, a dispatch is sent at once to Cape town; If horned horses, giraffes, or rhinoceroses are in demand, orders are at once sent out to ship to New York, all that can be bought or found. So complete are all his arrangements, that none are found to compete with him in the business. He has the entire trade to himself, and supplies every menagerie in the country with such animals as they need, from time to time. There are ever thirty menageries traveling about this country every year. Every year they lose a certain per cent. of their animals, from natural death or by accident. Some of the more rare animals are generally delicate and never become acclimatized, and consequently do not live long. This makes them very costly. Others, like the giraffe, often die of seasickness on the voyage. The giraffe, too, is so awkwardly built that it does not lie down with its legs under it like others of the antelope tribe; consequently if the vessel rolls at sea, it loses its balance, is swung against the side of the cage and frequently breaks its long ungainly neck. The risk runs up the price of giraffes to a high figure. A year or two ago a well known showman, who had imported four giraffes through this gentleman's agency, but who took the sea risk on himself, lost them all on the voyage. He could not now get four equally good specimens under $25 000. But when a cargo does come safely across, the profit is a very large one.

THE FOREST MONARCHS.

It is a great mistake to suppose that any of these animals are captured when full grown. A full grown lion, could he be trapped and put into a cage, would soon pine away and die. A full grown wild elephant, is the most savagely treacherous of all animals. Even when captured young and trained in a circus, the elephant betrays these inborn qualities more and more as he grows older. It is only of late years, that elephants have been imported from Africa. Our monopolist dealer in wild beasts, obtained four young elephants from Africa, and retailed them here, at about $8,000 apiece. They were "babies." The elephant is an animal of very slow growth. When five years old, it does not stand more than three feet high; and one out of the four alluded to above, was only thirty inches high. They were however a perfect godsend to the showmen, in the way of startling novelties. One the thirty inch one, was coolly exhibited as a dwarf. Another was shown as the offspring of an old female elephant, which had been in this country years before the young one had first saw the light of his native African jungle. Three of these young elephants are still alive, and in this country, but they have grown out of all knowledge, especially the dwarf. The showman who exhibits the young calf, asserted to have been born here, made a great hit, as it is pretty generally known, that elephants do not breed in this country. Lions breed freely, in fact there are few menageries but what have a litter of cubs every year. But the mother always destroys or deserts them and they are obliged to be brought up on milk given to them in bottles, similar to that used in rearing babies by hand. The hippopopotamus has also been known to breed, in the Zoological gardens in Londen. Like the lioness, she destroys her young as soon as they are born; but the attendants in Londen did succeed in rescuing one young one from its mother, and in bringing it up by hand. But animals brought up in this artificial way, and born in a confined cage never grow up to be such fine specimens as those born in a state of nature. As a general thing, all animals are captured when young, by the natives, acting under instructions from the white agents. If lions are wanted, the natives sally up the country and either kill the parents and secure the cubs, or track the lioness to her den and waiting till she goes out hunting for food, and seize the opportunity of stealing the cubs. In capturing elephants, they drove them, old and young into an enclosure, hamstring the old ones so that they are unable to protect their calves and then easily secure their young ones. An African lion commands a higher price in the market than an Asiatic lion, on account of his more noble and commanding appearance; his mane is much longer and thicker than that of his Asiatic brother, and is black. The quantity and length of the mane is the test of the value of lions. An African lion sells for about three thousand dollars. An Asiatic lion sells at only two thousand. The same with tigers. Royal Bengal tigers commands about $6000 a pair. Brazilion, about $4,000 a pair. Camels and dromedaries bring about $1,200 apiece. White camels have been sold at two thousand five hundred each. Horned horses or as they are so called, though they are only a variety of antelope from $1,500 upward. The aggregate value of all the wild animals in different caravans, in this country must approximate $2,500,000. In no other country in the world, are there so many kept in confinement. The show business, is essentially American, and as a general thing a profitable one.

A political orator in new Orleans recently quoted history by referring to the iron coffin of De Soto, containing the gold trumpet presented to the illustrious discoverer by Queen Victoria.

Why, you fool, exclaimed an intelligent auditor, Queen Victoria wasn't born for more'n two hundred years after De Soto died; an' how could she give him a gold trumpet?

She left it to him in her will, solemnly replied the orator.

CHARLEY KLOZ.T

Married For Money.

'Oh, dear, I do wish he would come.

Kate Talbot looked at her watch, and then ran out in the hall to compare its enameled hands with the ponderous hands on the dial of the old clock on the landing, and then she looked down the elm-shadowed prospective of the quiet road and took yet a second glance at the watch with an impatient sort of a sigh.

She was a tall, handsome girl, with bright brown hair, coiled around her head in a coronet fashion, that harmonised with the oval way she had of throwing back her slender white throat and the stately grace of her every motion Her eyes, large and soft, of a peculiar hazel tint, were full of dreamy languer, and the pink and white bloom of her cheeks betokened very plainly that she had never turned day into night and night into day, after the approved fashion of metropolitan belles. No, Kate Talbot was a rustic beauty, fresh and uncontaminated by the sinisinfluences of city life.

'Here he comes, and he is not all alone!"

And within thifty seconds Miss Talbot was on the steps of the Ionic portico, inclined her head to Mr. Rossmore Wylie, and holding out an eager, fluttering hand toward her father. He shook his head.

"No letter papa?"

"None.'

Rossmore's quick eye scanned Kate's countenance as she stood there, a single rose among her dark tresses, and one hand slightly holding together the folds of her blue cashmere shawl, How plainly he saw the expression of keen disappointment that flitted across her face.

"Kate," said Mr. Talbot, quietly dismounting from his horse somehow it is difficult for me to believe in this gay caviler of yours.'

"Papa,'

'Out of sight, out of mind," is a very old proverb, you know, and it is just possible among the attractions of a fashionable watering place that he has forgot the little wild flower of Weldington hills.'

'Never, papa!' You and Rossmore were always unjustly prejudiced against him.'

Kate spoke with genuine enthusiasm. She believed in Bruce Gaynor, just as implicitely as she believed in the liquid gold of the sunshine at her feet, and it seemed impossible that any one else should for a second doubt his cincerity and truth.

Rossmore Wylie looked at her with grave intentness. Suppose—suppose for an instant—that Bruce was faithless! He sternly checked with him self the upspringing of his heart. Was it for him to build up a palace of happines on the wreck of Kate's first love?

'He never cared for her as I do!" was the rebellious outcry of his whole nature.

And Rossmore Wylie resolved to go to Saratogo and survey the field for himself.

Mr. Bruce Gaynor was walking up and down the broad pizza, in the afternoon sunshine. It was certainly very considerate of him to give the young ladies such a fine opportunity of admiring his dark eyes, rich Spanish complexion, and exquisite feature.—'the glass of fashion, and the mould of form.' Bruce felt that he was captivating, and completely forgot that he had intended to devote that particular after noon in writing to Miss Talbot, the pretty Weddington girl who had made such an impression on him.

'Have you heard who arrived to-day Gaynor?"

Col. Melford's hand laid on Gaynors, shoulder, arrested his sauutering movements.

'No; any one worth cultivating?'

"Miss Montressor."

'Miss Montressor. the heiress? Why I thought she was to be among the White Mountains.'

'She has changed her mind, apparrently, at all events, here she is, with nineteen trunks, and no end to the hat boxes. There's a chance for you old boy,'

Bruce Gaynor's handsome eyes sparkled.

"Introduce me.'

'Can't, unfortunately, havn't the honor of a personal acquaintance, but I can tell you who can."

'Who?'

'Wylie; he came yesterday—Rossmore Wylie, you know he's a cousin or something of that golden damsel, And there she is.

Gaynor winced.

"What! that fat downy concern by the door? Why I thought that she was a beauty!'

'So she is considered by a financial view. My dear fellow don't be hypocritical.

'Why she's forty, if she's a day, and I'll wager my diamond shirt studs, her teeth are false.'

"Very possible; but only think of her bank shares, and rai'road stock! I tell you I'd go in for the prize quick enough, if I wasn't already mortgaged to Mrs. Melford, bless her dear little heart. You're the best 'ooking fellow here! Why don't you think over the matter?'

Gaynor did think the matter over, and made up his mind in very short order.

'Good evening Mr. Wylie," said he in honeyed accents, half an hour later, as he encountered Rossmore. 'I believe I had the pleasure of meeting you at Weldington.'

Mr. Wylie inclined his head frigedly.

'I understand that Miss Montressor is your cousin, and I have resolved to ask at your hand, the privilege of an introduction.'

"I shall be happy to oblige you Mr. Gaynor,' said Rossmore, with the slightest preceptable shrug of his shoulders; and I presume my cousin Emily will be gratified with the acquaintenance.

So Mr. Gaynor was formally presented in the list, as a candidate to the smiles of Miss Montressor.

She certainly was not handsome,—Her hair was thin, and rusty brown, her eyes didn't both look in the same direction, and she undoubtedly wore false teeth. But then Bruce remembered her money, and looked at her through a deceptive golden gaze, that made her very lovely.

"I really don't know what to do with Katy Talbot," thought Gaynor to himself, uneasily twisting up the pink envelope, that had enwrapped her last glowing, loving, impulsive little epistle. 'I was a great fool to allow myself to get so entangled. But in is not too late to back out gracefully. I guess that I wont answer her last letter, women are pretty quick to take a hint of that sort. Katy is very pretty, and very much in earnest; but then Katy hasn't got the cash, and it is realy every man's duty to look out for number one.

Thus cogitating, Bruce Gaynor lighted a cigar with the little pink envelope while poor Kate Talbot looking out through the amethyst glow of the August twilight wondered and wondered, and grew heartsick at her lovers silence-

And Rossmore Wylie watched the curious development of the little life drama that was being enacted under his eyes, with contemptuous indignation,

"A heartless wretch!' he thought, Kate will be well rid of him. And yet, poor girl, she did believe in him. Well, this is a strange world, that we live in. If a man steals a five dollar bill, he is sent to prison; if he steals a woman's heart to threw it away when he gets tired of the plaything, he is a hero and a preux chevalier! Bon voyage, Mr. Bruce Gaynor. I shall not interfere with any of your nice little arrangements.

August was gone and over; the golden orb of the full September moon was looking calmly into the curtained recess of the huge bay window, where Mr. Bruce Gaynor had gone down upon his knees to Miss Emily Montressor after the most romantic fashion;

"My Emily, my hearts own peerless treasure!'

'Do you really love me?' lisped the middle-aged charmer, trying to be arch,

'Ah, Emily, I have felt of late how utterable impossible it will be for me to be happy without your smiles. You will marry me dearest?' You will give me the right to call you mine?'

"But Bruce, faltered she, I am so much older than you!'

'A year or so, perhaps but what does that signify to hearts that are congenial?'

"And then my niece would think it so rediculous, she has always opposed my marrying'

"My Emily should not sacrifice the happiness of her lifetime, in the interested methods of others, you will be mine?'

Ah, Bruce, you are so winning! I don't know what to say.'

'Say yes, darling.'

And she said 'yes.'

But I am really afraid to let my niece know it; I am sure she will oppose it."

'My love, we will spare her the opportnity; we will go to the church to-morrow and be married.'

'Oh, Bruce!'

'Emily darling, I am aware that this is not a common proceeding; but then you know that our love is not a common love.'

"I—know it, Bruce,' turning a large emerald ring round and round on her dumpy little finger, "and if you insist on it—"

Mr. Gaynor's handsome eyes flashed in triumph, he was sure of his prise at last.

The sudden wedding of the middle aged Miss Montressor, with the cheif exquisite of the season, made a nine day's sensation at Saratoga. Kate Talbot heard of it in due time, and cried a day and a night, before she began to realize that she had made a fortunate escape. Rossmore Wylie came back just in time to catch her heart on the rebound.

While Mr. Wylie and Kate were gathering grapes and whispering exceeding interesting little nothings, under the green tremulous shadow of the arbors at Weldington, after the most approved style of love making, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Gaynor were enjoying the grandeur of Niagra.

"Sublime! soul entrancing!' ejaculated Bruce, gently pressing the hand that lay upon his arm, and looking enthusiastically upward toward the blinding spray of the cataract.

"Very nice," said Emily, but I am so disappointed about the latter from Emily.

'Who's Emily?'

"My niece, dear, I thought of course she'd send me something very nice, for a wedding pressent. But—

'Dearest, do not weep, let me brush the diamond drops away from that cheek,' murmured Bruce, flourishing his pocket handkercheif romantically around her face.

'I—I can't help it,' sobbed Mrs. Gaynor. 'It's too mean of Emmy.—She always did oppose my marrying; but I never thought she would be so spiteful.'

'We care not for her good or bad opinion, dear, your husband is all the world to you.'

"That's what she says, the hateful thing.

"Calm your self my love, what do we want with her paltry wedding presents?'

'It isn't that Bruce but—'

'But what?'

'She's cut off all my allowance, and she's so rich.'

"What! are there two heiresses in the Montressor family?'

'Two heiresses? No. What do you mean?'

"Do I understand that—that your niece—"

'Why you must have often heard of my niece, Emily Mortressor—she was named after me—the rich heiress? And she's a great beauty too; at least some folks call her so, but for my part, I never could bear these yellow haired blondes.'

Bruce Gaynor stood staring at the everlasting tumult of the "American fall," with eyes that seemed turned to stone, while his fair bride prattled on.

"And now she's cut off my allowance, and left me without a penny in the world, the disgraceful thing!—Well, it's lucky I've got a husband to take care of me now, ain't it, Brucie, dear?

Bruce Gaynor did not answer; he literally could not, His tongue seemed to cleve to the roof of his mouth; every drop of blood in his body stood still. Had he sacrificed his youth and beauty and brilliant prospects for this? The gentle Emily had never looked as coarse and unattractive as she did at this moment, clinging confidingly to his arm, with all a wife's sweet confidence.

And then he remembered sweet Kake Talbot, and thought vindictively of Rossmore Wylie.

"He knew—he must have known that there were two Emily Montressors," thought Gaynor, clenching his teeth. "He saw me walk into the trap and never opened his lips to warn me.

Oh, what a fool! what a double distilled blockhead I have been!'

So he had, but unfortunately it was too late for this self appreciation to be any use. He was safely married to Miss Emily Moutressor, but not to the Emily. And Mr. Gaynor felt, with a bitter pang of humiliation, that his snug litle piece of diplomacy had been an utter failure.

It is reported that 30,000 pounds of domestic, 30,000 of California and 2,500,000 of foreign wool was destroyed by the Boston fire. The entire clippings in the United States is estimated at 100,000,000 pounds, annually. There has been an advance of 10 cents on wool, since the fire. Eight thousand bales of flannels were consumed. This had the effect of raising the price of flannel two cents a yard. Boston was a storehouse for the woolen mills of New England, and the fabrick was immediately hurried from the mills to the city for safe keeping.

The finest compliment that can be paid to a womam of sense is to address her as such.

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1872.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

JAY GOULD has been arrested in New York, on the complaint of President Watson, of the Erie railroad, who charges him with having defrauded that corporation out of about ten millions of dollars......Mrs. Putnam, of New York, has recovered $5,000 damages from the Seventh Avenue Railroad Company for the loss of her husband, who was murdered by one Foster on a car belonging to that line.

ANOTHER of these fearful nitro-glycerine explosions has occurred at Scrub Grass, Pa., on the Allegheny Valley railroad. A large lot of the powerful compound exploded, shaking the earth for miles around, and blowing to atoms Henry J. Wolfe, a telegraph operator, and B. A. Wright, a torpedo agent, not a piece of whom larger than a man's hand could be found. Bits of flesh were found fastened to trees a long distance from the scene of the disaster, and a watch belonging to one of the unfortunate men was picked up a considerable distance off......An ingenious but audacious scamp named Henry S. Bogart has just been arrested in New York. His plan of operations was to go to a wealthy banker or merchant, and, representing himself as a newspaper reporter, allege that he was in possession of information concerning some of his personal peccadilloes, which he would publish unless paid for suppressing it. A. T. Stewart, Claflin, and other noted men, it is said, have at different times been bled by the rascal......The Boston Jubilee building has been sold at auction for $10,500......The Erie railway has brought suit against Daniel Drew for the recovery of $5,000,000, alleged to have been embezzled by him while treasurer of the company in 1868, by the sale of 50,000 shares of watered stock......No little excitement has been caused in New York by the recent "corner" in Northwestern stock, and the signal failure of the big "bears" of Wall street in their scheme to control the market. The triumph of the Jay Gould and Vanderbilt party over Daniel Drew, Henry N. Smith, W. B. Travers, Wm. B. Duncan and other leaders in the "bear" movement is complete and overwhelming. The latter have lost enormous sums. Smith alone is said to be out $4,000,000, while Drew's losses will not fall short of $2,500,000. Others lose from $100,000 to $500,000 each.

HENRY M. STANLEY, the African explorer, was banqueted the other night at Delmonico's, in New York, by the Herald Club. Among the attendants was Dr. John Livingstone, a brother of the great traveler. Mr. Stanley made a speech referring to his travels in search of Livingstone, to the doubts which have been thrown on his statements, and said he defied any of his assailants to prove that he had not met Livingstone at Ujiji. He said among all the charges of being a thief, adulterer, murderer and forger, he wondered if he could forget Livingstone's cap. Mr. Stanley then placed on his head, amid tremendous cheers, a cap purporting to be one formerly worn by Dr. Livingstone......A terrible nitro-glycerine explosion occurred near Yonkers, N. Y., the other day, resulting in the instant death of two young men, and probable fatal injury of two others. The explosive material, it appears, was in wooden boxes, with the necks of the cans projecting out. The place was surrounded by a fence made of hemlock boards, upon each side of which was the notice: "Danger! Danger! Danger! Let nothing tempt you to touch or even go near the contents of the inclosure. It is nitro-glycerine." Notwithstanding this warning, four young men of Yonkers resolved to satisfy their curiosity regarding the effects of nitro-glycerine, and in pursuance of this object two of the party shielded themselves behind large trees for protection, while the other two amused themselves by throwing stones at the powerful compound. After repeated trials one of the cans was struck, and instantly a terrific explosion followed, resulting in blowing the two youths who were uncovered literally to atoms, not a vestige of them being found, fragments of their clothing only being lodged among the branches of the trees beneath which they stood. The two who were protected by the trees were dreadfully lacerated from head to foot, and both will probably die......A rumor was telegraphed from New York, the other day, that Horace Greeley was insane, and had been committed to an asylum. The story is promptly denied by New York journals. It is admitted, however, that Mr. Greeley is in a dangerous condition from excessive nervous prostration, brought on by the excitement and anxiety of the late campaign, by the death of his wife, and by an affliction which has overtaken his eldest daughter. He has performed no mental labor since writing the card announcing his return to the Tribune, but it does not appear that his intellect is impaired, though his mental and physical organization are seeking much-needed rest out of New York.

IT is stated that the victors in the recent speculation in Northwestern stock realize from five to seven millions of dollars. All the losers have settled except Henry N. Smith, who seeks to escape his losses by delivering Northwestern "preferred," instead of "common."

The West.

THE question of calling a convention to form a State Constitution for Washington Territory has been voted down......A tremendous sensation has been caused in San Francisco by the publication of the particulars of an alleged plot by Laura D. Fair and a restaurant waiter named Frank to poison Judge Dwinelle and the counsel for the people, Alex. Campbell. The plot was formed before the second trial, and was revealed by Frank. He said that Mrs. Fair tried to induce him to put poison in a decanter at Dwinelle's house or a milk can at the door. A plan of Judge Dwinelle's house was found in the possession of Frank.

THE arrival of Stanton and others in San Francisco with a ruby reputed to be worth $150,000, and precious stones which they valued at $1,000,000, caused intense excitement. Stanton insisted as to the genuineness of his discoveries, and described the grounds where the diamonds were found with great particularity. The general opinion is that it is a stupendous fraud, and a meeting was held of the Trustees of the San Francisco and New York Mining Company. Reports were received from Clarence King, of the Geological Survey, D. D. Colton, Surveyor Bost and Mr. Fry denouncing the whole thing as a gigantic fraud. The trustees adopted a resolution to that effect, warning the people that all stock sold should be placed in the hands of W. C. Ralston, of the Bank of California. None are losers except the original incorporators. The San Francisco Bulletin publishes an expose of the operations of Arnold, who sold the discovery to the Harpending Company for $150,000.

THE Cincinnati and Indianapolis Junction railroad has been sold at auction for $1,000,000. The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton road was the purchaser......Oliver Cromwell, who has been on trial at Pontiac, Mich., for the murder of Walter Scott, his father-in-law, has been adjudged innocent......Western Minnesota has been visited by another severe snow-storm.

The South.

THERE have been over 1,000 deaths from small-pox in St. Louis since May....William J. Wiggins, an old and popular comedian of St. Louis, has just died of small-pox.

THE steamer H. M. Shreve was burned, recently, at Chester, 50 miles below St. Louis. ......The horse distemper has seriously interfered with business at Memphis, nearly all the horses and mules being sick.

Washington.

THE Supreme Court of the United States has become so seriously incumbered with business that some measure of relief is required at the hands of Congress, and it is said a bill for this purpose has been drawn, and will be introduced early in the session. It contemplates an intermediate court, which shall possess the ordinary powers of the present Supreme Court, and before which all cases shall be argued. The Supreme Court proper shall be made stationary, and justices relieved of all circuit duty, which shall be performed by the judges of the intermediate court, the Supreme Court to give its entire attention to passing upon and deciding questions of law which shall come before it from the intermediate court. The bill will also provide that the intermediate court shall not construe any law, but decide cases which come before it in accordance with the construction placed upon the laws by the Supreme Court......The November report of the Statistician of the Department of Agriculture gives the cotton prospects substantially the same interpretation as the October statement. The comparison by States with last year's crops is as follows: North Carolina, 121; South Carolina, 124; Georgia, 119; Florida, 102; Alabama, 111; Mississippi, 112; Louisiana, 121; Texas, 126; Arkansas, 115; Tennessee, 116. The total production as indicated by the returns of the first week in November is made nearly 3,450,000 commercial bales......The Commissioners appointed to investigate the depredations of Mexicans on the Rio Grande will soon submit their report to Congress. It is stated that they place the damage done by these marauders at $30,000,000......The report of the Secretary of the Interior is a long document, devoted almost exclusively to summarizing the year's work of the various branches of the public service under his charge. It maintains that the present Indian policy is the most successful one that can be devised, and will recommend no change in regard to it......The work of laying down the experimental pneumatic tunnel has been commenced at Washington.

THE President has appointed Brig. Gen. McDowell, whose name heads the list of officers of that grade, to be Major General in place of Gen. Meade, deceased.

IT is announced that the Comptroller of the Currency will hereafter entertain no application for the organization of new national banks, all of the currency authorized by Congress having been absorbed by those already authorized.

Foreign.

LATE advices from Paris indicate that the political complications in the National Assembly, which at one time seriously threatened the peace and harmony of the new Republic, have been brought to a happy termination, and friendly relations established between President Thiers and the Conservatives. The former pledges himself to make all reasonable concessions to secure harmony in the Government. A bill has been drawn up—to which it is said there will be little or no opposition—prolonging his term four years, and providing for a Vice-President; the President and Vice-President to be re-eligible to office only for a second term, and one-third of the Assembly to be renewed annually; the President to be entitled to suspend the promulgation of bills passed by any Assembly until after the annual election, then, if the Assembly insists on the law, it must be promulgated. It is understood that this project of the law meets the approval of Thiers......The German Government has pledged itself to aid Great Britain in the suppression of the slave trade in Eastern Africa. ......The latest news from San Domingo is, that President Baez has succeeded in capturing two of President Cabral's Generals, and has, as is the custom in that climate, murdered them both......Italy is becoming alarmed at the increased emigration from that country to the United States.

THE health of the King of Spain is gradually improving......A serious outbreak of the Republicans is threatened in Italy......The New York Herald's Paris correspondent says, in regard to the division of the political forces in the French National Assembly, that there are six distinct groups, classified thus: First, the extreme left or republican union; second, the republican left or moderate republicans; third, the left center or still more moderate republicans; fourth, the center of the right, who prefer Orleanism; fifth, the right, who desire a monarchy, preferring Henry V.; and sixth, the extreme right, who believe in extreme legitimist notions, the white flag of the Pope, and no dynasty not a thousand years old. No party has a majority, and M. Thiers exists by dealing with six parties like a juggler with six eggs on six plates in his hands. He never holds more than one part at a time, and keeps the rest spinning through the air.

PRESIDENT THIERS is told by the Committee of the French Assembly appointed to answer his message that it needs no reply, as he is only the delegate of that body. The appointment of a select committee of fifteen is suggested for the preparation of a bill to give France a responsible ministry, but no other solution is offered of constitutional questions. If Thiers tenders his resignation—which he threatens to do on certain contingencies—it is said the faction known as the Right is ready to accept it, and make Gen. Changarnier Dictator of France......Terrific gales have prevailed in the English Channel. Many vessels were wrecked, and the loss of life was considerable......Eliza Cook, the English poetess, is hopelessly ill......American and German vessels are rendezvousing at Aden, in Arabia, preparatory to sailing for Zanzibar to suppress the slave trade.

Robert Bowles, the American banker who recently failed, is in a London jail......Queen Victoria gave $2,000 to the sufferers by the inundation of the river Po......Political disturbances are reported at various points in Spain......The lower house of the Prussian Diet has passed the Country Reform bill by a large vote......The differences between the executive and legislative departments of the French Government still continue, and the situation is regarded as very serious. The Radical journals are violent in their language, and declare that a terrible revolution will follow the overthrow of the Government of Thiers. The same journals accuse the Legitimists, Orleanists and Imperialists of having formed a coalition for the downfall of the present Government. Gen. Changarnier is also charged with aiming to secure power.

THE official vote of Ohio for President stands: Grant, 281,815; Greeley, 244,321; Black, 2,100; O'Conor, 1,163. Grant's majority over Greeley, 37,531......The official returns from Virginia give Grant, 93,468; Greeley, 91,652.

AND now comes the announcement that Senator Trumbull will not resign the Chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee. ......The vote of New York is as follows: Grant, 440,809; Greeley, 382,279; O'Conor, 1,454......Official vote of Tennessee: Greeley, 94,219; Grant, 85,683. Majority for Greeley, 8,576......Grant's official majority in Wisconsin is 18,512, in a total vote of 191,462.

MINISTER WASHBURNE declared in a public speech at Chicago, the other day, that he was not a candidate for Judge Trumbull's seat in the Senate......Official vote of Iowa: Grant, 130,130; Greeley, 71,121; O'Conor, 2,202......The total vote of Minnesota, at the late election, was [illegible], and Grant's majority [illegible]. ......The official vote of Indiana stands: Grant, [illegible]; Greeley, [illegible]; O'Conor, 1,416. Grant's majority, [illegible].

A colored delegation from Pennsylvania called on President Grant the other day, and made a formal appeal to him to "raise his all-powerful arm in behalf of the extension to the colored people of this country of more civil and equal rights," from which they declare they are deterred, especially in "the cars on highways." The President replied substantially as follows:

"GENTLEMEN: In your desire to obtain all the rights of citizens, I fully sympathize. That you should have all that other citizens have I know, and I wish that every voter of the United States should stand in all respects alike. It must come. A ticket on a railroad or other conveyance should entitle you to all that it does other men. I wish it to be so. I think, gentlemen, that your very earnest recommendation, however, belongs more properly to the next administration. All citizens, undoubtedly, in all respects, should be equal. Gentlemen, I thank you for the compliment you have paid me."

Edwards Pierrepont, Charles Francis Adams and George William Curtis are prominently mentioned by the Washington gossips in connection with the portfolio of the State Department......Hon. O. P. Morton has been re-elected to the United States Senate from Indiana, he having received the vote of every Republican member, 54 in number. The Democrats voted for Hon. James D. Williams, who received 41 votes......Official vote of Missouri: Greeley, 151,423; Grant, 119,196; O'Conor, 2,429......The official returns from New York make Grant's majority 53,525......Grant's majority in New Jersey is 14,591, in a total vote of 171,625......The corrected canvass in Iowa makes Grant's majority over Greeley 60,114......It seems to be finally settled that Gov. Oglesby will succeed, without any opposition further than what may be interposed by the Democracy, to Judge Trumbull's seat in the Senate from Illinois......Hon. Roscoe Conkling will be re-elected to the Senate from New York almost without opposition.

THE National Board of Underwriters, in session in New York last week, made a very considerable advance in the rates of insurance, being 30 per cent. for cities of less than 50,000 inhabitants, and 50 per cent. for cities of a larger population. In addition to this, an increase of 50 per cent. was ordered for buildings with Mansard roofs made of other than fire-proof materials......Another of the boats in which the passengers and crew of the ill-fated steamer Missouri embarked has been picked up at sea, and several persons who had been counted as lost have reached Nassau in safety, but in an almost famished condition, having gone eight days without food or water. Their sufferings are described as almost incredible, and a number of those who embarked in the boat became crazed with their terrible privations and jumped overboard.

THE English flag, on the 23d of November, disappeared from the Island of San Juan, which, in compliance with the decision of the Emperor William, John Bull abandons to Brother Jonathan.

SENATOR SUMNER, who arrived in the steamer Baltic last week, had an uncomfortably rough voyage, having encountered a terrific gale on the fourth day, which continued without intermission for six days. The commander of the vessel declares it the roughest passage he ever made across the Atlantic......Prof. Watson, of Ann Arbor, Mich., reports the discovery of a new planet, which he says shines like a star of the tenth magnitude.

What I Am.

This passage, from Train's great London speech, is too good to be lost:

"I am, to-day, the livest man in England (cheers), the only man that can make kings tremble, churches shake, and fraud shiver in his hideous depravity; abolishing American slavery with my army of braves, leveling the Tuileries, the emblem of kings, and the Vendome column as the monument of crime! My frame is surcharged with the coming change—all lands speak through me—all nature backs me. I like in the roar of the tempest—the roll of the ocean on the rockbound beach—the burning lava of the volcano—the thundering artillery of the earthquake—as well as in the chirp of insects—the moaning of the tide—the rustling of the corn—the songs of the birds—the prattle of young children, and the happy laugh of school girls. I am young—younger than most men of twenty; a constitution of Bessemer steel, and, before I am the age of Chase, Wade, or Seward, I have eight fair chances for the White House. And I shall not wait so long. I shall live to fourscore years and ten, and my name will ring down all the ages. Indebted to nobody, spotless in character and courage, despising the hypocrisy of the Christian, I wrap my Pagan cloak around me as the stormy petrel of the skeptical ocean."

A Lesson in Brotherly Kindness.

We have yet to see in the Southern newspapers any expression of feeling called forth by the Boston fire other than the most sympathetic and kindly. Remembering that Boston was, for a long time, to the Southern mind, the representative of the anti-slavery movement, and afterward of loyalty to the Union; and that her animus and policy were antagonistic to the South, in a large measure, these warm and cordial expressions of sympathy from that quarter call for a recognition equally pronounced and heartfelt. The donation from Chicago has been felt to be peculiarly sympathetic and full of meaning. But the intelligence that in Charleston, S. C., and other places in the South efforts are being made to send relief to our fire sufferers, and the receipt on Saturday of a check from the late Confederate Secretary of the Treasury, are facts of deeper significance. They show that political barriers and animosities cannot stand before the claims of brotherhood which a great calamity, like the present, brings home to all hearts. Our brothers of the South have taught us a lesson of brotherly kindness which will not be easily forgotten. Boston has a warm heart, and knows how to appreciate generosity.—Boston Journal.

THIS is the way they do up an Enoch Arden romance in Oshkosh, Wis.: The Western Arden did not come back and gaze through the window at the felicity of the reconstructed household and then go into the green and yellow melancholy business; not any. He kicked the new husband out, sorted over the children and sent his brats after him, and then, after thrashing his wife, settled down into a peaceful and happy head of a family.

WESTERN POLITICS.

Dividing the Spoils—Senatorial Slates and Schemes of the Radicals—A Disappointed and Disgruntled Grant Editor—The Latest Colfax Story, etc., etc.

The Chicago correspondent of the New York World furnishes the following interesting and gossipy letter:

In the West, on the 4th of March, 1873, Senators will be elected as follows: Illinois, to replace Lyman Trumbull (Lib.); Indiana, to replace O. P. Morton (Rep.); Missouri, to replace F. P. Blair (Dem.); Wisconsin, to replace Timothy O. Howe (Rep.). Senators in Michigan and Minnesota hold over till 1875. In Iowa, Mr. Allison succeeds Senator Harlan.

WISCONSIN.

The Legislature, giving all the Independent and doubtful members to the Democrats, will probably stand:

	Rep.	Dem.	Total.
Senate	21	12	33
House	64	36	100
Total	85	48	133

Necessary to a choice, 67.
Republican majority on joint ballot, 37.

Mr. Howe is sure of re-election if he desires another term, but rumor has it that he is meant for the Supreme Court, in which a vacancy is confidently expected this winter. In that case Gov. Washburn has the best show; but the people of Wisconsin seem in no hurry at present about making up their minds.

MISSOURI.

The Legislature will, in all probability, stand something like this:

	Rep.	Dem.	Total.
Senate	13	21	34
House	41	54	95
Total	54	75	129

Necessary to a choice, 65.
Democratic majority on joint ballot, 21.

In this table all the doubtful seats have been given to the Republicans.

No doubts whatever are entertained of Mr. Blair's return for another term; at least thus writes a well-posted correspondent in the Radical camp, and I believe his statement, inasmuch as Missouri has proved itself almost the only State in the Union in which Liberals and Democrats abode faithfully by their compact, and put forth their utmost efforts in their common cause. The Republicans are understood to be somewhat divided between John B. Henderson and Henry T. Blow, each of whom claims to be the original Jacobs of Radicalism in Missouri—the former as the standard-bearer of the party in the recent canvass, the latter as the Chairman of the State Central Committee and a man who has bled (as to his pocket-book) for the cause. Each wanted the Senatorship in case the State were "redeemed," and each wanted a seat in the Cabinet in any case. Indeed, both want the same portfolio—that of the Interior—and their friends noisily proclaim that Missouri must be represented in the new Cabinet. However, from what I hear in Chicago, Blow or Henderson, according as the Administration may be pleased to recognize the Globe or Democrat wing of the party, must be content with at best a foreign mission.

INDIANA.

The Legislature is closely balanced, but the Radicals have a sufficient majority to elect their Senatorial nominee. The man who would naturally have the reversion of Mr. Morton were not in the field is Mr. Colfax. There are few more popular men in the West—perhaps I should say few men less unpopular, because Mr. Colfax (familiarly known as "the smiler") has no very decided enemies if he has no particularly attached friends. Mr. Colfax, however, is not so highly esteemed in the Radical ranks in Indiana, as he is not believed to possess the pluck and energy necessary for the control of the party in a State where the Democracy is so powerful and has such an excellent statesman as Mr. Hendricks at its head. However, faute de mieux, Mr. Colfax must succeed Mr. Morton if Mr. Morton goes to the Cabinet. There is another reason for stowing Mr. Colfax away. He is an adroit and tireless pipe-layer, and has been suspected, ever since he was beaten at Philadelphia, of having sinister designs on the Radical nomination for the Presidency in 1876. It may, therefore, be as well to put him quietly out of harm's way for the present. The story that he was wire-pulling for Morton's place, which he hoped to secure by uniting the Democratic votes in the Legislature with some of his followers, is without any foundation. Mr. Colfax has one redeeming trait—a hearty fear of Morton I., Emperor of Hoosierdom.

ILLINOIS.

In this State the political complexion of the Legislature is as follows:

	Rep.	Dem.	Total.
Senate	34	17	51
House	86	67	153
Total	120	84	204

Necessary to a choice, 103.
Republican majority on joint ballot, 36.

On paper this looks a dead sure thing for the Republican nominee, and up to a day or two since it looked as if Oglesby, the Republican Governor-elect, was going to "win in a walk," as the turfmen say. I have already called attention to the fact that once before "Fighting Dick" came signally to grief as to his Senatorial aspirations after surmounting safely the gubernatorial step, owing to the unfortunate selection of Deacon Bross as Lieutenant-Governor. Rather than have Bross Governor they preferred paying the price of depriving themselves of Oglesby's services in the Senate. History, as I predicted, is repeating itself. Mr. Beveridge ran behind his ticket—in Cook county Grant had 8,396 majority, and Beveridge was beaten by 1,006—and already the Republicans are growling that he hasn't enough character to fill the place of Governor of so large a State.

Here let me go back a bit. Since Mr. Trumbull's defection the State has been run by Gen. Logan, who said about a year ago that Grant would run for a second term "like hell, with a tin kettle tied to his tail." Beveridge was elected Congressman-at-large when Logan went to the Senate. In 1870 Mr. C. B. Farwell was elected to Congress in the First District, beating Long John Wentworth, though the latter was supported by the Tribune and Times. Mr. Farwell is yet a young man, clever, wealthy, with a penchant for politics and no small share of ambition. These are the dramatis personæ.

While Oglesby was brought out for the Governorship last spring, with the understanding that he was really going to the Senate, there was considerable speculation as to the Lieutenant-Governorship, and a lively contest between Farwell and Beveridge was expected. All at once it was announced that Mr. Farwell did not want the Governorship, and so they put Beveridge in without any fight. It did look a little odd to see the ambitious Farwell let slip a Governorship in the second year of his political life, but the shock was somewhat mitigated when people discovered that Mr. Farwell had a hand in distributing the Federal patronage along with Logan, thanks to the defection of Mr. Trumbull, and that by adroitly letting Mr. Beveridge have free course and be glorified with the Springfield nomination he had "bottled" him as effectually as ever Grant bottled Butler. And now, unless your correspondent is egregiously mistaken, the "bottling" process is being repeated on Gen. Oglesby.

ENTER WASHBURNE.

It is not very long since Mr. Washburne, Minister to the French Republic at Galena, made his appearance in Illinois. Rumor at once appointed him to the Department of State in place of Mr. Fish, but the world was astonished to hear that Mr. Washburne wouldn't take the Secretaryship. (Fancy a man named Washburne who wouldn't take an office!) The popular curiosity was then excited painfully as to what on earth Mr. Washburne was doing in Illinois if he wasn't after something. To-day the tail of the cat is partly out of the bag, and in a day or two the whole thing will be seen.

As early as the 6th of November, when it was seen that Mr. Trumbull was beaten for the Senatorship, people began to say, "Soft thing for Oglesby." To which other people replied, "Pity; it leaves Beveridge Governor." To which the first parties replied, "Yes, but they can't get any one else for the Senate." To which the second parties replied, "Oh, yes; there's Washburne."

If this outcropping of public sentiment in favor of Washburne is spontaneous it is remarkably wide-spread. Already a couple of the Cook county members have declared for him, others are non-committal, and all exhibit considerable surprise and no little satisfaction at the mention of his name. If Mr. Washburne agrees to run he will beat Oglesby out of sight, and I am given to understand that he will run.

Putting all these rumors together it appears to me that the Morton theory is of the most plausible character. Missouri is fobbed off with a mission, so as to give the Western seat in the Cabinet to Morton; Washburne declines seeking that Secretaryship so as not to interfere with Morton; Colfax succeeds Morton in the Senate and is put out of harm's way; Washburne goes to the Senate from Illinois and probably leads the Senate; the Illinois Republicans are saved the infliction of Beveridge as Governor, and everybody is happy, except Oglesby and Beveridge, who are "bottled" for two years. If all this turns out correct, and Charley Farwell is at the bottom of it, he will deserve credit for playing politics better than ever he played poker.

Methinks, however, there are three Republican Richmonds in the field, for Jonathan Young Scammon, proprietor of the Inter-Ocean, has blown his own trumpet, and is mustering his "trusty followers, few but undismayed." Mr. Scammon is an eminent Radical editor, possessing considerable money. Since he purchased the Inter-Ocean he has assumed the leadership of the party in the State and on the National Committee, and has invested (permanently) some $50,000 in the cause of Grant and godliness. The singular unselfishness with which Messrs. Logan and Farwell have sat at the feet of this Gamaliel and allowed him to act as their chief and leader was refreshing, not to say inexplicable. It leaked out that there has been a fair division of the spoils—Mr. Scammon taking the honor and Messrs. Logan and Farwell taking the patronage. To say that Mr. Scammon is disgusted is to understate the case, and he may be consigned to the limbo of the "bottled" along with the mild Beveridge and the heroic Oglesby.

When Mr. Scammon bought the Inter-Ocean his avowed intention was to secure the place now filled by Mr. Boutwell. It grieves me to state that Mr. Scammon will not be the next Secretary of the Treasury. I am further pained to hear that Mr. Scammon's offer to compromise on a first-class mission has been treated with neglect. I am, finally, grieved to announce that Mr. Scammon will not be returned to the Senate in place of Mr. Trumbull.

But the ways of Providence are mysterious, and even a Radical editor like Mr. Scammon may subserve some useful purpose in the economy of nature. Mr. Scammon has no earthly chance of being elected Senator, but he is in the enviable frame of mind of a man who has worked ten months and spent $50,000 for the simple satisfaction of finding himself the worst sold man in Illinois, and is about mad enough to burst up the Washburne or Oglesby slate for sheer spite. Here lies his last hope of getting anything out of the Administration, and it looks very much as if he intended trying it. But as he couldn't get more than a consulship at best, the Democrats think that he may be made an unworthy instrument in the hands of Providence to beat the Radicals. The Democrats are all for Trumbull, not because they bear him any love, but because his re-election would be a terrible blow to the Grantites. They want seventeen votes to secure the State Legislature. It is understood that two or three of the Republican representatives are secretly in favor of Trumbull, and that they would either vote for him or take dangerously sick if such action on their part would help him. There are several other Republican legislators elect who are open to conviction. For instance, the Radicals in this city have elected to the Senate as their chosen representative an Alderman who was indicted for bribery and corrupt practices, indeed who is still under indictment, and whose character is so notorious that the Mayor broke all engagements which would have taken him from Chicago rather than permit this man to serve as acting Mayor. If Mr. Scammon's friends will only run him, or if a half dozen disgusted Oglesby men or Beveridgers only hold out, Mr. Trumbull and the Democrats have a triumph assured them.

THE SENATORIAL SUCCESSION

is further complicated by the action of the friends of Shelby M. Cullom, who intend making a warm canvass for him in the Legislature. Between Washburne, Cullom and Scammon, Mr. Oglesby's chances are going down to zero, and it seems very much as if "Fighting Dick's" experience will be that the paths of glory lead but to the State House. Mr. Trumbull declines to be interviewed until the events of the recent canvass are further removed from the public mind and all parties have assumed a calmer frame.

THE LAST COLFAX STORY.

I hear from St. Louis that a good story on the late Mr. Colfax is circulating in journalistic circles there, having its origin, of course, in the fertile malevolence of "Mack," of the Democrat, who headed the campaign against him at Philadelphia, on account of some social misunderstanding which they once had at the capital. "Mack's" persecutions have been going on for two years, taking the form of inventions of patent articles, such as basswood cooking-stoves and cast-iron baby-linen, in the manufacture of which Mr. Colfax was to engage on the occasion of his actual retirement from public life. Of late "Mack" set afloat a circumstantial rumor that Mr. Colfax was to edit the Inter-Ocean after the 4th of March, 1873, and was even now contributing to its columns. Indeed he identified several articles defending Mr. Colfax in the Credit Mobilier business, to which the Inter-Ocean gave particular prominence as possessing all the characteristics of the Colfaxian composition. He went so far as to make the proprietor build and furnish a house for Mr. Colfax, and half of the Republican press gorged the bait, to the disgust of Mr. Colfax and Mr. Scammon. The last and most audacious trick is as follows: Some month or six weeks before the election a sublimated ass holding some position in the Treasury or Custom House called on "Mack" and entertained him with his views at length on the political situation, adding that he was the special guide, philosopher, and friend of Mr. Colfax. Instead of treating him with his usual coldness, "Mack" suddenly warmed towards this friend of Vice Presidents and opened his heart to him. He remark that Mr. Colfax had only spoken once this campaign, and then in his own county. This had been noted with pain by the party, and the more censorious had been heard to remarked that Mr. Colfax was not only sore over his defeat, but was plotting to sacrifice his native State to the Liberals. By way of corroboration, "Mack" summoned one of his staff, just returned from Illinois, who, entering promptly into the mood of his chief, detailed at length the uncomplimentary opinions which he had heard expressed openly in Administration circles concerning Mr. Colfax's loyalty. The Treasury agent was astonished, and pledged himself sacredly to induce Mr. Colfax to give the lie to these aspersions of his character. He shook hands with "Mack," who modestly desired that the Treasury agent would not mention his informant, as Mr. Colfax and himself were not on the friendliest of terms, and Mr. Colfax might accuse him of malevolence. It would be better to say that the Treasury agent himself had observed so and so, and the impression on Mr. Colfax would be much stronger, as he knew the Treasury agent's probity, experience, and firm friendship. The Treasury agent dropped a tear of silent regard at the shrine of such unselfish worth, "Mack" commended him to the God of Battles, and they parted. The story goes that the Treasury agent went to South Bend express, declared that the prairies were all ablaze with doubt and indignation, gave all of "Mack's" inventions as his own personal experience, and scared Mr. Colfax so that, a tardy Achilles, he issued from his tent and worked like a horse till the end of the campaign.

OUR total production of copper in 1871 amounted to 27,000,000 pounds. The surplus at the beginning of the year was 10,700,000 pounds, and at its close 5,700,000 pounds. The consumption is thus shown to be increasing faster than the production.

The King of Wall Street.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial furnishes the following sketch of Henry N. Smith, the man who lost $4,000,000 in the recent "corner" in Northwestern stock, and who may be justly described as the King of Wall street:

Henry N. Smith is known throughout the country as one of the most desperate and successful operators in Wall street. It was he who became so noted at the Black Friday time as the head of the firm of Smith, Gould & Martin; it was he who was in with Fisk in the bold operations against the Erie railroad; and it was he who made a corner on greenbacks last winter by carrying $4,000,000 on his person and locking it it up in the Tenth National Bank—which last operation became the subject of Congressional inquiry. Smith came on to Washington and was examined. The committee did not get much comfort out of his answers. They asked him if he had locked up $5,000,000 in greenbacks. He frankly said he had. They asked him why he did it. He freely acknowledged that he did it to make money by the operation, and wanted to know what the committee intended to do about it. Without answering, the members of the committee asked what right he had to lock up that amount of money. Then he got angry and told them that it was none of their business; that the money was his own and he could do with it as he liked; and it was about this time that the committee found they had made a mistake. Smith collected about $50 witness fees and returned to New York, and that was the last of the silly investigation. A gentleman who was a witness before the committee said subsequently that Smith actually carried the $5,000,000 on his person for two days. The lining of his overcoat was filled with pockets, and into these the money was stored. Smith is about thirty-five or thirty-eight years old, short of stature, slight of frame, and red of hair. The latter he wears cut close and his whiskers a la militaire or mutton chop, with mustache. His name is not Henry M. nor Henry N. Smith, but Norman Henry Smith. He is a native of Tioga, Penn., a little village which is shut in with charming grace from the outside world by a circle of hills, which in fall present such an enchanting appearance that it clings to one's memory forever. In this pretty little village this monster operator was born, and here he is to this day called plain Tom Smith, a nickname he got when a baby. It is nothing against Tom that he spent his young days about as other village boys do, and it is nothing against him that he learned the shoemaker's trade and was an excellent workman. It is said there that Tom Smith can make the best "fine" boot of any man in America. A love scrape, if I am correctly informed, drove him from his hammer and lap-stone and took him to Buffalo a year or two before the war. While there he attended a course of instruction in one of the "Business Colleges" which were so common then. From this he operated in Buffalo in a small way, going finally to Albany. He could not long remain in such a place, and he turned his eyes towards New York. His career as a money maker is without a parallel in history. It would be idle to estimate his wealth, for to-day it might be twenty millions and to-morrow ten. He is called the successor of Jim Fisk, but that is an insult to him. He possesses the same reckless daring, but he brought to his experience a keener and more deliberate judgment and intelligence than Fisk had. Besides he has none of the "fast" qualities which Fisk possessed. He has no desire to display his wealth ostentatiously; he does not care to build an opera-house that he may have the privilege of the green-room, and he is not likely to run a line of steamers merely to show himself in an admiral's uniform, nor to show himself at the head of a regiment at the cost of thousands of dollars. He lives as becomes a very wealthy man, and owns a number of the best horses that money can buy merely for his own driving. He has considerable money invested in real estate in his native town, where he has provided handsomely for his father and mother.

Mansard.

Mansard, whose roofs are the subject of so much obloquy at present, was Superintendent of Public Buildings in the reign of Louis XIV. It is told of him that he possessed to a remarkable amount the power of subtle flattery, which he used to practice with great ingenuity upon the King. He would sometimes submit plans portions of which were purposely made so impracticable, not to say absurd, that the King could not avoid detecting and pointing out the inconsistencies, whereupon Mansard would declare that if his Majesty had not been a King he would have made a first-class architect, blaming himself the while for having made such blunders. It is not stated whether the famous roof was one of these latter, nor whether the King took fire at it when it was shown to him.

Best Time for Painting Houses.

The best time for painting the exterior of buildings is late in autumn or during the winter. Paint then applied will endure twice as long as when applied in early summer or in hot weather. In the former it dries slowly and becomes hard, like a glazed surface, not easily affected afterward by the weather, or worn off by the beating of storms. But in very hot weather the oil in the paint soaks into the wood at once, as into a sponge, leaving the lead nearly dry and nearly ready to crumble off. The last difficulty, however, might in a measure be guarded against, though at an increased expense, by first going over the surface with raw oil. By painting in cold weather, one annoyance might certainly be escaped, namely, the collection of small flies on the fresh paint.—The Technologist.

TORPEDOES were invented by Benjamin Franklin. The first experiment in war was made in the harbor of Brest in 1801, under the orders of Napoleon, by Robert Fulton, an American. The attempt failed to blow up an English man-of-war and Napoleon dropped the scheme. It was next tried by Russia, in 1854, with partial success, and afterward in our own civil war.

AUBURN COURIER

THE NATIONAL BANKS.

Report of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency reviews at length the working of the national banking system since its inauguration.

Of the whole amount of circulation appropriated by Congress, $342,000,000 have been issued, and a balance of $12,000,000 promised to associations that have filed their applications and taken preliminary steps toward organizing as national banks.

The Comptroller considers that part of the recent act which calls for the redistribution of $25,000,000 in currency by withdrawing that amount from the Middle and Eastern States, and giving it to the South and West, as impracticable, and recommends its repeal; and also that an amendment be made in lieu thereof providing for the issue of $5,000,000 bank circulation annually for the next five years, to meet the wants of such States as have not had their full proportion.

He is opposed to any change in the law in reference to the reserve which banks are required to hold, and shows by statistical tables that a law which has become a rule with all cautiously-managed banks should not be hastily repealed. He suggests, however, that it would be to the interest of banks to keep a larger proportion of their reserve in their own hands instead of placing it on deposit with city banks, and points out the way by which this end may be accomplished to the general benefit.

Congress is informed of various complaints which have been made of usurious transactions, and the Comptroller incidentally suggests the propriety of the repeal of all usury laws, so far as they apply to the national banks.

Full information is given in relation to banks which have failed, showing the average dividend upon the aggregate of claims proved, which amounts to about 86 per cent.—leaving 14 per cent., which the law provides shall be assessed upon shareholders.

The locking up of greenbacks in New York city is referred to, and attention called to the resolution passed by the Clearing-House; and the belief expressed that its enforcement will do more to prevent such illegitimate transactions among banks than any legislation by Congress.

Amendments to the act are suggested as follows: The organization of banks without circulation, upon the deposit of $10,000 in United States bonds, instead of one-third of the capital; the imposing of a penalty on, and withholding of interest from, banks whose capital is impaired, and who refuse to go into liquidation under section 42 of the act; to prevent the circulation of shinplasters by railroads and other corporations of the South; defining more fully the duties of the Comptroller and Receiver in the final closing of insolvent banks; and an amendment permitting banks to loan 10 per cent. on capital and surplus. The proportion of taxation is believed to be much greater than upon other property.

Full statistical tables are given, exhibiting the amount of dividends and earnings of national banks for the last four years. The ratio of net earnings of the national banks of the country to capital and surplus, without making allowance for bad debts, is about 10 per cent. annually, and the ratio of dividends to capital and surplus is less than 4½ per cent.

The appendix will contain much new statistical information in reference to the kind of funds held as reserve by banks and their net profits; also, comparative tables showing the amount of authorized circulation, together with population and wealth in 1870, circulation per capita, the ratio of circulation to wealth, to capital and to deposits under the present system and under the State banking system in the year 1862.

The importance of frequent examinations by competent and courteous examiners is stated, and a small appropriation is asked to defray the expenses of special examinations, in order that such investigations may be promptly made as may be considered expedient for the protection of creditors. Increased compensation for gentlemen holding responsible positions in office is also urged.

THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Annual Report of Secretary Robeson—Important Recommendations Concerning the Efficiency of the Navy.

Important recommendations concerning the efficiency of the navy are made in the report of Secretary Robeson, predicated in part upon the reports of the chiefs of bureaus of that department. It has been found that more money has often been spent in the repair of old vessels, as authorized by Congress, than would serve in the construction of new ones of greater strength and improved model and appurtenances. As an instance of this, the Pensacola cost $325,000, and the repairs more than twice as much, namely, $760,000. As to the other vessels of the navy, including the Guerriere, Nevada, Iowa, and Vanderbilt, to put them into thoroughly good condition would require an amount of money far exceeding their original cost. Their timbers are much decayed, the ships having been built of unsound white oak. The necessities of the situation, however, have required expenditures upon them to meet emergencies without permanent benefit. Congress at the late session authorized the Secretary of the Navy to sell the worn-out vessels and useless material at the several navy-yards. It is known that there are such accumulations there which originally cost millions of dollars, and which were for the most part never applied to practical purposes. Several of the worn-out vessels are soon to be sold at auction, and others of like character will be afterward offered to the highest bidders. The opinion of naval officers is that there should be at least twenty good active steam vessels always in condition to be immediately used.

About a year ago, when there was such an excitement at Havana as induced the Consul General at that city to telegraph our Government to send vessels thither for the protection of American citizens, it was difficult to immediately find vessels suitable for such an emergency, and the Secretary was therefore obliged to dispatch an iron-clad from Key West, together with four other vessels not of formidable proportions, to that locality. Spain, at the time to which reference is made, had twenty-three vessels in the Gulf and in the vicinity of the Island of Cuba. Our vessels, owing to this disparity of force, would have been unable to contend with those of Spain in case of hostile movements on her part.

The Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs will, it is understood, recommend that compound engines be placed in all our vessels, both as to economy of fuel and increase of speed, and that he will support his views by careful argument. It has been ascertained from naval officers that not more than ten of the fifty iron-clad vessels can be rendered useful for naval purposes. Therefore the Government will dispose of the remainder of them. The twenty light-draft monitors, built during the war at a cost of $15,000,000, never fired a gun, not having been called into active service. A bill is now pending before the House of Representatives appropriating $3,000,000 for building ten sloops of war.

In view of the facts concerning the inefficiency of the navy, efforts will be made at the approaching session of Congress to completely reorganize it. A part of Secretary Robeson's report is devoted to this subject, and he repeats the recommendation in his last annual report to supply the places of vessels which have become useless with those of good and sound construction, and urge that unless something is done in this direction our cruising navy, now by no means powerful indeed, scarcely respectable for a nation of our rank and responsibilities, will soon almost wholly pass out of existence as an arm of the national power.

THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

An Address by the United States Centennial Commission.

To the People of the United States:—

The Congress of the United States has enacted that the completion of the one hundredth year of American independence shall be celebrated by an International Exhibition of the arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine, to be held at Philadelphia, in 1876, and has appointed a Commission, consisting of representatives from each State and Territory, to conduct the celebration.

Originating under the auspices of the National Legislature, controlled by a National Commission, and designed as it is to "Commemorate the first century of our existence by an exhibition of the natural resources of the country and their development, and of our progress in those arts which benefit mankind, in comparison with those of older nations," it is to the people at large that the Commission looks for aid which is necessary to make the Centennial Celebration the grandest anniversary the world has ever seen.

That the completion of the first century of our existence should be marked by some imposing demonstration is, we believe, the patriotic wish of the people of the whole country. The Congress of the United States has wisely decided that the birthday of the Great Republic can be most fittingly celebrated by the universal collection and display of all the trophies of its progress. It is designed to bring together, within a building covering fifty acres, not only the varied productions of our mines and of the soil, but types of all the intellectual triumphs of our citizens, specimens of everything that America can furnish, whether from the brains or the hands of her children, and thus make evident to the world the advancement of which a self-governed people is capable.

In this "Celebration" all nations will be invited to participate; its character being international. Europe will display her arts and manufactures, India her curious fabrics, while newly opened China and Japan will lay bare the treasures which for centuries their ingenious people have been perfecting. Each land will compete in generous rivalry for the palm of superior excellence.

To this grand gathering every zone will contribute its fruits and cereals. No mineral shall be wanting; for what the East lacks the West will supply. Under one roof will the South display in rich luxuriance her growing cotton, and the North in miniature the ceaseless machinery of her mills converting that cotton into cloth. Each section of the globe will send its best offerings to this exhibition, and each State of the Union, as a member of one united body politic, will show to her sister States and to the world how much she can add to the greatness of the nation of which she is a harmonious part.

To make the Centennial Celebration such a success as the patriotism and the pride of every American demands will require the co-operation of the people of the whole country. The United States Centennial Commission has received no Government aid, such as England extended to her World's Fair, and France to her Universal Exposition, yet the labor and responsibility imposed upon the Commission is as great as in either of those undertakings. It is estimated that ten millions of dollars will be required, and this sum Congress has provided shall be raised by stock subscription, and that the people shall have the opportunity of subscribing in proportion to the population of their respective States and Territories.

The Commission look to the unfailing patriotism of the people of every section, to see that each contributes its share to the expenses, and receives its share of the benefits of an enterprise in which all are so deeply interested. It would further earnestly urge the formation in each State and Territory of a centennial organization, which shall in time see that county associations are formed, so that when the nations are gathered together in 1876 each Commonwealth can view with pride the contributions she has made to the national glory.

Confidently relying on the zeal and patriotism ever displayed by our people in every national undertaking, we pledge and prophesy that the Centennial Celebration will worthily show how greatness, wealth and intelligence can be fostered by such institutions as those which have for one hundred years blessed the people of the United States.

Journalism in the United States.

The New York Advertising Agency of Messrs. Rowell & Co. have recently issued a catalogue of American publications which presents some interesting information. There are 6,432 periodical publications in the United States, of which only 507 are daily newspapers. The bulk of this number is made up of weekly newspapers, amounting, in the aggregate, to 4,75[illegible]; there are 685 monthlies, and [illegible] quarterlies, the remaining [illegible] being divided among the weekly, semi-weekly, and other occasional publications. Florida has no daily newspaper. The Territories have 87 publications, including 18 dailies, and the British Dominions have 403 periodicals all told. The number of daily newspapers in the country has decreased 74 during the past year—a circumstance that may be useful as a warning. New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago are the great centers. The State of Illinois takes high rank in the comparative amount of the current literature it furnishes, issuing 518 periodical publications,—a larger number than any other State except New York and Pennsylvania. Among the journalistic specialties, religion has more organs than anything else, agriculture, education, Free Masonry, and Odd Fellowship following in this order. There are 74 medical periodicals and 80 that are published for the children.

Henri Rochefort.

France promises us another "Iron-Mask" mystery. The hero in this modern case is said to be M. Henri Rochefort. Everybody supposed that this bedlamite was rusticating in New Caledonia. At least, we had vivid accounts, several months ago, of his voyage, eye witnesses of his departure, and a touching story that a lady had joined him from the coast of England, ready to sacrifice the comforts and pleasures of civilized life to share with him the trials and sufferings of a penal colony. Now the London Standard tells us that Rochefort recently turned up at Versailles, still a prisoner, but voluntarily a bridegroom. The occasion of his appearance is said to have been that of marrying a woman with whom he had lived for many years for the purpose of making their children legitimate in the eyes of the law. As it is scarcely supposable that the authorities would allow Rochefort to come all the way back from New Caledonia to take part in the ceremony, the conclusion is that he has been stowed away in some one of the many State prisons of France, where his presence has been concealed from the public.

A method of preparing artificial fuel from coal dust has been invented by a resident of Philadelphia, and is favorably reported upon by a committee of the Franklin Institute, in that city, who examined the process at the request of the inventor. It is asserted that the cost of manufacture will not exceed one dollar per ton.

Republicanism in England.

The English Republican agitator, Bradlaugh, has written a letter to an American correspondent in London, giving his views of the progress and prospects of Republican ideas in England. He says the English Republican Clubs will soon combine to form a National Association. He does not favor an alliance with the Communists. In his opinion, it is perfectly lawful to dethrone the reigning family by Parliamentary means. Bradlaugh claims that Republican ideas are having a steady growth throughout that country. If landed proprietors will make liberal concessions, he hopes a Republic may be postponed, since he regards the land question as the real battlefield in Great Britain. He says the agricultural laborers have been aroused by hunger and misery from political lethargy. "Empty bellies think fiercely," and it will require much more than a Bishop of Gloucester's sneer at the agitators, or a Duke of Marlborough's threat against the malcontents, to check this movement amongst farm laborers. One of them told me the other day, "There are hundreds of us who want to join you, if you will come amongst us, and tell us how." Bradlaugh concludes by advocating perfect religious freedom.

Three large companies in Westphalia (Germany) have combined themselves into one association, which is perhaps the greatest connected with the iron trade in the world. The annual production of the works which it controls is 20,000 tons of steel and 250,000 tons of iron in various forms, pig, rails, etc.

Experimenting with Hens.

In the Poultry World, Isaac Lynde, of Ohio, gives the result of an experiment with different breeds of pullets in laying for six months, and the cost of their feed. On September 1 he took ten pullets of each of the breeds mentioned below, about six months old, gave them a yard forty feet square, with a comfortable house, and kept an exact account of eggs and feed, as follows: The dark Brahmas ate 369½ quarts of corn, oats and wheat screenings, laid 605 eggs, and weighed seventy pounds. The buff Cochins ate 406 quarts, laid 591 eggs, and weighed seventy-three pounds. The gray Dorkings ate 409½ quarts, laid 523 eggs, and weighed fifty-nine and a half pounds. The Houdans ate 214½ quarts, laid 783 eggs, and weighed forty-five and a half pounds. The Leghorns ate 221½ quarts, laid 807 eggs, and weighed thirty-six and a half pounds. To make this experiment more complete, and to show which lot gave the most profit, including both eggs and flesh, we had supposed the fowls to be dressed and sold at the end of six months at 20 cents per pound; also, that the eggs were worth 24 cents per dozen (two cents each), and that the cost of the feed was 2¼ cents per quart, or 80 cents per bushel. The figures would then be:

	Cost of feed.	Value eggs.	Value meat.	Total value.	Total profit.
Brahmas	$9.22	$12.10	$14.00	$26.10	$16.88
Cochins	10.15	11.82	14.60	26.42	16.27
Dorkings	7.72	10.48	11.90	22.38	14.00
Houdans	5.36	15.66	9.10	24.76	19.40
Leghorns	6.77	16.14	7.30	23.44	17.67

The greatest profit on the investment is in favor of the Houdans, with the Leghorns next, and the Dorkings least. It would have been interesting, however, to know the weight of the eggs laid by the several varieties, to see what actual difference there was in the amount of food furnished by them, and its value at a fair estimate of weight. On such a basis it is quite probable that the Brahmas would have shown the greatest profit.

Yeast.

Very few people know that yeast is a plant. To the ordinary observer, it is nothing more than a thick, creamy froth, which makes the bread rise and the beer work; but to the man of science, examining it with the aid of a microscope, it reveals itself as the simplest form of a large and very interesting class of plants. The yeast plant is, in fact, a species of fungus. It is the simplest form of these growths of which molds and mildews on the one hand, puff-balls, mushrooms and truffles on the other hand, are the more highly organised ones. Yeast and the vinegar plant, or "mother," as it is sometimes called, are the forms in which it vegetates under various circumstances, when well supplied with food. Mildew, or mold, is its fruit, and its appearance upon preserved vegetable substances or liquids is an indication that the mischief is far advanced; for these are the fruits of the fungus, which it only bears when arrived at maturity. The seeds, or "spores," from which all these plants are developed, are so minute that they are constantly wafted about by every current of air, and deposited in every spot where they can find a resting place. Their growth is very rapid, and so tenacious are they of life that only the extremes of heat and cold can affect them.

The Fever Tree.

Dr. Pedro L. N. Chernovis, of Bahai, in a late number of the Gazetta Medica da Bahai, gives a very interesting account of the history, uses, propagation, medical and miscellaneous properties of the Eucalyptus Globulus, an immense tree introduced into various provinces of Brazil from Australia, and called, as in Spain, arvore da febre, from its "marvelous results in the treatment of intermittent fevers." The tree is colossal, sometimes attaining a height of 300 feet, and a diameter of 30 feet; ranging often from fifty to seventy feet in height, and ten to twenty feet in diameter. All parts are aromatic, less so in the trunk and bark, more so in the small roots, flowers and leaves. It is a comparatively new medicine of much promise, and is given internally for intermittent fever, in doses of from one to four drachms of the powdered leaves—twice during the intermissions—or in infusion (two drachms in four ounces of boiling water), morning and evening. Aqueous and alcoholic extracts, in doses of from two to eight grains, are also used for the same disease. One or two drops of its essential oil, on sugar, in pill or capsule, are advised in bronchial and pulmonary affections, laryngytis and catarrhal aphonia.

Butter.

A farmer's wife, writing to the Ohio Farmer, says: "Of all the products of the farm, butter is the most liable to be tainted by noxious odors floating in the atmosphere. Our people laid some veal in the cellar, from which a little blood flowed out, and was neglected until it commenced to smell. The result was that a jar of butter which I was then packing smelled and tasted like spoiled beef. Another lady reader observes that there is a filthy, stagnant water, a few hundred feet from their house, from which an offensive effluvium would be borne on the breeze directly to the milk room when the wind was in a certain direction, the result of which was that cream and butter would taste like the disagreeable odor coming from that pond. As soon as the pond was drained we had no more damaged butter."

White Apple Tomato.

In the Rural Southland we find a tomato mentioned as new, with this name. This is its first year of fruiting, and it is declared promising. Dr. Swasey says of it: "The plant is a hardy, vigorous, drought defying grower, and a prolific and continuous bearer—equaling in all these respects the common red and yellow plum tomato. The fruit is of a beautiful creamy white color, medium in size, of a regular, slightly oblate, apple shape, with a smooth, tender skin and a flesh at once so almost melting in texture, so deliciously fruity in flavor, so devoid of that rank tomato twang that most people are not particularly partial to, so solid and so rich, that one will have to look long and wide before finding another variety that will so completely come up to the highest standard of a first-class table tomato."

During the year 1871, more than 326,000,000 persons, exclusive of season-ticket holders, traveled over the railroads of England and Wales. Out of the whole number only six persons were killed by causes beyond their own control.

When poultry or other meat is fresh and good, it has a firm, hard feel, and is elastic; tainted meat feels soft, and returns to its shape slowly when indented, like dough when pressed with the finger. Fresh meat, well killed, does not moisten the finger; tainted meat does and has a slimy feel.

To impart a flavor to the flesh of fowls, such as constitute the "game flavor" of the wild state, the Boston Journal of Chemistry recommends cayenne pepper, ground mustard, or ginger to be added to the common food of fowls. As to cleanliness of henneries, it recommends great care in summer. Carbolic acid dissolved in water should be sprinkled over the wood work of the insides, and a little added to the whitewash, which should be used each season. The nest material should be often changed, that being specially liable to become foul when the birds are confined.

Important Meteorological Discovery.

The researches of the signal office have just been rewarded by a beautiful and highly important meteorological discovery. On the coast of England, from time immemorial, the phenomenon of the great November atmospheric wave has been the speculation of scientists and seamen, but Sir John Herschel and others have supposed it was peculiar, and confined to England and western Europe, which it reaches from the south Atlantic, and over which it rolls in long-continued undulations from October to January, constituting an important element in the phenominal character of the European winter. On the 12th of Nov., a similar atmospheric wave began to break over the shores of Oregon and British Columbia, as shown by the weather telegrams. By the evening of the 13th it had spread over nearly all of the Pacific States and Territories, Utah and Nevada, and at midnight was pouring through the passes of the Rocky mountains. On Thursday, the 14th, it descended upon Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas and the Indian Territory. On Friday morning it extended in unbroken magnitude and magnificence from Oregon and Washington Territory eastward through the great trough or depression of the Rocky mountain backbone in Idaho and Montana, and stretched thence to the lower Missouri and lower Mississippi valleys and over the western shores of the Mexican Gulf. This discovery will enable meteorologists to anticipate by many days the approach of winter as it advances from the Pacific coast eastward in the current of the westerly winds. It seems to clear up the old mystery of the American winter storms, showing that they originated in the Rocky mountains, upon whose cold and loftiest summits in Nevada, Utah, Colorado, and southern Wyoming the vapor-laden air of this wave, coming from over the warm Pacific, is now seen to be condensed into the overwhelming snows of the forty-first parallel. As this vast aerial wave is probably like the English wave, continued in successive undulations for two or three months, it may assist in explaining the comparatively high temperature and light precipitation in winter along Puget sound and eastward.

The Burning of Moscow.

The Boston fire has excited research by some newspapers into the history of fires in general, and one of them says: "The fire next in order was the burning of Moscow by its own people (during the French occupation) in 1812. It is estimated that Moscow paid for her patriotism with 30,000 houses and about £30,000,000 of property." When a statement gets into history it is next to impossible to get it out; but it may as well be remembered that the Russians utterly disclaim the burning of Moscow as an act of the authorities, and that the conflagration is now more properly attributed, in the first instance, to the carelessness of the French soldiers, and afterward to incendiaries bent on plunder. It is most probable that there was no "patriotism" about the affair at all.—New York Tribune.

Mercy was not to be hoped for. It does not seem to have been sought. He was past eighty. The earth on the edge of the grave was crumbling under his feet, and death had little to make it fearful. When the last morning dawned, he dressed himself carefully,—as he said, for his marriage-day.

The distance to Tower Hill was short. He was able to walk; and he tottered out of the prison gates, holding in his hand a closed volume of the New Testament. The crowd flocked about him, and he was heard to pray that, as this book had been his best comfort and companion, so in that hour it might give him some special strength, and speak to him as from his Lord. Then, opening it at a venture, he read: "This is life eternal, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." It was the answer to his prayer; and he continued to repeat the words as he was led forward.

On the scaffold he chanted the Te Deum, and then, after a few prayers, knelt down, and meekly laid his head upon a pillow where neither care, nor fear, nor sickness would ever vex it more. Many a spectacle of sorrow had been witnessed on that tragic spot, but never one more sad than this—never one more painful to think of or speak of.

When a nation is in the throes of revolution, wild spirits are abroad in the storm; and poor human nature presses blindly forward with the burden which is laid upon it, tossing aside the obstacles in its path with a recklessness which, in calmer hours, it would fear to contemplate.—Froude.

The Walter Printing Machine.

The Walter press derives its name from the Hon John Walter, M. P., proprietor and conductor of the London Times, who is entitled to the honor of maturing and perfecting this great invention.

There are but three newspaper offices where this celebrated press is employed. The London Times employs five in printing its monster editions; there are two of them used in the office of the Edinburgh Scotsman, and one now employed in printing the St. Louis Republican—these are the only presses of this patent in the whole world, except one forwarded to the Vienna Exposition.

ENLARGEMENT.

We present the COURIER to our readers this week in an enlarged form While many of our exchanges are cutting down the size of their paper, we have concluded to enlarge. Not that we are pecuniarly justified in doing so but that we want to ascertain whether our citizens will come forward and sustain a good county paper.

There are nearly two thousand Democratic voters in the county and yet our subscription list, taking out all others, will not include one fourth of that number. Now we intend to make one mere effort to become worthy of hei patronage and we will publish the COURIER in this form in the coming year and we want every reader of our paper to make an effort to establish it upon a basis that will enable it to still improve instead of diminishing.

Death of Horace Greeley.

Hon. Horace Greeley, the great journalist of New York, died last Friday evening, in the sixty-second year of his age. He was the third son of a not very well-to-do farmer, of Amherst New Hampshire.

For the first seven years of his life the lad Horace grew sturdily, but was not a robust child. It is the testimony of the family and neighbors, that the young Greeley exhibited a natural aptitude for learning, and studied such things as come in his way, with intelligent, discriminating, avidity. He was fortunate in possessing a mother of rare inteligence and prudent control who took him in hands with his earliest developments and guided him in a mentally wholesome way. Indeed Mrs. Greeley was a woman not less remarkable in her way, than her son. whose fame and name, are the nations legacy. The cause he plead for triumphed, and the people he brought from bondage turned ingrates to him, in the hour of his need; the men he made were the instruments of his own undoing, and traduced to the day of his death, one, whose life was an unrelaxing public benefaction. The nation he had enabled, abandoned him, and believed without proof, and rejected without compunction, the man, who of all others, was most deserving of its devotion.

His mind seemed an enormous storehouse, of the most varied information, and his brain a perfect receptacle where he found at will the things he needed. He could set down without memorandum of any kind, and write a two column article, discussing past events and traversing laws and utterances without a verification or re-reading. In that essential escence of a Christain life, which best reconciles God's handiwork to his inscrutibte repuirements Mr. Greeley was a pre-eminent illustration. He accorded the largest liberty to all, and demanded the same for himself—the great ministers—indeed all men struggling for the building up of all such things as enlighten mankind, or alleviate human woes—received instant co-operation from the untiring philanthropist. He lived to see his three great rivals buried, Bennet, Raymond, and Seward. The last two, he was largely instrumental in making—Raymond's first effort was under his guidence, and Seward was largely his debtor, for his early political triumph. It is a suggestive lesson—in recalling the marked events, of the busiest and most eventful life of all the annals of public men, that he never received an office of emolument from the people.—He made Governors, Senators, and Presidents. Yet himself put up for inconspicueus office, Congressman and controller of New York, was rejected. He never craved these offices. It is one among the many calumnies that degraded the infamous campaign just ended that his life was a continual thirst after office. He was fond to being before the public, but he never craved an office, and never asked for one. Does any one suppose that within the last ten years that he could not have dictated his desire to the republican party? Greeley was greater than office; he was greater than his day and generation, and no tribute can fellow mortal man than his living illustrated his time, and that his life was an incalculable, inextinguishable debt to the nation.

The horse disease has disappeared in Scranton Pennsylvania, and werk has been resumed in the coal regions.—The rolling mill hands are all on a strike.

NEW APPORTIONMENT.

On the 19 inst., Mr. John E Thompson, Representative for the county of Elkhart, introduced a bill to re-apportion the State in new Congressional Districts as follows:

First District—To be composed of the counties of Pesey, Vanderburg, Gibson, Knox, Sulivan and Clay.

Second District—Crawford, Perry Dupoise, Spencer, Martin, Green, Daviess, Pike, and Warrick.

Third District—Jackson, Clark, Harrison, Floyd, Washington, Lawrence, and Orange.

Fourth District—Jennings, Brown, Bartholomew, Johnson, Monroe, Morgan, and Putnam.

Fifth District—Franklin, Dearborn, Decatur, Ohio, Ripley, Scott and Jefferson

Sixth District—Hancock, Henry, Wayne, Union, Fayette, Rush, and Shelby.

Seventh District—Marion Hendricks and Boone.

Eighth District—Vigo, Parke, Fountain, Vermillion, and Montgumery.

Ninth District—Cass, Miama, Carrol, Tippecanoe, Howard, and Warren.

Tenth District—St. Joseph, Laport, Porter, Lake, Stark, Newton, Jasper, Fulton, Benton, White, and Pulaski.

Eleventh District—Elkhart, Kosiusko, Lagrange, Noble, Steuban and DeKalb.

Twelfth District—Allen, Adams, Wells, Jay, Blackford, Randolph, and Delaware.

Thirteenth District— Huntington, Wabash, Whitley, Tipton, Grant, and Hamilton.

The political complexion of these proposed Districts, is indicated by the following figures of the recent State election.

CREAT REDUCTION ON
Raisins, Currants, Peaches, Prunes, Teas,

Etc. We purchased 1000 boxes No. 1 Layer Raisins before the advance, and now offer them at 12½c per pound, or $2.50 per box of 25 lbs. This is equal to 10c per lb, and the lowest they have ever been in this market.

We also purchased a large lot of Zanta Currants. This fruit is generally considered low at 15c, we now offer the best quality at 10c.

The greatest reduction is on teas—selling 2 and 3 chests a day—no intermediate profits to pay, as we purchase direct of the importers and sell to the customers, thereby saving the profits of the Jobber, speculator and wholesaler. The failure of five of the largest tea importers of N. Y. has broken the tea market. We have taken advahtage of the situation, and purchased large quantities at low rates, and we now offer all grades 15c per pound lower than fermer prices

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Christmas is coming.

Pretty good sleighing.

The schools opened last Monday.

Some of our day horses has the episcootic.

If you want a good cigar, get a Toby at Smith & Hare's. Only five cents.

The horse business seems to be very dull. No trading or buying is indulged in.

Packages of "almost anything," under 12 ounces, can now be sent by mail—the postage being one cent an ounce.

Gen. Reuben Kise, well know in this State, and one of the editors of the Vincennes Sun, died last week after a protracted illness.

A heavy snow fell last Sunday. In fact it snowed uncessingly during the greater part of the day, depositing about eight inches.

The performance of Mrs. Bowers, at the Opera House, in Fort Wayne, last Friday evening was the finest ever presented in that city.

Lauferty is doing a good trade in the Clothing line. He has a fine stock, ready made, and can get you up a nice suit in good style.

The youngsters are already counting the days till Christmas. Old Santa Claus should advertise his coming to let the little fellows know where to find him.

We hear of some cases of complaint because the Marshal is compelling those living in the suburbs to put down side walks when the interior of the town wants a little attention of that kind.

Would'nt it be awful if that disease, epizootic, would attack that class of people who "stick their nose" into other people's business every chance they can get. Whew!

The right-of-way on the Baltimore & Ohio line has not yet all been secured, and Fort Wayne is now making an effort to secure the road. Unless our people look sharp we may yet allow this enterprise to slip out of our fingers.

Davenport & Co., the popular druggists are offering inducements in their different lines of goods that cannot be excelled in the county. They have beautiful wall paper, curtains, shades, etc. School books, stationary, and a large assortment of attractive holiday goods that must be seen to be admired.

Subscriptions to the Eel River road are creeping up very slowly, and though the committee are working hard, we may yet have to report a failure in the enterprise Our farmer friends as well as town people are interested, and unless all do their duty, it will go by default.

G. G. Grady, is meeting with great success in his new enterprise at Fort Wayne. The house is crowded nightly. Don't fail to see the attractions when you go to the city. We are obliged to G. G. Marlow, editor of the Opera Bulletin for special favors.

Will our friends now try to assist us in the circulation of the Courier? We are laboring to produce a good paper, and we must have the support of the citizens.—Let every one ask his neighbor who does not already take it and thus further the good work.

Smith & Hare, have had such a run on their fine brands of tobacco lately that they found themselves without a supply, though an order had been forwarded, it was thought, in good time. A new lot has been received and they are again ready for their customers.

House Burned.—On Monday afternoon, a farm house, belonging to Mr. John Taylor of Franklin, and occupied by Mr. Benj Hammon, caught fire and burned to the ground. Mr. Taylor's loss is about $1,000 and the occupants lost considerable in household goods. There was no insurance on the property destroyed. The fire caught from a defective flue or pipe.—Press.

The influence on the system of Smolander's Buchu is such, that no case of kidney, bladder and glandular disease, mental and physical debility, exhaustion of the vital force, lassitude, lack of nervous energy, debility, and maladies incidental to the female sex, can withstand its curative properties. It renews the nervous system to a sanitary state.

We are informed by Mr. Hamsher, of the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Extension, that the difference between a perfect air line, and that of the road, from Havana, Ohio to Syracuse, Indiana, is only 496 rods.—The air line distance being 159 miles, whilst the distance by the road survey is only a 160 miles and 176 rods! Where else, in the United States, can the equal of that be found?—New Era.

It is understood, we believe, that the Radicals in the northern part of this Congressional District, are disposed to shove this county out of the present District in the new apportionment, and thus to choke Major Saylor off for a renomination. On this subject the Fort Wayne Sentinel speaketh thusly: "Iddings and Moon insist that Huntington co. shall be tacked on to Adams, Allen, Whitley and Wells, their great desire paramount to every other interest is to get rid of Saylor." This is unkind to Major Saylor; and it is to be hoped that the "immortal forty" who stood by him so grandly at Kendallville, will at once take steps to counteract the efforts Iddings and Moon.

We are authorized by the School Board to offer the above reward to any one who will discover the perpetrators of the vile nuisances at the School House, during vacation. This will be paid upon application to the Trustees, giving the names of the parties concerned.

Delightful.—We are obliged to the new Auburn Silver Cornet Band for a delightful serenade last evening. The beautiful solo from the opera of the Bohemian Girl, was admirably executed, while the bass drum came in on the chorus with an impetuosity that will some day decide its fate. The baritone duet, in F sharp has no equal. The florid expression was grand.

Colonel Tom Mays is contemplating large improvements in his already flourishing office. The Courier will soon come out in a new dress. Tom is one of the best newspaper men in the State. He is always alive to the occasion.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

If there ever was an individual who has suffered an infliction of successive titles it is that same Tom.

J. H. Barns, School Examiner, will hold an examination at Auburn, next Saturday at the school house.

Dr. Langworthy concluded his second course of lectures last Saturday evening. To say that they were interesting and instructive does not convey half an idea of their importance to the public. We hope that the doctor will favor us again in due time, and that our citizens will turn out and more generally encourage this class of entertainments. The little folks highly appreciated the special lectures of Dr. Butler, and the Doctor may feel gratified that he has contributed so largely to their enjoyment.

The Concert at Waterloo, last Friday evening, was largely attended, and the programme rendered in a style at once pleasing and entertaining.

Grand Benefit.—The amatuer Minstrel Company, of this place, propose giving an exhibition, on Friday December 13th for the benefit of the Odd Fellows.—We are assured that nothing indecent or vulgar will be permitted, the performance being mainly composed of songs, quartetts, burlesques and laughable incidents. The boys have been prepating for some time and a pleasant time is anticipated.—The net proceeds will be donated to the Odd Fellows, and as that order are in need of great assistance, caused by the destruction of their new Hall, it behooves every one, who desires to contribute to a worthy object and at the same time get the worth of their money in a pleasant entertainment to extend their patronage and swell the proceeds. Admission 25 cents, children 15 cents. Free list suspended.

Vicks' Floral Guide for 1873.

The Guide is now published quarterly. 25 cents pays for the year, four numbers, which is not half the cost. Those who afterwards send money to the amount of one dollar or more for seeds may also order twenty-five cents worth extra—the price paid for the Guide.

The January number is beautiful, giving plans for making rural homes, designs for dining table decorations, window gardens, etc., and containing a mass of information invaluable to lovers of flowers. One hundred and fifty pages, on fine tinted paper, some five hundred engravings and a superb colored plate and chromo cover. The first edition of 200,000 just printed in English and German, and ready to send out. James Vick, Rochester, N. York.

Outrageous.—The way some of our boys are being brought up in this place does not speak very flatteringly of the coming reduction of the attendance at our jail and penitentiaries. Parents are either very ignorant or else very indifferent as to the doings of their children. A more profane set of young boys never disgraced a town, while many mean, low dirty tricks seem to transpire almost daily. The last is the outrage at the School House during vacation. The vilest nuisances were committed upon the benches and even desks, the furniture, windows, etc., broken and destroyed, and to crown the barbarous act, a pig, even more decent than its tormenters, was quartered therein, the authors, whoever they were, bowing, when taking their leave of this hogship, in deference to his eminent superority to occupy a position so far above them. A reward is offered to discover them and we hope for the sake of the citizens at large that they will be exposed and punished for their nastiness.

George J. E. Mayer and F. Voinol "Jewelers," No. 29 East Main Street, Opposite First National Bank, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Invite the people of Auburn and vicinity to call and examine their goods—appropriate for holliday presents. It will afford them pleasure to exhibit their extensive stock of gold watches, chains, jewelry, solid and silver-plated ware, etc.—Special invitation to call and see their wonderful singing birds and boquet-vase just received from Europe.

$75,000 in cash for $1.—We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column of the Nebraska State Orphan Asylum. Here is a chance to win a fortune in a public legal drawing and at the same time help a noble and worthy institution. Oct. 17,–8t.

[illegible]

[illegible] We think there are those who have not paid us a cent since we have been connected with the Courier. Whitherward are you drifting? Have you not yet awakened from that moral indifference that says money is due and let her be d—ned. Have you thought of that small sum that would make us happy, and as incandescent as the dying groans of a fried oyster. Then come forth from your holes, and bless. In other words chuck down and feel the electricity of a clear conscience.

Be thou as chaste as ice
As poor as snow thou can't not escape calomel
Get the to a brewery.

With all thy faults we'll still love thee, if thou wilt but reach o'er this chasm, and put money in our purse. We don't believe there are any that would willingly defraud us. If there is they belong to that class that object to spelling "taters" with a P. All the rest will pay us, if they've got the money—if they haven't the money they'll bring us something—if they hain't anything they ll, well, they'll never pay us a cent, that's clear. But there are other things not quite so clear, and one is, why those who are able do not pay for their paper. That is a problem that has troubled the minds of our best [editorial] philosophers for years, and they haven't got the money yet.

We hope our friends will take this as a broad hint, and if they can't, and let us know, we'll find some one to give them a kick. Just read your future below:

The man who cheats the Printer
Out of a single cent,
Will never reach the heavenly land
Where old Elijah went.
He will not gain admittance there,
By devils he'll be driven,
And made to loaf his time away
Outside the walls of heaven.

Without a man to greet him
Without a pleasant grin,
The happiness that he will reap
Will be almighty thin.
He'll have to eat the thistle
Of sorrow and regret,
He'll have to buck around right smart
With cussedness, "You bet."

The Temperance Cause.

We gave notice a few weeks ago that a meeting of the friends of Temperance would be held at the M. E. Church on Thanksgiving day. The attendance was good considering the time and surroundings. We dropped in a short time and were not long in arriving at the conclusion that large bodies were not always the most enthusiastic and determined. Those who lay the flattering unction to their soul that the temperance element in this county, is imbecile and without power, or influence, will be awakened some morning by the triumphant shouts of this now quiet but puissant band, and another era will dawn upon humanity or at least a better freedom, that shall forever banish more woes and miseries than has ever been caused by the power of the sword.

We know that the mass of our citizens are temperate, and when the question comes up directly before them, they will decide in favor of that which is now the minority. The question is sure to be made an issue, a national issue, and at no distant day. And the videttes of this movement, who are steadily advancing in every social and business department, advancing by the inherent force of the main body that has sent them fourth, are but indications that, arrived with a good cause, and a few firm and unflinching advocates it is gradually, but surely working out its own salvation, and that of mankind. Such enthusiastic and spirited meetings as this one will exert a good influence in this direction. Our temperance friends are fast coming to the conclusion that it requires something more than talk and are responding with their money and hard work in the cause. It is a healthy sign and if all act with good judgment and tact, we may look for considerable accession, and increase of power in a short time.

The meeting was organized by the appointment of S. Basset to the chair. Prayer by Rev. Mr. Cone.

Rev. Mr. Ward moved that this meeting at its close should adjourn to meet on the last Monday of December, which was carried.

Remarks were made by W. Griswold, R. M. Lockhart, Colbrook, Hogue, Clark President Bassett and others.

On motion a contribution was taken up to defray expenses, etc. Quite a sum was raised, but we noticed that the one who had talked so much about getting up the meeting, give the least money. It wont do to run "der machine" in this way.—Members must pay, as well as talk. In fact there will be a necessity after while of classifying the membership into workers, payers and talkers. The first we quote at 100 per cent. premium, the second at 95 per cent premium and the last at 95 per cent disconnt.

The following resolutions was then passed:

That we as an organization are opposed to the granting of licence to any applicant to sell spirituous liquors.

On motion the chair appointed a committee of three to petition the State Legislature to enact a law embracing all the good qualities of the Ohio liquor law. The chair appointed, Rev. S. B. Ward, R. M. Lockhart and D. D. Moody. Adjourned to the last Monday in December.

When you go to Fort Wayne to buy clothing ask for one of our price list before you purchase your goods, and get posted on prices and not be cheated by outsiders. No. 5 Keystone block.

Among the multitude of different branches of trade in Fort Wayne, none are of more importance than the boot and shoe trade. This branch is well represented; prominent among them all is the shoe house of Markley, Schrader & Co. They came to Fort Wayne in 1866, and by their gentlemanly deportment and close attention to business, they have acquired a trade perhaps not excelled by any house in their line. Not satisfied with bargains given their customers heretofore, they propose to do still better for them in the future. Their stock is very large, being a full line of everything needed for mens, boys and youths, women, Misses and children's wear. They are giving great bargains; one cannot know how cheap they are selling, unless they call. Examine the goods and learn prices. We advise all in want of boots, shoes or rubbers to give them a call. tf.

Lots of people that have never been in Fort Wayne and are not acquainted can find the Red Front clothing hall, No. 5, Keystone block. Any woman or child can find this place, and you will save from 20 to 25 cents on each dollar.

Everybody that goes to Fort Wayne should not fail to call at the Red Front Clothing Hall, No. 5 Keystone block, and see the largest stock of clothing in the city. It has all been bought for cash before the late advance of wool.

Dissolution Notice.

O, God, the Spirit—who hast sought us—
[illegible]

For all the [illegible]
For [illegible]
For [illegible] and for [illegible]—
We thank Thee, O Lord.

For that we live and hope for life—
For health (itself with blessings rife)—
For strength to [illegible] with toil and strife—
We thank Thee, O Lord.

For home and all the loved ones there—
For blessings found no other where—
For the home altar-place of prayer—
We thank Thee, O Lord.

For blessed peace through all our land—
For rights sustained at law's command—
For great wrongs righted by Thy hand—
We thank Thee, O Lord.

For spring time and the autumn glow—
For summer's rain and winter's snow—
For time to reap and time to sow—
We thank Thee, O Lord.

For plenty in the harvest field—
For bounty of the orchard's yield—
For vine and fig tree's fruit and shield—
We thank Thee, O Lord.

O, God, the Father—never erring—
O, God, the Savior—peace conferring—
O, God, the Spirit—Long enduring—
We praise Thee.

Praise the glory of Thy face—
Praise the giving of Thy grace—
Praise the Promise of Thy word;

Praise Thy love that suffereth long—
Praise with never ending song—
"Hosanna to the Lord."

For Thy judgments they are just—
For Thy purposes we trust
Now and ever.

For Thy promises are sure—
For Thy mercies will endure—
Ending never.

O God, the Father—throned above—
O God, the Savior—gift of love—
O God, the Spirit—heavenly dove—
We pray Thee:

From foes within and foes without—
From the rabble and the rout—
O Lord, deliver us.

From the hot and hasty word—
From the drawing of the sword—
O Lord, deliver us.

From the parching of the earth—
From the desolated hearth—
O Lord, deliver us.

From the pestilential breath—
From the famine's wasting death—
O Lord, deliver us.

O God, the Father—all-wise, glorious—
O God, the Savior—o'er death victorious—
O God, the Spirit—given to comfort us—
Grant us Thy peace.

Turn not Thy face away—
Help us in trust to pray—
"Thy will be done alway"—
For Thy love is the hope of our endeavor;

Send Thy grace as a shower—
Every day, every hour—
For in Thee is the power—
And the honor and the glory forever,
AMEN.

A MODEL ROMANCE.

"Sir," said Dr. Johnson, "let me show you a model."

"Oh, Mr. Ormond, I am tired of this position. I wish you could let me have a rest. Do—there's a good fellow—please."

"Wait just five minutes, Polly, till I've done this bit of your head. Don't move—just one minute more. I'm getting it right now, and then we'll knock off for a bit."

The request was the request of a model; the answer was the answer of a painter. The model reclined, in a half kneeling attitude, apparently at the foot of a cross. Her clasped hands were uplifted; her eyes were upraised pathetically; her long hair streamed down, flowingly, over neck and shoulders; a loose white sort of shirt clothed her to the waist; below was a reddish brown skirt, skillfully disposed as "drapery," in artful folds. The whole attitude and expression represented—and represented well—imploring agony combined with tender despair. The bare arms were beautifully posed; the eyes gleamed with a sublime splendor.

The painter, my friend, Frank Ormond, A. R. A.—is working with quiet excitement at his easel. His figure is tall; he wears the velvet coat of his craft; he—but why describe him? Everybody knows Frank Ormond. Let that pass.

And now, reader, while painter and model (the attitude was a trying one) have "knocked off" work for a little rest, while he lights a pipe and she, yawningly, stretches her stiff and weary limbs, let us look round us at the delicious litter of a painter's studio.

The house is old, and dates probably from Queen Anne's days. It has, no doubt, been the habitation of nobles of that period. You cannot see much of the walls, but look at the doors, at the painted ceiling, at the splendid marble mantelpiece. Look at the deep window places and tall, thickly-sashed windows. It is a house which Hogarth might have used for the residence of Lord Squanderfield.

The studio is a large, three-windowed room, cold and bare of aspect. The backs of canvases framed with deal lie about like bits of scenes out of use, and suggest somewhat the coulisses of a theater. A lay figure, with a wooden fixedness of aspect, its head reminding one of a ship's figurehead, sits in a renaissance chair, and wears a thirteenth-century costume. This figure forms the principal still-life object in the room. In one corner reposes the major part of an old suit of armor, the dull and tinted breast-plate surmounted, in a rather drunken way, by a rusted helmet. A belt-hilted rapier, temp. Elizabeth, which, says Frank, might have belonged to Raleigh, leans against the wall, and near it is a small-sword which suggests the tea-cup times of Anne, the flowing wig and stiff skirts, the figure of Addison, or the brawling Mohocks who stopped Swift's chair. From the open door of a richly carved dark armoire depends a Japanese robe. Plaster casts of feet and hands, busts, masks and a torso, with the muscles strongly accented by dust, are sprinkled about, and contrast chalkily with the color of hangings, bits of silk dresses, and a remnant of tapestry. Two old foils, one broken and both grievously damaged, lie across the arms of a magnificent antique chair, which has a seat of crimson velvet, on which rest a Spanish mandolin and one boxing glove; while a strip of yellow Chinese silk has slipped down on the floor. A stuffed monkey, with a perennially diabolical smile upon a swollen visage, balances uneasily upon legs with a padded look about them, while a stuffed owl stares glassily in sullen gravity. The bust of one Roman Emperor is crowned with a Vandyke hat, and a white petticoat is supported by two Velasquez boar-spears. A very handsome oak table, with massive legs, is covered with Venetian glasses and Flemish bottles, with "pots" of various sorts, comprising Gris de Flandres, Satsuma jars, and the blue Linen, or six-mark Japanese ware, while an exquisite little Japanese cabinet is crested by a handful of peacock's feathers. Sketches in charcoal and in oils, copies of world-renowned pictures, studies, unfinished paintings, are strewn about in picturesque and grotesque confusion; and, at one end of the room, with the best light falling full upon it, stands the guillotine-like easel, on which rests the picture of the hour, the canvas which absorbs all Frank Ormond's thoughts and is freighted with all his ambition, the picture upon which he is now working.

And so the happy painter works from year to year—labor, completion, weariness, fruition, recommencement. His whole work and hope are concentrated, for the time, upon the picture, with which he remains face to face for many lonely months. It is finished at last; finished just when it must be completed, in order to be sent to the Academy, and then the reaction of lassitude, after a long tension, begins. His work has gone out from him; the painter feels weary of the picture over which he has felt so many fluctuations of depression and delight. It has absorbed so much of himself that he cannot judge it truly; he alternates between confidence and despondency; he sighs half with regret; half in relief, as his distracting darling is carried forth from his doors. Then he relaxes the long strain of anxious labor; he amuses himself, and half forgets his art; he works but little, if at all. The picture gets well hung; then comes the private view, with the critics; then the public crowding about the shining rows in the splendid gallery; then follow the favorable notice, the praise of friends, the sneer of "brother" rivals; then all this passes away, until, after due relaxation, the painter recommences with renewed ardor his work so beautiful and loved. A painter, by the way, has one great advantage over an author—he is sure of his spectators, of his public. If his work be hung in a good exhibition, it is sure to be seen by all those whom the painter wishes to see it. An author has to go to his readers; but his spectators always come to a painter.

Meanwhile Frank, twisting his mustache as he gazes on his picture, and now and then throwing in a deft and rapid touch of the brush, is waiting until his model shall have rested in order to go on.

"Bother the skirt!" cries that young person, who, with a view to warming herself, has been dancing about the studio trying a burlesque pas which she had seen on the previous evening at the the theater. "There, Mr. Ormond, I'm rested now. On we go again!"

The little model interested me, both in her individualism and as a member of a class which furnishes to the artist the materialism of the romantic. I tried to learn something of her history, but I succeeded only sketchily, and in a piecemeal manner. Her name was Polly Brown. She was distinctly pretty and piquant. She possessed, among her various merits as a model, very long and beautiful brown hair, which she knew how to dishevel and tumble down far below her waist, in a flow of romantic distress. Her eyes, brown also, were large, and full of soft fire; and the little monkey had a trick of rendering them plaintive and pathetic in expression, so that she was particularly valuable as a model for young heroines in distress, virgin martyrs, betrayed beauties, and the like. Her complexion was that of a light brunette; had she lived more in the country, her cheeks would, it is probable, have shown a little flush of tender red through the pale, soft olive of her teint. She had a nice little nose; the mouth was good, though perhaps a little large, but she knew how to purse it up and to draw the corners down so as partially to conceal this little defect. The shape of the little half arch, half tender face was a fine oval, and the head was remarkably well set on. She was good in profile, but better as a three-quarter face with upturned eyes. Her hands and feet were small, and the figure, though a trifle petite, was round and well shaped. Her manner was always merry, but never boisterous, and the girl had innate tact and taste.

"Yes," observed Frank, critically, "she is a first-rate model, in her line. It is only when you see a good deal of her that you detect the least little trifle of vulgarity, which comes, no doubt, from her mother. Do you know I rather like that little suspicion of plebeianism; it shows that her base touches the people. She is good, you know, for historical heroines. She is, in fact, fit for what actors call the juvenile tragedy line of business. Do you remember my Olivia in the Vicar of Wakefield? Well, she sat, and did splendidly, for that. She's always punctual, and pleasant to deal with; she's lively and frisky, but never rude, and she's really a good little girl. Out of all the models I know, she's about the best. I like little Polly; if you want to please her, you've only got to send her to the play."

The little model had considerable imitative and dramatic talent, and readily picked up the trick of her trade. She quickly caught a painter's idea, and produced the expression, or caught the attitude, which his purpose required. She had a little feminine voice, almost as exquisitely dainty as Marie Wilton's, and had conquered that difficulty, so great to one of her class, of a good pronunciation.

Polly's mother was housekeeper in a set of chambers. She had been on the stage in her youth, and retained a strong passion for the theater. Of her father I could learn nothing. Polly herself, in her early girlhood, had been theatrical. She danced as a fairy in pantomimes, and formed one of a child-group of peasants, or what not, as required by the ballet-master; but, to her great disappointment, she never could obtain a "speaking part." One winter a severe illness threw her out of her usual employment. When she recovered she found no opening in the theater, and she was, for a short time, driven to resort to sewing. She was then engaged in the extensive and prosperous establishment of Messrs. Abednego and Melchisedek; but this miserably-paid drudgery did not long suit Miss Polly. She was unhappy, and grew desperate, or rather determined. Sanguine in her youthful hopefulness, she suddenly discharged herself, and trusted to the chapter of accidents. One day, when very poor, Polly strolled into the park. Sitting down upon a bench, still and quiet as an Arctic winter night, she thought and thought what she could do, what she should do, to earn her living. It was early spring; the painters were hard at work for the Academy, and good models were scarce. Frank Ormond happened to be passing by. He wanted a girl-model, and his painter's eye was struck by little Polly's face and figure. He spoke to her, and proposed that she should come and sit for him. Polly consented, and went the next morning to his studio. She had found a new trade, which she rather liked, and which, as she gradually acquired a connection among painters, paid her moderately well. She grew attached to the free and easy Bohemian ways of the studio, and was soon launched as a well known and popular "model," in which capacity, while sitting for Joan of Arc, I first made her acquaintance. Polly, by the way, always had a superstition about the park, and believed that it was a place which "brought her good luck." "I first met you, Mr. Ormond, in the park," she used at times to say, "and I am sure that some day some great good fortune will happen to me in that dear old park. I often sit upon that bench where you first saw me. Ah, I was badly off then."

The life of a model is not without perils and temptations to a young girl; but Polly trod safely her rather dangerous path with a firm, light step. Her innocence was not ignorance; for she saw and heard a great deal, and understood all that she saw or heard. Without protectors or advisers, lonely but self-reliant, the girl walked along the edge of unfenced precipices circumspectly and shrewdly. She was ardent, and perhaps ambitious, but had a certain integrity of will and quiet force of character which held her upright. Very unconsciously, the little lowly thing was a sort of worldly heroine.

Natural character, and the influences of the circumstances which surrounded and molded it, produced some rather complex contradictions and problems in our model. Seen in some aspects you would have pronounced her to be a little good-for-nothing; merry and pleasant, indeed, but worthless. Yet you would have judged her wrongly had you based an opinion upon the superficial trivialities which she turned outside. She never made any pretense of goodness; she rather took pains to show her worst side, to appear worse than she really was. She had naturally a light side to her character, and she emphasized her levity in all that she showed of herself to others. Nor was she, at times, wholly free from passing thrills of temptation; but, like the needle of the compass, which, though it vibrates tremulously, yet ultimately points always rightly, she gravitated back infallibly to good. A creature by no means too bright or good for human nature's daily food, there was in her that "mystic sense of right" which so stirred the enthusiasm of the German philosopher. Exposed to so much danger, sustained by so little help against evil, some unseen power kept this girl always really pure and good. She had, no doubt, a tendresse for Frank Ormond, but then her shrewd, practical sense showed her that there was, as she termed it, "no use" in indulging such a feeling; and, taught by her the hard lessons of her life, she had learned to repress, to restrain and to forego.

One morning, when Frank was just finishing his well-known picture of the execution of Lady Jane Gray, in which Polly, of course, "sat" for the victim Queen, the young lady, at the conclusion of the sitting, said very quietly:

"You won't want me any more, Mr. Ormond. You've finished that picture, head and all, now. I'm glad of it, because I shouldn't be able to come to you again."

"Now come again, Polly, why not? I suppose you are very full of engagements just now; but you mustn't throw me over. I shall want you next or my Dorothea."

"I'm very sorry, Mr. Ormodd, but I shan't ever be able to come again."

"Not be able to come again—what the deuce do you mean, Polly?" asked Frank, rather pettishly, as he "relieved" the headsman with a deft touch. "I suppose you're getting too rich?—no, it can't be that. You must come. There's no model at all like you for some of my work. Ah, I see! You've been spooning with some fellow, or in trouble, eh, Miss Poll?"

"No," replied the young lady, with demure dignity, "no trouble, thank you, Mr. Frank. The fact is—I can't come, because—because I'm going to get married."

"Married—whew!" cried the painter, facing around from the easel and taking his pipe out of his mouth. "Married, Polly! I never heard about that—who is it? What sort of a fellow? A good one, I hope, for your sake."

"Never mind, Mr. Frank," responded Miss Polly, composedly. "Perhaps you'll know some day, but not now. Thank you for all your kindness, Mr. Ormond. You've always been very kind to me, and I—I like you very much. Yes; I'm doing very well, thank you. He is a good fellow—I like him, and I mean that we shall be very happy. But when I am married I can't ever sit any more, if you please."

Frank Ormond growled discontentedly. He did not like losing his model, and he felt a vague jealousy of the unknown. There was a sneer in his tone as he said:

"I suppose, Polly, you have caught some old fool, who is taken with a pretty face, and your union will be about as incongruous as a woodbine twining round a wooden leg."

"Think what you like, Mr. Ormond," said little Polly, calmly. "I know what you do think; but never mind that. I shall tell you just nothing about it. I only come to-day" (Polly was tying on her bonnet) "because I knew you wanted me to finish your Lady Jane Gray. That's done now, and I must say good by. I'm very grateful to you, Frank, I am, indeed, for all your kindness. I'm sorry to have to give up coming to the studio—I liked the life—but it's all over now. Thank you—six shillings; yes, that's right. My career as a model is ended. Once more—good-by, Mr. Frank!"

She shook hands cheerily, and then she shut the studio door for the last time.

The strange thing was, that the little witch really made a good marriage. She had won the affections of a good man, of position and property. The reticent little monkey never, I believe, told any one of her courtship, or the progress of it; but once, some time after, she betrayed herself so far as smilingly to tell Frank, when she met him in society, that the whole thing began "in the Park, in that dear old Park; on the old bench, you know;" and this was the alpha and omega of her confession. Many studios were for a time corroded by curiosity; but time had to wear this feeling away without other artificial solacement. Some painters expressed anger at losing their little model; others expressed perplexity at her rise in life; but no one could drop a hint against her fair fame, and, as she had been generally liked, many good wishes accompanied her change of position.

Like that Mattie, sometimes a 'near cousin o' the Laird of Limmerfield's,' and who, when elevated to the position of Mrs. Bailie Nicol Jarvie, behaved excellently in her exultation, little Polly made a model wife. She had all a woman's pliability, adaptability and tact; and she soon picked up the style and manners necessary to her new position. She was naturally grateful, and she had a little touch of woman's pride; pride in herself, and pride for her husband. She wished to make her husband happy, and was determined that he should not have to blush for his choice. She set to work, too, to educate herself in her way. Having a strong motive to impel her, and great natural quickness, she soon succeeded in acquiring a respectable veneer of culture; and Frank Ormond, who meets her from time to time, told me that she had developed and improved in an altogether surprising manner. I believe that she succeeded, without apparent effort, in educing from Mr. Frank the respect due to her new position, rather than the familiarity likely to arise from their old relations, and yet she was quite frank, and kind, and natural with him.

"By Jove!" cried Frank, "when I took her down to dinner the other day, at the 'Howards,' I could hardly believe the self-possessed, lady-like woman by whom I was sitting had ever been the little monkey that used so often to dance burlesque dances about my studio! But women are wonderful creatures, sir. Their knowledge of the world beats ours. If they were only as good actresses on the stage as they are off it, the dramatic art would be in a fine way."

Success ripens and improves some natures; and little Polly was decidedly improved by good fortune. She was always petty, but as I saw her the other day in the Park (looking out probably not without thoughts for a certain bench), reclining easily in her carriage, she appeared positively elegant and distingue. She was particularly well dressed, and had a piquant touch of grande dame in her manner.

Does any one who has ever really belonged to Bohemia pass out of it into Philistia, or even into higher regions, without an occasional retrospect of regret, and a backward glance, coupled with a sigh?

Did our Polly, lolling upon her easy carriage cushion, ever look back with a tinge of sadness to the days in which she used to trudge on foot, through mud and rain, to the stage door, or to the painter's studio? What does she think when she visits the Royal Academy? How does she feel when she goes to the theater? Does she ever speculate upon the new model (the golden-haired one) who now sits for Frank Ormond? Does she, as she gazes upon the "amaranthine bowers of boundless joy," recall the feelings of the figurantes who, clothed in sheeney tinsel, float ethereally upon iron supports in the ideal atmosphere of blue and red lights? I do not know; I have no hint which would enable me to solve the problem; but I am assured that she is gratefully happy in her married life; and that, as a wife, she is still a model.

Electro-Magnetism and Type-Setting.

The American Artisan says: Among the most recent of the devices for mechanically setting type is an English invention, in which magnets are so arranged in relation to a system of grippers as to transfer the types to the latter in regular order, the grippers in turn carrying the types to a guide, whence they may be readily conveyed to the galley. A plan is also suggested for making the guide itself magnetic, so that it may draw the types from conducting tubes and retain them in the requisite vertical position, and in proper reference to each other. In order to be acted on in this way, the type must be of materials susceptible to magnetic attraction, which ordinary type metal is not. The British inventor proposes to imbed a small piece of iron or steel in the base of each separate type, a method difficult to execute, and more than likely to prove only partially effective for the purpose. A better way would be to make the types by machinery from steel wire, and use volatile hydro-carbons instead of soap for cleaning them after use in printing, to avoid the corrosion to which, by the more usual manner of cleansing, steel type would be exposed.

South American Railway Enterprise.

Within the next ten years South America is likely to possess a Mount Cenis tunnel of its own. A prominent engineer, Juan de Quartel, has secured the co operation of a number of heavy capitalists for the construction of a railway, the bonds of which the Peruvian Government will guarantee. This road is to be built from Payta, the principal port between Panama and Callao, to Sullans, thence continue under the Cordilleras at Huancabamba with a double track, cross the Amazon at Bellavista, and terminate at St. Cruz, where the Huallaga joins the latter river. The work is to be completed in 1883, and will immediately lead to the establishment of a new line of steamers on the Amazon, by which the shortest route from the west coast of South America and Europe will be secured.

NINE States which in 1860 stood above Iowa in population now rank below her, to-wit: Georgia, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Wisconsin, Michigan, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Maryland.

Blundering Into Wealth.

An advertisement in the Boston newspapers announcing the sale at auction of the Dexter property in Newburyport brings to mind numerous stories current in that city respecting the eccentric individual who flourished there in the latter part of the last century under the self-assumed title of Lord Timothy Dexter. This was the fortunate merchant who, with brains either so scant or disordered that he was continually making himself an object of derision, still blundered into what in those days was considered a stupendous fortune. It was Lord Dexter who, on consulting a waggish acquaintance as to a profitable way of investing certain moneys, was advised to ship a cargo of warming-pans to the West Indies, and availed himself of the advice to the great mirth of all who heard of the transaction. The cream of the joke, however, was, the warming-pans found sale to the sugar manufacturers for ladles, and Dexter realized a great profit on the venture. A shipment of red woolen night-caps to the coast of Guinea, suggested as a joke, turned out as a most fortunate speculation. Somebody wishing to humbug the old fellow, told him one day that news had come that all the whales were dying off. Dexter went to work and bought up all the whalebone he could get hold of, fairly cornering the market, after which he unloaded at an immense profit. Having at last blundered into great wealth, he assumed the title of Lord Dexter, and spent a great deal of money in laying out attractive grounds about his house, but ruined the effects produced by skillful gardeners by setting up in every direction carved wooden figures of the most hideous description. Twenty-five years ago some of these figures were still to be seen on the grounds. Lord Dexter, becoming ambitious of literary distinction, published a book with the title of "A Pickle for the Knowing Ones;" but being conscious of weakness in the matter of punctuation, put all the periods, commas, semi-colons and the like at the end of the book, telling his readers that they might pepper and salt his production to suit themselves. A few years before his death he had a mock funeral, and afterward beat his wife because she did not exhibit sufficient grief over his fictitious demise. Some time ago the house and grounds once occupied by this strange character came into the possession of a wealthy citizen of Newburyport, who has made the place one of the most beautiful residences in New England.

Under-Clothing for Cold Weather.

I have written on this subject before, but there seems to be need of precept upon precept. Of late I have been learning better ways than I knew before.

For children of three years and over there is nothing better, perhaps, than an under-garment clothing the body from the neck and wrists to the heels, much like the night-drawers children wear. They may be made with a plain, easy, high-necked waist, with long, straight sleeves, and with open drawers sewed to the waist. The drawers should be rather full at the top, but small enough at the lower part of the leg to go inside the stocking, reaching to the heel, or leaving no gap above the shoe. "Doctors disagree" about the material of this under-garment, some recommending woolen and some cotton. Taking into account the difficulty of washing woolen without shrinking it, and the disagreeable sensation many skins experience in wearing it, probably the best way in most cases is to have this under-garment made either of cotton flannel or of thin cotton cloth, with a similar garment of warm woolen material over it. Buttons at the waist support the other under-clothing.

There are many sensible ladies in the United States now wearing under-garments similar to those just described. Among them preference is usually given to thin cotton material for the suit next the body, with a suit made of woolen (white flannel, gray ladies'-cloth, or red firemens' flannel) in the same fashion worn over the cotton suit in winter weather. With two such woolen suits for frequent changes, to give opportunity for thorough airing and sunning of the woolens, they require very little washing. The cotton next the body takes up the perspiration, etc., and this gets the good weekly washing. The woolen suit when taken off weekly for a change need only be exposed for a day or two to purify it properly, washing it only when it visibly requires it.

If men wear cotton under their woolen shirts, the woolen may be treated in the same way, and men who are not engaged in dirty work can wear their woolen shirts all winter with very little washing, purifying them by air and sunshine each week when changes are made. Ladies'-cloth shirts shrink less than common flannel.—American Agriculturist.

To Grass a Bank.

A German method is: For each square rod to be planted take half a pound of lawn grass seed and mix it intimately, and thoroughly, with six cubic feet of good dry garden earth and loam. This is placed in a tub, and liquid manure, diluted with about two-thirds of water, is added and well stirred in, so as to bring the whole to the consistency of mortar. The slope is to be cleaned and made perfectly smooth, and then well watered, after which the paste just mentioned is to be applied with a trowel and made even and thin as possible. Should it crack by exposure to the air, it is to be again watered and smoothed up, day by day, until the grass makes its appearance, which will be in from eight to fourteen days, and the whole declivity will soon be covered with a close carpet of green.

Epizootic Deer.

Hunters in Minnesota report the deer afflicted with epizooty; and a party deer-hunting in Isle of Wight county, Va., a few days ago, suddenly came upon four deer whose appearance indicated that they were suffering with the prevailing malady. Capt. Adams walked right up to the deer, which made no attempt to escape, being evidently in the last stages of the disease.

The Merry Heart.

'Tis well to have a merry heart,
However short we stay;
There's wisdom in a merry heart,
Whate'er the world may say.
Philosophy may lift its head,
And find out many a flaw;
But give me the philosopher
That's happy with a straw!

If life brings us but happiness,
It brings us, we are told,
What's hard to buy, though rich ones try
With all their heaps of gold;
Then laugh away, let others say
Whate'er they will of mirth:
Who laughs the most, may truly boast
He's got the wealth of earth.

There's beauty in a merry heart,
A moral beauty too:
It shows the heart is an honest heart,
That's paid each man his due,
And lent a share of what's to spare,
Despite of wisdom's fears,
And made the cheek less sorrow speak,
The eye weep fewer tears.

The sun may shroud itself in cloud,
The tempest wrath begin,
It finds a spark to cheer the dark,
Its sunlight is within!
Then laugh away, let others say
Whate'er they will of mirth;
Who laughs the most, may truly boast
He's got the wealth of earth.

Empty.

Your cozy crib is in the corner yet;
I sit and watch it, just as day is dead;
You cannot press again, my vanished pet,
Its pillow with your drowsy, golden head.

You cannot reach plump arms to get my kiss,
Or dart about with rosy, naked feet,
Babbling soft syllables of that and this,
A tiny night-gowned fairy, blithe and sweet.

Once and for all you have lain down to rest,
Not to rise up because of birds or beams—
Once and for all, with white flowers on your breast,
To slumber coldly, and to dream no dreams.

Empty the home where, frolicsome and fair,
Your precious presence made so bright a part;
Empty your little crib, your clothes, your chair,
But emptiest of all your mother's heart!

JONES and his wife were always quarreling about their comparative talent for keeping a fire. She insisted that just as surely as he attempted to rearange the sticks with the tongs he put the fire out. One night the church bell sounded an alarm, and Jones sprang for his fire bucket, eager to rush to the conflagration. "Mr. Jones," cried his wife, as he reached the door, "Mr. Jones, take the tongs!"

A CITY youth, disposed to be facetious at the expense of a countryman, asked him why sheep staid white when they eat so much green grass. The countryman said he did not know, and asked the city-bred which was the best side to milk a cow. The city-bred, in his turn, said he did not know, and asked the countryman which side was the best. "The outside, of course," said the countryman. City-bred had nothing more to say.

A Strike Curiosity.

Among the curiosities of the literature of strikes in England, the following is, we think, unparalleled. A correspondent says: "A few days ago, two colliers got into a first-class carriage of a train traveling north from Manchester, they being in their working clothes, which were begrimed with dirt and coal-dust. When the train stopped at the next station, some discomfited occupants of the same compartment called the guard, who demanded the men's tickets. They were immediately produced, first-class, and these 'gentlemen' colliers insisted,—and rightly enough,—that they would stay where they were; soon after which they pulled out a bottle of champagne, which they proceeded to discuss, boasting that they were on a strike, and were receiving a strike allowance of £1 a day."

Horace Greeley as a Worker and Sleeper.

The New-York correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial writes:

All his life Horace Greeley has been a herculean worker. He has often told me how utterly tired he was, and how he longed for rest. I have never known an editor who wrote as much, though I have known nearly all the New York editors for many years. An article of a thousand words (mixed with thoughts) would exhaust most men's intellectual powers for a day; but Greeley will write twice or thrice this quantity every day or nearly in the week. Then his editorial writing is but a tithe of his work. He is busy every wide-awake hour with one thing or another. One might think his mind and body would be wholly exhausted by writing alone; but he has always strength and time for each of the other hundred demands constantly pressing upon them. It has often been said, and I believe truly, that his remarkable ability of going to sleep at any moment has saved him from breaking down. I have many times seen this ability illustrated in amusing ways. He will write an article, and as soon as he has put the last word on paper, he will be sound asleep. He will deliver a speech at a meeting and then retire to a chair in the rear of the platform and sleep all through the other speeches. When perplexed by the visit of a bore or blatherskite, he will quietly drop off to sleep. He will take little naps at a public dinner, during the post-prandial speeches. He is famous for sleeping at Dr. Chapin's church, during the flowery sermons. He will sleep in the street cars, omnibuses, and all sorts of public places. There is no sham about it. I investigated this point not long ago, at a public lecture, when I happened to sit beside him. The moment the lecturer said "Ladies and Gentlemen," Greeley closed his eyes, and it was easy to see by the nervous twitchings of the muscles of his face that the sleep, which continued till disturbed by the applause at the close of the lecture, was genuine. He then remarked that he was tired, and found his way into a street car, where he again dozed till it reached the door of his house. I should not have been surprised to hear that, when he got to his room that night, he had written several columns of powerful editorials for next morning's Tribune. It is evident that the old god Somnus presided at Greeley's birth, and conferred on him that boon which the poet Young describes as "Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," and which Shakespeare eulogized as "Gentle sleep, nature's soft nurse."

Crystallizing Grasses.

The long, feathery grasses are the best for this purpose. They must be thoroughly dry, formed in the desired shape, and fastened securely before being put in the bath. To make the solution, take one pound of the best alum, pound it quite fine, and dissolve it in a quart of clear water, over a slow fire, but do not let it boil. Take a deep jar and suspend the bouquet in it by a string from a stick laid across the jar. When the solution is milk warm, pour it over the grasses, cover it up, and set it away for twenty-four hours. Then take them out carefully and let them hang several hours in the sun till all the water is drained away. Then set them away and do not move them for two or three days, when they will be entirely dry. The solution may be heated over and used as before.

For blue crystals use a saturated solution of sulphate of copper in hot water. For yellow use the yellow prussiate of potash; for ruby use the red prussiate of potash. These crystalized bouquets should be kept under glass shades, or their beauty will soon fade.

Mrs. Swisshelm presents her ideas about architecture briefly in words to this effect: "Your crook-spined, hump-shouldered house, with a wen on one side, a wart on the other, a factory chimney on the door, and pilot-house on the roof, may make an interesting feature in a landscape; but for a house to live in, commend me to the generous old square mansion, such as most abound in the rural districts of the Keystone State. The wide center hall, rooms on each side, and L kitchen, for homestead architecture, never has been and never can be equaled."

If a cat doth meet a cat upon the garden wall and if a cat doth greet a cat, oh, need there be a squall? Every Tommy has his Tabby, waiting on the wall, and yet she welcomes his approach with an unearthly yawl. And if a kitten wish to court a cat upon a wall, why don't he sit and sweetly smile, and not stand up and bawl and lift his precious teeth, and moan and moan, as if 'twere colic more than love that made the feller groan?

Henry Ward Beecher says: "If Darwin is right in thinking that men ascended from monads by gradual evolution, then it is very certain that some men came up by the way of the musquito, the flea and the biting fly, and that their ancestral traits still linger in the blood."

Western Patents.

The following Western patents were issued from the United States Patent Office for the week ending October 22, 1872, as reported by Gridley & Warner, Patent Attorneys, No. 135 South Clark street, Chicago, Ill.:

ILLINOIS.

Printing press—Charles F. Batchelder and Walter R. Gard, Chicago.

Washing machine—Warren Chaffee, La Harpe.

Cultivator—Reuben Elwood and Richard L. Pitcher, Sycamore.

Baker's oven—Joseph Taylor, Galesburg.

Folding bedstead—[illegible], Chicago.

Corn-stalk chopper—James Holdsworth, Chicago.

Machine for bending cane—Edwin Norton and Alton H. Faucher, Chicago.

Wind wheel—James A. Risdon, Genoa.

Post hole digger—Edward R. Sumner, Freeport.

Tent—William W. Wells, Chicago.

Paddle wheel—Geo. W. Dickinson, Charleston.

Planing machine—C. L. and L. P. Hoyt, Aurora.

Grain cleaner—Andrew Hunter, Rockford.

Cigar mold—[illegible], Chicago.

Overshoe—[illegible].

Fire proof shutter—Samuel S. Munson, Jr., Chicago.

MICHIGAN.

Horse collar cap—Richard J. Algeo, Kalamazoo.

Cider mills and press—Monroe Jones, East Saginaw.

Saw mill—Henry D., Edward N. and Charles T. Wicbes, East Saginaw.

Pegging jack—John G. Zeigler, Salt River.

Clothes wringer—James A. Park, Lansing.

Lifting jack—Amos S. Skinner, Windsor.

Basket—Roscoe E. Wheeler, Dowagiac.

INDIANA.

Car coupling—Thos. A. Renta, Bloomington.

Kitchen safe—Adam S. Brown, Delphi.

MISSOURI.

Swinging gate—Levi Hatchitt, Jr., Louisiana.

Sawing machine—William C. Daniel, Point Pleasant.

Blind slat adjuster—Oliver L. Houghland, Holden.

Earth auger—Joseph Wilson, Cameron.

KANSAS.

Portable fence—George M. Hume, Paola.

Grain separator—John L. La Rose, Leavenworth.

IOWA.

Elevated wire-way—George Killam, Fort Dodge.

Switch-locking device—Remembrance L. Patton, Hamburg.

Shuttle fastener—John C. Hanna, Rossville.

Shrinkage of Grain.

A series of experiments, instituted to test the average loss in weight by drying, shows that corn loses one-fifth, and wheat one-fourteenth by the process. From this the statement is made that farmers will make more by selling unshelled corn in the fall at 75 cents than the following summer at $1 per bushel and that $1.32 per bushel in December is equal to $1.50 for the same wheat in the following June. This estimate is made on the basis of interest at 7 per cent, and takes no account of loss from the depredations of vermin. These facts are worthy of consideration.

Intoxicating Nostrums.—The persons who have scruples of conscience against "perpendicular drinking" at tavern bars, can become blind drunk on almost any of the advertised "tonics" or "invigorants" in half an hour. There is, however, one exception to this rule. Nobody can "get over the bay" on Vinegar Bitters, for the simple reason that this famous renovating and regulating medicine contains no diffusive stimulants of any kind. Yet its strength-reserving properties are marvelous. It restores the relish for feed when all other appetizers fail; imparts unwonted vigor to the digestive functions; regulates the flow of bile; soothes the nervous system; promotes healthful sleep; and tends to produce that condition of body and brain which is supposed to be most conducive to longevity and the enjoyment of life. Its specific effects in acute and chronic disorders affecting the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, the flesh fiber, the muscles and the lungs, are considered by competent judges the most extraordinary medical phenomena of the age. Vinegar Bitters has now a larger sale than any of the spirituous astringents, and its immense popularity in a land where the people observe closely, test thoroughly, and act independently, is in itself a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of the medicine. We recommend it to all.

The Mercury, of San Jose, Cal., of a recent date, says that the advent of Goldsmith Maid and Lucy in the Golden State "is a moral calamity, the evils of which it will take years to counteract. It has turned the heads of the people, and they are fast becoming a community of horse-jockeys."

Poor Complexions restored, and good Complexions retained, by using "The Queen's Toilet."—[Com.

Brain work costs more food than hand work. According to careful estimates and analyses of the excretions, three hours of hard study wear out the body more than a whole day of severe physical labor. Another evidence of the cost of brain work is obtained from the fact that though the brain is only one-fortieth the weight of the body, it receives about one-fifth of all the blood sent by the heart into the system. Brain workers, therefore, require a more liberal supply of food, and richer food, than manual laborers.

What Unspeakable Relief is afforded to the burning and throbbing flesh by a single application of that unequaled balsam for human or brute suffering, Mexican Mustang Liniment. The tormenting and sleep-destroying pains of rheumatism, gout and neuralgia, are completely banished by its use; stiffness of the joints and painful swellings quickly yield to its emollient influence; it heals bruises, cuts, scalds, etc., with astonishing rapidity. For strains, spring halt, scratches, saddle, collar and harness galls, as well as the more serious external maladies of the horse, it is a swift and thorough remedy.—[Com.

Humbug Dissected.

Quaint old Burton has favored us with an "Anatomy of Melancholy," but who shall dissect the melancholy fallacies and fibs with which knaves and fanatics endeavor to delude the sick and feeble of this generation? Charlatans, through the newspaper press, recommend to the strengthless victim of disease convulsing purgatives which, if taken, are sure to turn his shattered system almost inside out, and sink him into the uttermost depths of helplessness and despondency! Fanatics, on the other hand, assure the prostrate patient that no medicine containing a diffusive stimulant ought to pass his lips. If he elects to be guided by the advice of impostors and lunatics, let him make his will and order his coffin; but if there is a spark of common sense in his composition, let him resort in his extremity to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the most potent of vegetable tonics and alteratives—the purest and most entirely wholesome of medicated stimulants. The wonderful cures of dyspepsia, biliousness, rheumatism, physical prostration and malarious fevers which this rare specific has effected during the last twenty-two years, are the most conclusive answers that can be given to the enemies of mankind who offer volcanic cathartics as tonics, and to the mistaken beings who would refuse a medicinal stimulant to a poor, broken-down invalid, who is literally dying by inches for the want of judicious stimulation. Temperance, properly understood, countenances no such folly as this. The State laws enacted to put down the abhorrent vice of drunkenness provide for the sale of brandy, whisky, and other liquors as medicines; and if these adulterated liquors of trade are accepted by temperance legislators as remedies, what ought to be the general verdict of the temperance public as regards the peerless vegetable tonic based upon a stimulant absolutely pure?—[Com.

King of the Blood.

For Salt Rheum, Eruptions, Scald Head, Etc.—Sirs:—I have been troubled for the last thirty years with Salt Rheum on my hands. They have been so at times that I have been unable to use them for any purpose for which they were intended. I was advised by a friend of mine, who had used the K. of the B., to try it. I did so. Have used seven bottles, and to all appearances my hands are well. They look and feel as though an entirely new skin had been formed.

Cable Screw Wire Boots and Shoes.—A word of explanation may not be out of place. The cable wire acts as a screw, is strong and firm, and at the same time is elastic and comfortable. It is much preferable to the old method of pegging, and quite as soft and elastic as sewed work, but much stronger and less liable to rip, and much less expensive. We have tried the cable screw shoe, which has proved all that is claimed for it. The increase in this new method of manufacturing boots and shoes is very rapid, and promises to supersede the wood peg and waxed thread.—The Standard, Chicago.

Millions of pairs of shoes tipped with metal are sold every year. For children's shoes they are absolutely indispensable, unless one can afford the waste of buying two pairs when only one would be needed; and few can easily submit to such a constant leak. With most people it is the little economies of the household that supply its members with comfort, and at the same time make the load of the father of moderate means a lighter one to bear. Cents invested in the purchase of metal-tipped shoes save many a hard-earned dollar.—American Workman.

The purest and sweetest Cod-Liver Oil in the world is Hazard & Caswell's, made on the sea-shore, from fresh, selected livers, by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Chills and Fever are very prevalent. Shallenberger's Pills seem to give the best satisfaction of any remedy within our knowledge.—[Com.

Oppression after eating, headache, nervous debility, are the effects of indigestion. One, or two at most, of Parsons' Purgative Pills will give immediate relief.—[Com.

Coughs and Colds are often over looked; a continuance for any length of time causes irritation of the Lungs or some chronic Throat Disease. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are an effectual Cough Remedy.—[Com.

A CHALLENGE

It is extended to the world to place before the public a better cough or lung remedy than ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

Verily it Hath No Equal.

CONSUMPTIVES, READ!

Would you cure that distressing cough, and bring back that healthy vigor till lately planted in your cheek? If you would, do not delay; for, ere you are aware, it will be too late.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM

Is your hope. It has been tried by thousands such as you, who have been cured; many, in their gratitude have lent their names to us, that suffering humanity can read their evidence and believe. Don't experiment with new and untried mixtures—you cannot afford it—but try at once this invaluable article. It is warranted to break up the most troublesome cough in a few hours, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction in all cases of lung and throat difficulties.

WHAT WELL KNOWN DRUGGISTS SAY ABOUT ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

Springfield, Tenn., Sept. 11, 1872.

Gentlemen:—Ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam at once. We have not a bottle left in our Store. It has more reputation than any cough medicine we have ever sold, and we have been in the drug business twenty-seven years; we mean just what we say about the Balsam.

Very truly yours,
HURT & TANNER.

AGAIN READ, THE EVIDENCE from a Druggist who was cured by use of the Balsam, and now sells it largely.

L. C. Cottrell, Druggist at Marine City, Michigan, writes, Sept. 12, 1872: "I am out of Allen's Lung Balsam; send me half a gross as soon as you can; I would rather be out of any other medicine in my store. The Lung Balsam never fails to do good for those afflicted with coughs."

It is harmless to the most delicate child.
It contains no opium in any form.
It is sold by Medicine-dealers generally.

CAUTION.

Be not deceived. Call for ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, and take no other.
☞ Directions accompany each bottle.

Vinegar Bitters are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion. Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Grateful thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Mechanical Diseases. Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, will be subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters once or twice a week, as a Preventive.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. There are always more or less obstructions of the liver, a weakness and irritable state of the stomach, and great torpor of the bowels, being clogged up with vitiated accumulations. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goiter, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic and Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are the best safeguard in all cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their Sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc. Their Counter-Irritant influence extends throughout the system. Their Diuretic properties act on the Kidneys, correcting and regulating the flow of urine. Their Anti-Bilious properties stimulate the liver, in the secretion of bile, and its discharges through the biliary ducts, and are superior to all remedial agents, for the cure of Bilious Fever, Fever and Ague, etc.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, and the nerves are rendered disease-proof by this great invigorant.

Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

WISHART'S

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

VINEGAR BITTERS

VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL

PURELY

DR WALKER'S CALIFORNIA

VINEGAR BITTERS

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing the merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

FUNERAL OF HORACE GREELEY.

Imposing Ceremonies.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—The Herald proposes a Press Fund for the endowment of the children of the late Greeley, and offers $100,000 as its own subscription.

Various clubs and organizations met last evening and passed resolutions of respect to the memory of Mr. Greeley.

The number of applications for tickets of admission to witness the funeral servicis at Dr. Chaplin's church is enormous. The church accommodates 1,800 persons in all. Many prominent persons had great difficulty in procuring tickets.—Some persons offered a high prices for tickets, but found none. Several prominent journalists arrived last evening from Philadelphia and other places, among them Col. Forney, to take part in the obsequies.

The crowd that visited the City Hall yesterday is estimated at 40,000.

A dispatch from Washington states that 20 Democratic members of Congress left that city last evening to attend the funeral. Senators Fenton, Tipton, Schurz and Trumbul will be present. Charles Sumner telegraphs that his health prevented him from being present.

The distribution of tickets for admission to Greeley's obsequies was made at the Common Council Chamber this afternoon to the distinguished personages previously determined upon, President Grant's ticket being sent him at the hotel. At about half past 10, the party took carriages and left for the church, according to the programme. Broadway is lined with spectators waiting the funeral procession, and flags are suspended at half mast from nearly all buildings on either side of the whole length of the thoroughfare.

The interior of the Church of the Divine Paternity, where Greeley's obsequies were held, presented a soberly beautiful appearance. Crape was suspended in profusion, and floral offerings were displayed, having appropriate designs. At the rear of the pulpit was a sheaf of wheat from Chappaqua, in the form of a crown, and suspended over head was a pen and and axe A floral wreath at the left of the pulpit bore the letter "H."

Outside the church were throngs of people in respectful waiting. A section of police stood in front of the church as a guard.

The church was opened at about half past 10, although ladies had previously been admitted, and filled the galleries during the hour which elapsed before the arrival of the procession, while strains of music were discoursed by the choir.

Among the first celebrities to arrive were Gov. Hoffman and President Grant. Roscoe Conkling soon after entered, and immediately following were Henry Wilson Minister Washburne, and Secretary Belknap: also Gen. Schurz, Lyman Trumbull and Vice-Presidend Colfax, who took a seat near the President.

The crowd outside extended as far as the eye could reach on either side of 5th Avenue, awaiting the arrival of the procession.

At 11, the funeral procession started from Mr. Sinclair's house, in Forty-fifth street. Many affecting scenes took place there during the morning. Mr. Greeley's daughters were inconsolable in their grief. The corpse was borne by ten men. Next came the chief mourners, then the Tribune Association, and next the Herald Club.

Then followed, in succession, military and civil officers, according to programme

At twenty minutes past 11 the procession entered the church. The solemnity of the scene was most impressive. The stillness was such that it seemed that the people in the church scarcely breathed.

Prominent among those who slowly wended their way up the central aisle were Thurlow Weed, Wm. M. Evarts, Mayor Hall, Postmaster General Cresswell, Gen. Dix, ex-Governor Morgan, General Sheridan, Governor Randolph, of New Jersey, and the committee of the Union League Club.

Rev. Dr. Chapin opened the ceremony by reading appropriate selections from the Scriptures. Miss. Clara Louisa Kellogg next sang, very touchingly, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." After which Henry Ward Beecher delivered the funeral oration. A quartette from the St. Francis Xavers Church then sang, after which Dr. Chapin delivered an address.

The procession then started from Dr. Chapin's church, en route to Greenwood Cemetery.

It is the most imposing funeral procession, both in point of numbers and representative persons and bodies, ever witnessed in this city. The line of the route is down Fifth avenue to Fourteenth street and down Broadway to South Ferry. The route is lined with not fewer than one houndred thousand persons.

A large number of stores and public buildings are draped in mourning.

The procession was headed by Major Hall and the Superintendent of Police on foot.

The carriages were drawn three abreast and extended four squares. President Grant and Vice President Colfax rode in an open carriage, following close to the hearse.

Shortly after 3 o'clock the procession reached South Ferry, after which President Grant and Senator Wilson returned and passed up Broadway to their hotel.

Report of the Committee of the Indiana State Board of Education.

Your Committee respectfully report that they are unable to prescribe definitely any course of study for Ungraded Schools. Their inability arises from the diversity of the conditions necessary to secure uniform. These are:

1. The inequality in the length of school terms.

2 The shortness of the terms generally.

3 The experience and inefficiency of many of the teachers, and

4 The want of thorough, systematic, intelligent supervision of the schools:

First. It is evident that unless there is uniformity in the length of the school terms, there can not be much uniformity in the studies or the rate of progress. The remedy for this is with the people.

Second. The shortness of the school terms generally precludes the idea of securing a sufficient number of matured men and women as teachers. Teaching is a temporary employment rather than a profession, consequently comparatively few, except young, undeveloped and inexperienced persons are engaged in it, and many of these leave the schools as soon as they secure more permanent and remunerative employment. Constant employment is necessary to induce young people to make teaching a profession.—The remedy for this lies with the people.

Third. The want of constant employment prevents, to a considerable extent, a profeshional preparation, and as a consequence many persons are selected to teach who are unable to organize, discipline govern, or restrict a school. Under such circumstances, it is not surprising that the selections of the studies, and the rate of progress, are determined by the children or their parents, and not by the teacher. The remedy for this, is in a more rigid scrutiny of the qualification of the teachers,

Fourth. As long as teachers are elected by the people, they will conform to the wishes of their constituents in all that partains in the management of their schools. It will therefore, be impossible to secure any uniformity in organization, classification, and method of instruction, until the direction of the schools is transfered from the parents to the hands of an intelligent and efficient County Superintendent. The remedy for this evil, lies with the Legislature.

All that your committee feel justified in doing under present circumstances, is to make a few suggestions, which if adopted, will economize the time of the teachers, and increase the efficiency of their schools:

First. There should be but one series of books of any kind in the same school. The diversity in readers, arithmetics, geographies, etc., is detrimental to progress because it consumes the teachers time unnecessarily, and prevents thorough classification, and instruction. The remedy for the diversity of schoolbooks, lies with the Trustee.

Second. Every pupil should be expected to read, write and spell, every day.—These studies are the basis of a good education, and should receive constant attention No one can be too proficient in these branches.

Third. As the Fifth and Sixth Readers of every series, in use contains the choicest and at the same time the most difficult selections of English literature, the time that is usually spent by immature pupils, in attempting to read them, is worse than wasted. The true test if every reading exercise is not the fluency with which the words are repeated, but in the intelligent appreciation of the thoughts of the author. If childred read the Fourth Reader fluently, and understand the sentiments it contains, spell and define its words, they are doing all that can well be done ordinarily in an ungraded school.

Fourth. Little children of ordinary intelligence, six years of age, may be taught to read with considerable fluency, and spell the first thirty pages of any of our First Readers in use, during the first four months of school. Every child should be furnished with a slate, and should be taught to count, make figures, and print the letters of the book, the best teaching is done by the aid of the blackboard. The spelling book should not be used by little childred, as the primer or First Reader is all that is necessary.

Fifth. Spelling should be made an instrumentality for the intelligent study of language. Prefference should be given to the words in common use, such as are found in the readers. Advance pupils should have their knowledge of the reading lesson tested, by requiring them to write an analysis of it. The spelling lesson should be written from dictation. In oral spelling, every word spelled, should have its correct use illustrated, by being put in a sentence.

Sixth. In Arithmetic pupils should be drilled thoroughly to write numbers, to add, subtract, multiply and divide with ease and acuracy before they are permited to proceed to the more complex opporations. It is not unusual to find pupils working in per centage, or the extraction of roots, who can not write simple numbers, or recite the multiplication table with accuracy.

Seventh. Pupil's who have mastered the Second and Third Readers, should commence the systematic study of primary Geography.

Eighth. A text book in Grammar should not be introduced until the pupils are able to read fluently and intelligently in the Fourth Reader.

Ninth. The tendency to put pupils into more advanced studies particularly the higher Arithmetics, should be discouraged A thorough knowledge of the common school arithmetic is preferable to a superficial knowledge of the higher book.

Tenth. Much of the succes of any school depends upon wisdom shown in its classification. The fewer the classes, the more time there will be for thorough instruction by the teacher and practice by the pupils.

Respectfully submitted,

The above Report is published by request of the State State Superintendent, although some portions of it may be liable to objections, it is, perhaps, unnecessary to state them now. It is not intended to advise Trustees to change text book on any one subject. And instead of printing the reading lessons, teachers who prefer, may have them written instead. A copy of this report should be preserved.

Death from Hydrophobia.

A fatal case of hydrophobia occurred in Chicago on Monday, which was curious, on account of their being no outside agency, to give rise to the disease. The victim was Willie Grosvener Stevens, a boy of ten years. a nephew of the Col Grosvenor, who was shot just after the Chicago fire. Mrs. Stephens, the boy's mother is living with her sister, Mrs. Grosvenor On last Friday evening, when Willie went home to supper, he complained of a soreness in his throat, his mother did what she considered best for the child, and before he fell asleep that night his sufferings increased to such an extent that the family became alarmed, and a physician was summoned. Saturday morning Dr. Streeter arrived, and when shown his patient. he at once pronounced it a case of hydrophobia. Then another surgeon was called in to Dr. Streeter's assistance. Every thing possible was done for Willie, but he rapidly grew worse, until finally he was seized at intervals with terrible paroxysms His sufferings now became intense. but he endured them with heroic fortitude. Frequently he made desparate efforts to tear his own flesh with his finger nails and occasionly managed to bite himself. But never a word of complaint fell from his youthful lips. It was with the greatest difficulty that he could swallow his medicine. He desired to feed it to himself but several times he found it impossible to bend his arm sufficient to put a spoon to his mouth. At such times, with the most sublime courage, he would bend his head towards his hand and force himself to swallow the nauseous compound. Rapidly he grew worse, and on Tuesday forenoon he died. His death struggles are pronounced by those who witnessed them, as the most fearful sight they ever witnessed. The cause leading to Willie's sickness is not known. It was related however of Willie some time ago, that he assisted in the burial of a neighbor's dog, which had been killed by an unknown person, The doctors who attended him in his last illness. are of the opinion that Willie might have accidently touched the carcas of the dead canine with a hand or a finger, the skin of which was broken, and thus became inoculated, with the poison. The doctors also hold to the opinion that the boy may have been bitten at any time in his life, and then finally become a victim of hydrophobia.

Thrice the age of a horse is the age of a man.

A Study.

BY ALICE MARLAND WELLINGTON.

I think, indeed, 'twas only this that made
Her seem peculiar: namely, she had no
Peculiarity. The world to-day,
Expects us to be odd; to wear our hair
Extremely long or else extremely short;
To have decided views on some one point,
Or else unsettled views on all. But she
Was living simply what she wished to live—
A lovely life of rounded womanhood,
With no sharp salient points for eye or ear
To seize and pass quick judgment on. She was Not quite content to let the golden days
Slip from her fingers like the well worn beads
Of some long rosary, told o'er and o'er
Each night with dull, mechanical routine.
But yet she had no "central purpose," no
Absorbing aim to which all else must yield;
And so the weary sweetness of her life,
Its exquisite simplicity and calm,
Musical in its silence, struck the ear
More sharply than a discord would have done.
Just as at sea, we grow accustomed to
The jar and clang of harsh machinery,
And sleep profoundly in our narrow berths
Amid the turmoil; but if suddenly
The noisy wheel is silent, and the deep
Low murmur of the moonlit sea is all
That stirs the air, we waken with a start,
And ask in terror what has happened; then
Sink back again and smile to think, indeed,
That silence should have wakened us!
Alas!
The world has grown so feverishly hot,
With restless aims and small ambitions, that
A life which has the cold and temperate flow
Of healthful purpose in its veins will seem Peculiar! —Galaxy.

FIGHT OF A MAN WITH A RAILROAD.

BY JOHN A. COLEMAN.

The road has no personal animosity against you, Mr. Coleman, but you represent the public; and the road is determined to make it so terrible for the public to fight it, right or wrong, that they will stop it. We are not going to be attacked in this way.—Railroad Official.

Unfortunately for the great army of those who go up and down the land upon railroads, the public has been so busy in this new country that it has unwittingly permitted the railroad men to steal away its liberties. The corporations promise to construct and operate roads for the convenience of the public. This promise is broken at the start. The public convenience is not consulted. The public is informed that the fare shall be just what the road chooses to exact; the equivalent for the fare shall be taken by the passenger in such manner and at such times as pleases not him but the railroad; the voucher for the money it has received—the ticket—shall be "good for this day only," "good for this trip and train only," "good for six days after date," etc. That is, the road will keep the money and render nothing in return except upon its own conditions. The roads also say they will redress their own grievances. They deem it less trouble, or it is more to their taste, to punish offenders against their rules upon the spot than to seek the remedy prescribed for private individuals in like circumstances. Accordingly the comfort and tranquillity of peaceful passengers are rudely broken in upon and their lives endangered by a brutal assault upon an offender in a car. Pistols are sometimes drawn in a scuffle, and innocent people are as liable to be shot as the combatants; ladies in delicate health may be put in sudden peril through fright; but the barbarism of the railroad must be carried out, and none but juries seem to recognize the impropriety of the proceedings in a court of law.

About four years ago I purchased a ticket from Providence to New York, via Hartford and New Haven. At New Haven my business detained me until too late in the evening to resume my journey by rail. I therefore took the eleven o'clock boat in order to pass a comfortable night and to be able to meet my engagements the next day. That left the railway coupon ticket from New Haven to New York on my hands. I afterwards had no opportunity to use the ticket in the direction in which it was marked, always happening thereafter to travel with through tickets from Boston to New York. In returning to Boston from New York, June 11, 1868, I applied at the office of the New York and New Haven railroad in Twenty-seventh street, New York, for a ticket to Boston via Springfield. The ticket master refused to sell me one unless I would wait three hours for the train, which left at three o'clock p. m., going through to Boston. He said he would sell me a local ticket to Springfield, and I could buy another from there to Boston. This would cost more than $7 to Boston instead of $6, the regular through fare, which of course I did not want to pay. I told him expressly that I wished to stop over at a way station one train to do some telegraphing, but without avail; he would not sell the ticket. As I could not wait three hours, I thought it would be a good time to use up my old coupon, as I was accustomed to do upon other roads under similar circumstances. Accordingly I presented the coupon to the guard stationed at the entrance to the cars. He rudely and imperiously refused me admittance, stating that the ticket was "good for nothing." Some warm words passed between us, and he finally called the conductor, who stood near. The conductor was, if possible, more imperious than the guard. He said the ticket was "good for nothing," and peremptorily ordered me not to go on board the cars. I told him I thought the ticket was good, and that I was accustomed to use coupons in that way upon all other roads over which I traveled. He replied that "it was no such thing; he traveled more than I did and knew all about it;" and concluded by saying that if I "attempted to get upon the cars" he "would put me off." Severe remarks were made by several gentlemen standing near to the conductor during this time to the effect that this was another manifestation of the general spirit of insolence and meanness towards passengers for which that road was noted. I then purchased a ticket to Providence via New Haven and Hartford, and got on board the train. I felt irritated at the treatment I had received, and having a constitutional objection to being brow-beaten, I determined to ascertain why the practice with regard to tickets on this road was so unlike that upon other roads. Having had time to recover my equanimity somewhat after the cars had started, and supposing the conductor might be still angry and unreasonable, I determined to put the case to him, as one gentleman would to another, and to exercise self-control, that my manner should be quiet and give him no cause for offense. Accordingly, as he approached me in taking up his tickets I said, "Mr. Conductor, there is no use for you and me to quarrel about this ticket. This is a plain business matter, an affair of dollars and cents only. The case stands like this: I am traveling nearly all the time; and being frequently compelled to diverge from the route that I intended to take in starting I am left with unused coupons. These coupons all cost me money; and by the end of the year they would accumulate to such an extent that they would represent too large a sum for me to lose." The conductor replied, "That coupon is good from New Haven to New York, but it is not good from New York to New Haven. My directors ordered me three years ago not to take such tickets, and I shall not do it." I then said, "My position is this: I have paid this road a certain amount of money for a certain amount of service, whether my face is turned east or west. You say this ticket is good from New Haven to New York, which is seventy-four miles; I think it is good from New York to New Haven, which is also seventy-four miles; and I cannot understand the distinction which you make." A gentleman who sat before me remarked at this moment, "If there is any meanness which has ever been discovered upon a railroad, it is sure to be found upon this one, for it is the meanest railroad ever laid out of doors." I replied, "If this is so I hope they will make an exception in my case, as all I require are the common courtesies of the road and an equivalent for my money." The conductor said, "I see you are all linked together to make me trouble." And he went along. The gentleman who had spoken to me requested to see my coupon, and remarked that he had never heard the question raised before, and certainly had never heard the case put in that way. He further remarked that "whether it was law or not, it was common sense." A part of the Board of Trade delegation of Boston was in the car, returning from the Philadelphia Convention. Several of these gentlemen, who had become interested in the discussion, requested to see the coupon, and they took the same view of the matter that I did. As we were approaching Stamford the conductor again came to me and said in a very abrupt manner, "Well, sir, how shall we settle this matter?" I said, "Just as before; there is the ticket, and I wish to go to New Haven; the circumstances have not altered in the least." I had determined to take the matter quietly. The conductor saw that it was useless to attempt to frighten me by his imperious manner, and he then began to remonstrate, saying, "You have no business to make me disobey my directors and make me lose my place upon the road; I have to get my living in this way, and it is mean for you to do so." This was a new aspect of the case, and I replied, "That is the only embarrassing question which has arisen in this discussion. I have no quarrel with you, and I would not do you a personal injury upon any consideration; but you and I both have traveled long enough to know that this matter is wholly within your discretion. You can take this coupon and turn it in at New York, where you turn in your other tickets, and no one will know whether it is taken going east or going west, and no one will care." My meaning was that, as no injury was done, no injury could be known. He took the remark the other way, and said in a sneering tone, evidently for the benefit of the other passengers, "You might just as well ask me to steal ten dollars from the Company, because they would not know it." I replied, "Theoretically, that may be true, but practically it is nonsense. You very well know that I have no intention to defraud this road, but in order to relieve you of all embarrassment about your position I will make you a proposition. Here is my address, and these gentlemen know that I am responsible. You take the ticket and turn it in, and if you are even reprimanded for it by your directors write to me and I will send you the money for the ticket, upon your promise as a gentleman that you will send the ticket to me again, for I shall want the ticket. The passengers said, "That is fair and would avoid all trouble." The conductor said, "It is very fair, but I shan't do it, that's all; want another ticket out of you, sir." I said, "I shall not give you one." He said, "Then I shall request you to get off this train at Stamford." I replied, "I shall just as politely decline to do so." He said, "Then I will put you off." I replied in general terms and with some natural heat that I did not believe he was able to do it. He said, "I guess I can put you off if I get help enough." I told him that was undoubtedly true, but warned him that I would pursue the matter further if he brought his roughs into the car and laid hands upon me. At this moment the elderly gentleman who sat in front of me rose and said, "Mr. Conductor, I am a 'railroad man,' and in my judgment this gentleman's position is correct. If he brings it to an issue I think he will beat you; but if you think he is not correct, but trying to evade his fare, the proper way is to telegraph to New Haven and have a policeman come aboard and quietly arrest him; that is business-like; but don't take the law into your own hands and throw him off the train, for that is not done now-a-days upon any respectable railroad." I said, "Certainly, I will submit to a policeman, but I will not be thrown off by him." The conductor sneeringly, replied "We don't do business in that style on this road." I said, "I have been aware of that for ten years past; and I propose to see if you cannot be compelled to do business in that style upon this road." He said we were all against him, and he would leave it to the Superintendent. I paid no further atention to the conductor, but commenced reading. Very soon some one shouted, "They are coming for you." The conductor came in at the head of five or six rough brakemen and baggage-men, and said, pointing to me, "This is the man; pull him out and put him on the platform. They seized my coat and tried to roll me out of the seat. My coat tore, and they did not move me. This seemed to enrage them, and they sprang upon me like so many tigers. Two of them seized me by the legs, and, as many as could, got back of my seat and seized me by the shoulders and commenced violently wrenching me from the seat. I instinctively grasped the arms of the seat, and they took the cushion and frame up with me. When they got me into the aisle, and had me completely at their mercy, three heavy blows with the clenched fist were struck upon the back of my head. Every individual in the car jumped to his feet the instant the blows were struck. The ladies screamed, and one of the gentlemen rushed to stop the conductor and his roughs from striking me. Fearing for my life, I struck one of the ruffians under the chin, and planted a blow square in the face of another. We had a hard struggle until they overpowered me. They carried me horizontally until they reached the car door, when they dropped my feet a little to pass through singly. I struck another away from me, and he went over between the cars. They fiercely grasped me again and threw me broadside from the platform of the car down upon the platform of the depot. I struck heavily on my side, my whole length. In this struggle they tore the flesh from my arms and legs, and they ruptured me for life. The passengers swarmed out of the cars, and gave me their addresses. The Superintendent came up, and I told him I would give him a dose of common law, and see if I could not teach him something. He said he would give me all the law I wanted, if I wished to test the case. I then ran and jumped on the train when it was in motion. The Superintendent, his son, and another man, ran after and seized me around the body, stripped me off the car, and held me by main strength until the train was clear of the depot. As soon as they released me, I drew my through ticket from my pocket, and asked them why they held me. The Superintendent started as though I had struck him, and said, "Why did you not show that ticket before, sir?" I said, "Because it is not customary to show tickets in getting on at way stations, and you did not give me a chance." He said, "If you had been a gentleman, you would have shown that ticket." I replied, "I do not ask your opinion as to who is a gentleman, for you are no judge." He said, "You tried to steal your ride to New Haven and sell your ticket; and now we will give you all the law you want; and we'll show you that the laws in Connecticut are different from where you came from." I took that for granted, and returned to New York. When I reached Boston again I attached the New York and Boston express train, partly owned by the New Haven road, in the Boston and Albany depot, and brought suit against them in the Superior Court of Massachusetts for $10,000 damages. The first trial of the case occurred in April, 1869. The judge charged directly against passengers upon every point. He ruled that the ticket was a contract; that the road had a right to make any rule it pleased for its own government, and if a passenger broke a rule he was a trespasser, and being a trespasser the road had the same right to eject him from its cars that one of the jurymen had to eject a man from his private house if he did not want him there. The only question for the jury to consider was whether an excess of violence had been used by the road in the maintenance of a right. The jury, after being out only one hour, awarded me $3,300 damages. The judge, at the request of the road, after several weeks' delay, set the verdict aside on the exclusive ground that the amount was excessive. The second trial occurred in the same court in January, 1870, and resulted in a disagreement of the jury. They stood eleven to one for me, and it was afterward understood that the man who disagreed had been connected in some capacity with the road. The third trial took place in May, 1870, and resulted in an award of $3,450 damages. Again the road demanded a new trial, which the judge refused to grant. The road then appealed to the Supreme Court upon the points of law. The judge in charging the jury had happened to say that if the resistance of the plaintiff to ejectment from the car consisted in simply refusing to walk out when he was told to go by the conductor, of course blows on the head, such as had been testified to, were unnecessary, and if the jury were satisfied that such blows had been given a verdict should be rendered accordingly. This bit of common sense gave a new opportunity for the exhibition of that wonderful subtlety called "law." The Supreme Court, after the usual tedious delay of several months, in which plaintiff and witnesses had abundant time to die, gave the New York and New Haven Railway Corporation another opportunity to fulfill their threat of making it "terrible for the public to fight it, right or wrong." It decreed that the judge had no right to give an opinion as above, but should have left the question for the jury. Accordingly a new trial was granted, which took place in June, 1871. Up to this time three people connected with the suit had died, and one witness for the plaintiff had moved to Kansas, while young girls who were on the train when the outrage was committed had passed from girlhood through long courtships, and were already matrons. However, with the impetuosity of a youthful temperament, and the knowledge of a just cause, I made another onslaught upon the corporation after only fourteen months' delay since the last trial, and obtained a verdict of $3,500 damages, after one hour's deliberation by the jury. For the fifth time the road demanded another trial, which being refused by the judge they again appealed from his ruling to the Supreme Court. They asked the judge to charge the jury that if the plaintiff had a tendency to hernia, or any physical disability that was liable to be increased by violence, the plaintiff ought to have so informed the employes of the road, and failing in that he, and not the road, was responsible for the consequences. According to the railroad theory, therefore, if a gentleman is attacked by a scoundrel, unless the victim gives a complete diagnosis of his condition to the ruffian he, and not the villian who struck him, is responsible for consequences when his skull is broken. To obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts upon this important point has taken twelve months more; but I am happy to be able to state that at last one point is established by the Massachusetts courts in favor of the rights of railroad passengers, namely, that it is not necessary for a man to inform a ruffianly aggressor what his grandmothar died of, nor to describe his hereditary symptoms, even though it is the employe of a railsoad corporation who comes to strike him.

The case was one of simple brutal assault in a public railroad car. The witnesses for the plaintiff were well-known merchants of Boston, who were members of the Board of Trade, railroad directors, and steamboat men, as well as others, including ladies. Their testimony was clear and consistent throughout every trial. Pitted against their testimony was that of the brakemen, the baggage-men, and the conductor, every one of whom was in the employment of the road and a party to the assault. Not a passenger who saw the outrage committed in the car was brought forward by the road. The testimony of the employees was so absurd upon the first trial, that the Court was frequently interrupted by laughter. No testimony of theirs upon any after trial has been like that of the first, but was manufactured to suit the theory of the railroad. It has been privately admitted by the road that "the facts were with me, but the law," meaning, I suppose, the judge's rulings, "was with them." So simple a case would have been disposed of at a single hearing in a minor court, had it occurred between two poor men. But I have been compelled to pass through four weary trials, lasting four years, gaining quick verdicts from juries, and being defeated only by the first judge, who granted a new trial to this railroad corporation, because thirty-three hundred dollars were excessive damages for the beating and rupturing of a man by their servant. Being the Chief Justice, his rulings, of course, were taken as the law governing the case by the associate judges who presided at the subsequent trials, and from whom I received great courtesy and fairness.

But the contest is finished after the exhaustion of every legal device, and there is something to be said about it in the interest of the public. I have been repeatedly told by parties interested in the road that the company had too much money to be beaten by me, and they would spend enough to defeat me. The paragraph at the head of this article is quoted from a statement made to me by an influential person connected with the corporation. These threats were of no consequence as applied to me, for their object was intimidation. They did not succeed. The corporation is beaten. I have received the money for damages which they said they never would pay, and my personal contest is ended. But these threats were not directed against myself alone, but against the public. This expensive suit was prolonged to prove that "right or wrong they would make it so terrible for the public to fight the road that they would stop it." If a limb is crushed by the negligence of the railroad men, fight instead of pay the victim is their theory of dealing with the public; and they will remove all opposition by the power of wealth, influence with courts, and sheer terrorism. "They may make any rules they please" for the public, and may carry out their arbitrary designs against the people in spite of decency or common sense.

The only advantage to be derived from this story is to open the question whether the people or the corporations are the rulers of this country. Are the railroads and the courts the masters or the servants of the people who pay for both? Are we quietly to allow railroad corporations to go on forever taking possession of legislatures and establishing the law for our courts? Are we to allow only the extreme railroad view of a case to be the law of our courts? Or are there two sides to a railroad question as well as to others? If so, where shall we go that both sides may be fully considered? Law is said to be common sense. Does it fairly represent the common sense of the intelligent people of Massachusetts, that a private individual shall be kept in her courts for four years at enormous expense in a case of simple assault, merely because the assailant was a rich railroad corporation.—Atlantic Monthly.

Second Comptroller's Report.

The following are the most important points of the annual report of Hon. J. M. Brodhead, Second Comptroller of the Treasury, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872:

The total accounts of expenditure of the War and Navy Departments, and the Indian and Pension Office, as settled and adjusted at the Treasury Department, during the above period, amounts to $37,945,123. This sum embraces the accounts of disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments, and Indian and Pension Offices, in part for war expenditures of the rebellion, as well as those incurred since the war; claims for bounty and prize money; claims of States for war expenses, and of private persons for property used, impressed, or left in the military service of the United States. The above accounts of expenditures are, with the vouchers, examined by the Second, Third, or Fourth Auditors of the Treasury, who have, by law, primary jurisdiction in their settlement. When examined by the Auditors and the balances certified, all of these accounts, with vouchers and certificates, are reported by them to the Second Comptroller for his decision. This office causes a revision of each settlement thus reported, to be made and a certified balance sent to the Secretary of the Department in which the expenditure has been incurred. During the fiscal year the amounts of settlements thus far acted on and adjusted are as follows: From Second Auditor, $175,299,896; Third Auditor, $170,955,764; Fourth Auditor, $23,689,462. The above accounts have been duly entered, revised, and the balances found thereon certified to the Secretary of the Department in which the expenditure has been incurred, viz.: Those from the Second and Third Auditors to the Secretary of War, excepting the accounts of the Indian Agents, which are certified to the Secretary of the Interior, and those from the Fourth Auditor to the Secretary of the Navy, which are classified thus: From the Second Auditor, embracing the accounts of disbursing officers of the War Department for collecting, organizing, and drilling volunteers, $751,448; Paymasters' accounts for the pay of officers and the pay and rations of soldiers of the army, $132,779,140; special and referred accounts, $10,051,429; accounts of army recruiting officers for clothing, equipments, and bounty to recruits, etc., $262,287; ordnance, embracing the accounts of disbursing officers of the Ordnance Department for arsenals, armories, armaments for fortifications, arming militia, etc., $4,742,448; Indian Department, accounts of Indian Agents, including the pay of Indian annuities, presents to Indians, expenses of holding treaties, pay of interpreters, pay of Indian Agents, and the settlement of personal claims for miscellaneous service of agents and others in connection with Indian affairs, $24,042,904; medical and hospital aid accounts, including the purchase of medicines, drugs, surgical instruments, hospital stores, the claims of private physicians for services, and surgeons employed under contract, $429,816; expenses of the War Department, including expenses for military contracts, secret service, etc., $235,729; Freedmen's Bureau, pay and bounty, $2,143,284; Soldiers' Home, $432,694; National Volunteer Asylum, $417,713. Total, $176,299,896.

Total, $170,955,764.

From the Fourth Auditor, Marine Corps; first, Quartermasters of the Marine Corps, embracing accounts for the expenses of officers' quarters, fuel, forage for horses, attendance on courts-martial and courts of inquiry, transportation of officers, and marines' supplies of provisions, clothing, medical stores and military stores, for baraacks, and incidental supplies for marines on shore; second, accounts of Paymasters of the Marine Corps for the pay of the officers and the pay and rations of the marines, $609,594.

Paymasters of the navy, accounts for the pay and rations of officers and crew, of the ship supplies, of provisions, of clothing, and repairs of vessels on foreign stations, $4,494,161; Paymasters at navy yards, accounts for the pay of officers on duty at navy yards, or on leave of absence, and the pay of mechanics and laborers on the various works, $10,040,264; Paymasters acting as navy agents, accounts for their advances to Paymasters, purchases of timber, provisions, clothing, and naval stores, $7,203,866.

Navy Pension Agents' accounts for the pay of pensions of officers and seamen, etc., of the navy, and officers and privates of the Marine Corps, $341,572. Total, $23,689,462.

Naval prize lists, claims revised during the year, soldiers' pay and bounty, $1,202,754; sailors' pay and bounty, $482,020; prize money, $110,003; Quartermasters' stores under the act of July 4, 1864; property lost, or destroyed, or captured, etc., under the act of March 3, 1849; rent of buildings and land for the use of the armory, and other military claims against the War Department, $1,605,246.

Oregon and Washington Territory war claims, $12,157; claims of States for enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting their troops in defense of the United States, $239,643; subsistence, $82,228. Total, $3,904,282.

These settlements have been effected and requisitions for the same, except for soldiers' and sailors' pay and bounty, have been issued by War, Treasury, and Interior Departments to the number of 8,454.

With the Second Comptroller are filed the contracts of the Quartermaster's Department, the Commissary of Subsistence, the Navy Deprrtment, the Engineer Department, the Indian Department, the Adjutant General's Department, the Freedman's Bureau, Ordnance Department, Surgeon General, charter parties, contracts and leases. Total during the year, 1,130; also, the official bonds of disbursing officers of the War and Navy Departments, and the Indian Department, number 68.

The pensions have slightly decreased from the preceding year, the decrease being $440,224. Total for the last fiscal year, $34,768,120.

The bounty to soldiers has decreased from $2,522,690 in 1871, to $1,202,754 in 1872.

"UNLESS you give me aid," said a beggar to a benevolent lady, "I am afraid I shall have to resort to something which I should greatly dislike to do." The lady handed him a dollar, and compassionately asked: "What is it, poor man, that I have saved you from?" "Work," was the mournful answer.

The Mitrailleuse.

It is not the case that the French have determined to abandon the mitrailleuse. The idea was entertained, but has been abandoned, as it is believed they were injudiciously handled during the war. It has been since proved by experiments that they can be employed to produce disastrous effects. The President of the Republic has just signed a decree for the establishment of works for the construction of artillery at Tarbes, where a number of new mitrailleuses are to be made on a slightly modified and improved plan. Fresh experiments, with an entire battery, and according to a wholly new programme, are to be carried out immediately at Tarbes.

Smoke and Frost.

The practice of building smoke fires in orchards as preventive of injury from frost is an old one, but recently we note that a congress of fruit growers in France have tested the value of a composition, principally of tar, which, burned in iron vessels, gave thick clouds of smoke that hovered over the land for miles around them.

BRYANT, the poet, passes most of his time out of doors, wandering about the hills which surround his lovely residence at Roslyn, Long Island, and feasting his eyes with the beautiful scenery which encompasses him on every side. Recently he stopped in a store at the steamboat landing, for the purpose of being weighed, and turning the scale close in the neighborhood of 130 pounds, he expressed himself well contented.

IT has been generally supposed that railway traveling in Great Britain is safer than in other countries, and especially in the United States. A CONTRACT has lately been signed between the directors of the St. Gothard railway, Switzerland, and M. LeFavre, of Geneva, for the boring of a new railway tunnel through the Alps, which promises to surpass anything of the kind yet attempted. The length of the tunnel will be a little more than nine miles. Cost $10,000,000. The work is to be finished within eight years; and if sooner finished the contractor is to receive $1,000 a day for each day in advance of the contract time. If the completion of the work is from any reason delayed beyond the contract time, $1,000 a day are to be forfeited.

LADY WRIXON BEECHER (Miss O'Neil), who died in England, the other day, was the actress whom Byron would not see for fear of disenchantment with Mrs. Siddons. As her career upon the stage was one of unparalleled brilliancy, so was the occasion of her first success one of brilliant accident. Wholly unknown to the stage, she stepped in to fill the role of a great metropolitan actress, who had disappointed the manager of a provincial theater. The next morning she found herself famous, and for five years reigned on the English stage without a rival she need fear.

Curious Surgical Operation.

Dr. Lane, of this city, is credited with the successful performance of one of the most remarkable surgical operations ever recorded in the annals of the profession. In December, in 1869, Luther Corey, head sawyer at Treat's mill, Santa Cruz county, had his arm broken in two places above the elbow. One of the fractures knitted and healed, the other, owing to a splint of the bone being between the ends of the fracture, did not, and after suffering great pain for some time, Mr. Corey came to San Francisco, and placed himself under the care of skillful surgeons. They opened the flesh on his arm, and cut the callous part from off the end of the bones, pressing the ends together, and binding the arm in splints, in which condition it remained for one year and a half, but stil the bones did not knit, and the muscles of the arm became shriveled up and useless. Some eight months ago Mr. Corey opened the arm, sprung out the end of the bones, and cutting off the callous parts, beveled the ends of the bones, so that each would lap a little over the other. He then riveted them together with silver wire, and set the arm in a case. The bone then knitted and healed, leaving the arm two inches shorter. Mr. Corey has been at work for the last two months, in his old position, and is rejoicing in having a sound arm to support his family with. He had spent about $400 with other surgeons, and lost two and a half year's time. When he asked Dr. Lane for his bill, the Doctor replied: "When you can spare the money, and the arm is worth anything to you, you can pay men what you think the operation is worth." He again visited the city last week, for the purpose of having the wires which had bound the fractured bone extracted from his arm.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Peculiar Predicament of a Printer.

John Shepherd was found by Mr. Bybee and H. H. G. Baxter, on last Monday, suspended by his neck, which had become fastened between two of the slats of the picket fence in front of the cemetery. When taken down he had no pulse, but by prompt medical aid he was at last revived, and is, we understand, recovering. John is a printer by trade, and is much like many others of that ancient and honorable vocation in one particular. It is supposed that while leaning over the fence, pensively contemplating this last quiet resting place of frail humanity, and reading unto himself a homily from the charnel city, he weakened under its silent eloquence, and his neck being chucked into the wedge-shaped space,

The more he tried to pull it loose,
The more it stuck the faster.

Deep Wells in Chicago.

Artesian wells are multiplying in Chicago, twenty-one of them having already been bored, and in no instance has a failure to obtain a plentiful supply occurred. The well at Kenwood, just south of Chicago, 1,255 feet deep and five and a half inches in diameter at the bottom, yields 650 gallons per minute. It costs about $6,000. Another well in the business center of Chicago is 1,600 feet deep, yields 525 gallons per minute, and cost $7,000. The usual depth of the wells is from 1,200 to 1,300 feet, and the average cost is $6,000 for a five and a half inch well 1,200 feet deep, and $6,000 for a four and a half inch bore to the same depth.

The Congressional Printing Office.

The report of the Congressional Printer contains much interesting matter in regard to the Government. The entire cost of the office for the year was $1,802,343, which is largely in excess of any previous year for the past ten, except the year 1865, which was $2,327,069. Of all executive and miscellaneous documents and reports there are printed the usual number, 1,625 copies for the Senate and 1,650 for the House, and also 825 copies of bills and resolutions for the Senate and House each. The aggregate cost of the paper used in the office for the year was $698,989. The amount paid for lithographing and engraving for Congressional documents was $42,257, and the cost of maps for the Supreme Court was $1,331. The public binding alone cost $541,663. As previously stated, the orders made by Congress and executed in the Government office for Congressional printing and binding, during the past year, ending Sept. 30, amount to $893,189.97. The year preceding was $779,819 for the same class of work. This shows an increase during the last year over its predecessor within a fraction of 25 per cent. The office has completed during the past year 119,284 pages of documentary composition, and 7,869, volumes of that class of work, many of which exceed 1,000 pages each, on the subject of Patent Office reports, which, with their costly engravings, were so expensive a publication and so lightly regarded by the public. The printing office building, owing to the immense increase of work, is found to be too small for the purpose, notwithstanding that a wing costing $40,000 was finished a year ago. Mr. Clapp asks for an appropriation to erect another wing, which, he says, is urgently demanded. The printing for the House of Representatives amounted to $205,909; and for the Senate, $125,645. The following shows the cost of printing for each department: State Department, $24,106; Treasury Department, $322,861; Interior Department, $225,798; War Department, 143,406; Navy Department, $88,001; Judiciary Department, $42,742; Postoffice Department' $169,366; Department of Agriculture, $21,790; office of Congressional Printer, $1,503; total, $1,036,307. Charging the Government for the materials, the machinery, the labor, and everything used in the prosecution of the business, it appears that the earnings of the office for the year were $2,267,946, while the expenses of the office were $2,134,771. There are over 1,000 employes, male and female.

A Temperance Railroad.

The officers of the new European and North American railroad, connecting Boston and Halifax, have sent to all the employes of the road a form of pledge, for them to sign, whereby they agree to abstain from using intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, and the use of profane or ungentlemanly language. Accompanying the blank pledge is a circular informing the employes that this step is taken in consequence of frequent complaints at the office, and requesting those declining to sign to give notice of their intentions, that their places may be filled by others.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION.—Who of our readers has not suffered from the ills and varied forms of this hydra-headed tormentor, which originates from loss of tone in the stomach, or more particularly in its muscular or fibrous coating, which becomes pale and feeble. It would require pages to describe all the symptoms and various sympathetic affections of indigestion, and the torture to which the dyspeptic is subjected, but which may be compressed into one brief comprehensive sentence: You feel sick, depressed, and unfit for the duties of life. Nevertheless, there is nothing more certain than that dyspepsia in all its phases can be thoroughly eradicated.

There is but one way to cure indigestion, viz.: by toning and strengthening the stomach and general system, gently relaxing the bowels if constipated, and regulating the liver if disordered. A remedy for this human peace-destryoer is CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, which have the rare merit of containing no alcohol, the virtues of the medicinal California Plants, which constitute their healing and curing agencies, being extracted by a new chemical process. The popular verdict is that they are the most perfect article for the stomach, and are to be taken as circumstances may require, with the fullest confidence, and that by their means can the return of this distressing malady be prevented. We are satisfied this remedy is of great value.

OFFICERS of the "Old Guard" are marrying at a fearful rate that threatens to destroy the old system of "messes" in camp and barrack. Under the Empire the officers of the Guard were obliged to remain single; if they married they were speedily transferred to the line. But since Napoleon's downfall, the Guard which for Mars and Cupid would "die but not surrender," no longer exists. The officers are required to ask permission for the ceremony, but this is merely a form. All that the authorities insist upon is that the bride should possess 26,000 francs ($5,000) standing in her name in the French funds. The purpose of this requirement is to insure that the widows of military men shall have something to live upon at the death of their husbands and prevent improvident marriages in the army.

BAERLE & Co., of Worms, recommend the use of soluble glass in washing wool. The operation is conducted as follows: Forty parts of water are mixed with one of soluble glass at a temperature of 50 to 70 deg. Cent. The The wool is then plunged into the mixture and stirred about for a few minutes; it is then rinsed in tepid water and is found to be clean, white and devoid of color. After the operation the wool is said to be perfectly soft, and not to have lost any of the properties that fit it for the purposes to which it is applied.

THE number of booksellers in France and her dependencies is returned at 5,674, that of printing offices at 1,339, and that of lithograph establishments at 1,624. About one-fifth of the first-class, one-eighth of the second, and one-fourth of the third are at Paris. There are 2,303 periodicals, of which 843 are in Paris.

MILLIONS OF PAIRS of shoes, tipped with metal, are sold every year. For children's shoes they are absolutely indispensable, unless one can afford the waste of buying two pairs, when only one would be needed: and few can safely submit to such a constant leak. Cents invested in the purchase of metal-tipped shoes save many a hard-earned dollar.—American Workman.

CABLE SCREW WIRE BOOTS AND SHOES.—A word of explanation may not be out of place. The cable wire acts as a screw, is strong and firm, and at the same time is elastic and comfortable. It is much preferable to the old method of pegging, and quite as soft and elastic as sewed work, but much stronger and less liable to rip, and much less expensive. We have tried the cable screw shoe, which has proved all that is claimed for it. The increase in this new method of manufacturing boots and shoes is very rapid, and promises to supersede the wood peg and waxed thread.—The Standard, Chicago.

RURAL BEAUTIES AND CITY BELLES.—Country girls are not a whit behind their metropolitan sisters in the natural elements of loveliness, but it must be conceded that the city belles best understand the art of preserving and heightening their personal beauty. The most perfect features lose half their attraction unless the complexion is properly cared for, and if the pretty girls of the rural districts wish to compete with the "Fairstars" of the fashionable world in refined attractions, they must pay due attention to this important point. They ought to know, for the fact is notorious, that HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM imparts to the skin a delicate pearly appearance unproducible by any other preparation under the sun. No matter how the cuticle may have been roughened by exposure or discolored by the sun, the Balm will render it soft and pliable, and remove every blemish.—[Com.

Living Advertisements.

A medicine that has done more than all the prescriptions of the pharmacopoeia to protect the human system against the bodily ills superinduced by unhealthy surroundings is certainly worthy of universal confidence. It is mainly on account of its extraordinary preventive properties that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is so exceedingly popular in localities subject to the visitation of miasmatic fevers and other diseases produced by empoisoned air. A family that has escaped sickness during a sickly season in consequence of using the Bitters as a safeguard is a living advertisement of the virtues of the preparation. The whole neighborhood realise the fact. "I couldn't have believed it," says one. "I scarcely credited the advertisements; but one must believe what one sees,' says another. "It is the very thing we need in this unwholesome section of country," remarks a third. And the result is that the instinct of self-defense, the first law of nature, induces three-fourths of that community to obtain a supply of the great vegetable antidote before the next sickly season sets in. In winter, when the system requires extra vigor and elasticity to enable it to baffle the effects of damp and cold, the Bitters will be found particularly serviceable. Rheumatism will not be apt to fasten upon muscles and nerves that have been braced up by this excellent invigorant and nervine; nor will the severities of the season, which have such a disastrous effect on the pulmonary organs of the feeble and delicate, be likely to exercise the same untoward influence in cases where the stomach and the external surface of the body (which always sympathizes with the digestive organs) have been toned and stimulated by a course of the restorative. The fits of indigestion and irregularities of the bowels which proceed from sudden changes of weather may always be averted by a timely use of the Bitters.

VEGETINE is now acknowledged by our best physicians to be the only sure and safe remedy for all diseases arising from impure blood, such as scrofula and scrofulous humors.

A CHALLENGE

Is extended to the world to place before the public a better cough or lung remedy than ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

VERILY IT HATH NO EQUAL.

CONSUMPTIVES, READ!

Would you cure that distressing cough, and bring back that healthy vigor till lately planted in your cheek? If you would, do not delay; for, ere you are aware, it will be too late.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM

Is your hope. It has been tried by thousands such as you, who have been cured; many, in their gratitude, have lent their names to us, that suffering humanity can read their evidence and believe. Don't experiment with new and untried mixtures—you cannot afford it—but try at once this invaluable article. It is warranted to break up the most troublesome cough in a few hours, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction in all cases of lung and throat difficulties.

UNSOLICITED EVIDENCE OF ITS MERITS.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

WHAT WELL-KNOWN DRUGGISTS SAY ABOUT ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

SPRINGFIELD, Tenn., Sept. 11, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam at once. We have not a bottle left in our store. It has more reputation than any cough medicine we have ever sold, and we have been in the drug business twenty seven years; we mean just what we say about the Balsam.

Very truly yours,
HURT & TANNER.

AGAIN READ THE EVIDENCE from a Druggist who was cured by use of the Balsam, and now sells it largely:

L. C. Cottrell, Druggist at Marine City, Michigan, writes, Sept. 12, 1872: "I am out of Allen's Lung Balsam; send me half a gross as soon as you can; I would rather be out of any other medicine in my store. The Lung Balsam never fails to do good for those afflicted with a cough."

It is harmless to the most delicate child.
It contains no opium in any form.
It is sold by Medicine-dealers generally.

CAUTION.

Be not deceived. Call for ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, and take no other.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion. Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION A WEEKLY PAPER FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE FAMILY

THE COMPANION aims to be a favorite in every family—looked for eagerly by the young folks, and read with interest by the older. Its purpose is to interest while it amuses; to be judicious, practical, sensible; and to have really permanent worth, while it attracts for an hour.

It is handsomely illustrated, and has for contributors some of the most attractive writers in the country. Among these are

Prof. James De Mille,
Louisa M. Alcott,
Grace Greenwood,
Rebecca H. Davis,
C. W. Flanders,
S. S. Robbins.
Louise C. Moulton,
"Sophie May,"
C. A. Stephens,
Ruth Chesterfield,
M. A. Denison,
Prof. H. Lincoln.

Its reading is adapted to the old and young, is very varied in its character, sprightly and entertaining. It gives

Stories of Adventure,
Letters of Travel,
Editorials upon Current Topics,
Historical Articles,
Biographical Sketches,
Religious Articles,
Stories of Home and School Life,
Tales, Poetry,
Selections for Declamation,

NATURE'S REMEDY.
VEGETINE
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER

VEGETINE is made exclusively from the juices of carefully selected barks, roots and herbs, and so strongly concentrated that it will effectually eradicate from the system every taint of Scrofula, Scrofulous Humor, Tumors, Cancer, Cancerous Humor, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Syphilitic Diseases, Canker, Faintness at the Stomach, and all diseases that arise from impure blood. Sciatica, Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout and Spinal Complaints, can only be effectually cured through the blood.

For Ulcers and Eruptive diseases of the skin, Pustules, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, Tetter, Scaldhead and Ringworm, VEGETINE has never failed to effect a permanent cure.

For Pains in the Back, Kidney Complaints, Dropsy, Female Weakness, Leucorrhœa, arising from internal ulceration, and uterine diseases and General Debility, VEGETINE acts directly upon the causes of these complaints. It invigorates and strengthens the whole system, acts upon the secretive organs, allays inflammation, cures ulceration, and regulates the bowels.

For Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Habitual Costiveness, Palpitation of the Heart, Headache, Piles, Nervousness and General prostration of the Nervous System, no medicine has ever given such perfect satisfaction as the VEGETINE. It purifies the blood, cleanses all of the organs, and possesses a controlling power over the Nervous system.

The remarkable cures effected by VEGETINE have induced many physicians and apothecaries whom we know to prescribe and use it in their own families.

In fact, VEGETINE is the best remedy yet discovered for the above diseases, and is the only reliable BLOOD PURIFIER yet placed before the public.

Correspondence.

Short graphic descriptive letters wanted from all parts of the county, that the general public may know of business matters, new enterprises and improvements going on in the localities written of.

There is not a whit more danger, as one of our exchanges understand it, in bringing a well horse in contact with one having the episzootic, than using him at home. The disease is epidemic, and not contagious.

Japan seems to be taking hold of the education of its youth in right earnest. Fifty thousand public schools the number to be established at once, according to advices received at Washington, will soon make that keenly receptive people a power on the earth.

Mexico now affrights the air with new tumult. Because there happens to be no political revolution in progress just now, the State of Michigan must needs have an earthquake, and set up a new volcano. Nothing short of annexation will ever reduce Mexico to an orderly condition.

General Hartranft will be 'mustered out" of service as Auditor General of Pennsylvania, Monday, and take his place as Governor. He will have a better chance as Governor, than in his former office and Simon will get all his expenses back probably, in a moderate time.

The Terre Haute Express concludes an able article on the mondern laxity of justice with the assertion that "there is no part of Western Europe in which honest citizens are not more certainly punished, than in Indiana." The remark is true not merely as to Indiana, but as to every other State.—Reform in this direction is loudly called for.

An exchange well remarks: "We don't make any pretentions to the gift of prophecy, but we venture to predict that if Grant sticks to the Civil Service rule, so well commended by the appointment of Fairman, to the Philadelphia Postoffice, there will be an attempt to Johnsonise him. The Radicals will stand no such nonsense. It was all very well before the election, but they don't see any use of any such thing now.

The Radicals who bet their money that Grant would receive more votes in Indiana, than Browne, have lost their money. The Indianapolis Sentinel of yesterday, contains the official vote in full. The vote for Browne in October, was 188,276, and the vote in November, for Grant was 186.144.—The vote for Hendricks in October was 189,424, so that if all those who voted for Hendricks had cast their votes for Mr Greeley, his majority would have been 3,280. There was 1,417 votes east for O'Conor.

Merely as a matter of historic interest the vote of the Electors on Wednesday last, is of importance. The Grant vote in thirty States was, 296; while the others scattered in this fashion. Liberals, 58; not reported twelve total, 70. For Vice President—Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, received the same vote as President Grant. The scattering vote, so far as was heard from is as follows:

For B. Gratz Browne, Tennessee, 12 Kentucky, 8, Georgia 5, and Missouri 6. For Thomas E. Bramlette, of Kentucky; Kentucky 1. For Willis B. Machen of Kentucky; Kentucky 3. For N. P. Banks of Massachusetts; Georgia, 1. For A. H. Colquit, of Georgia; Georgia, 5. For G. W. Julian of Indiana; Missouri, 5. For J. M. Palmer of Illinois; Missouri 3. For W. S. Grosbeck, of Ohio; Missouri, 1. President—For Thomas A. Hendricks, 24; Greeley, 3; B. Gratz Browne, 13; Charles M. Jenkins, 2; D. Davis, 1.

The political situation in Arkansas, is exceedingly critical. The 'Brindles' and 'Minstrels,' as the parties are respectfully called, are preparing to contest the elections to the last point. A Brindle convention (Brooks) has been called for the day of meeting of the Legislature, and there are fears that it will resolve itself into an organization to instal Brooks as Governor by force.—Clayton's Minstrels have called for federal troops, and a large force is said to be enroute for Little Rock.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

GREAT REDUCTION ON
Raisins, Currants, Peaches, Prunes, Teas,

Etc. We purchased 1000 boxes No. 1 Layer Raisins before the advance, and now offer them at 12½c per pound, or $2.50 per box of 25 lbs. This is equal to 10c per lb, and the lowest they have ever been in this market.

We also purchased a large lot of Zanta Currants. This fruit is generally considered low at 15c, we now offer the best quality at 10c.

The greatest reduction is on teas—selling 2 and 3 chests a day—no intermediate profits to pay, as we purchase direct of the importers and sell to the customers, thereby saving the profits ot the Jobber, speculator and wholesaler. The failure of five of the largest tea importers of N. Y. has broken the tea market. We have taken advahtage of the situation, and purchased large quantities at low rates, and we now offer all grades 15c per pound lower than former prices

SLEIGH-BELLS are jingling.

CHRISTMAS trees are sprouting.

TAX-PAYING time has come.

MINSTRELS to-morrow night.

LARGE audiences at the Baptist church this week.

Thrice the age of a dog is the age of a horse.

PAINTERS have ceased to daub houses.

THE boys are enjoying skating, on Cedar Creek.

RABBIT slayers rejoice over the last snow.

SATURDAY last was a very busy day in this place.

THE epizootic has seized upon the four legged donkeys.

AUBURN will soon be a good market for sweet cider.

REMEMBER the Minstrel show next Friday evening.

WOOD.—Bring along that wood you promised us.

OUR thanks are due Hon. S. S. Shutt, for valuable State documents.

NOTICE who advertises holiday goods and you will get the best.

REMEMBER the benefit Friday evening, at the Court House.

A SHOEMAKER give the "up-his-snoo-tic to a would-be saloonist, last week.

THE livery horses have recovered from the epizoo, and are feeling tip-top.

THE happiest men take the COURIER.

THE hog cholera prevails in some parts of the country.

THE epizootic is disappearing rapidly, and horses are again at work.

THE public schools are closed at South Bend on account of wood.

THE Colony, for the far west, proved to be a decided failure. The reason was, scarcity of men.

THE Silver Coronet Band has been doing good playing, for the small amount of practice they have had.

C. A. O. MCCLELLAN, Esq., of Waterloo, has purchased the Star Steam Flouring Mills at that place Price $18,000.

SHERIFF MEESE, lost an over-coat in Waterloo, the other day, with valuable papers in the pockets thereof. He stopped at the hotel, and some one by mistake took his coat, supposing it to be theirs.

JUDGE JAMES I. BEST, of Waterloo, will not assume the duties of Judge of the Circuit Court until next fall, and in the interim will still continue the practice as heretofore.

THE new school house at Waterloo was opened last Monday by the commencement of the schools. It is a handsome edifice, well furnished both inside and out, and is a credit to the enterprise of the town. Professor Bowersox is principal, with a corps of good teachers as his assistants.

THE burnt cork troupe will give an excellent programme at the Court House to-morrow evening.

A RAILROAD man was killed last week at Marion, Ind. Sheriff Meese was notified that the murder was supposed to have come this way, A man was arrested at Jonesville, but it is thought he is not the one.

Davenport & Co. are receiving new supplies for the Holidays, and if you want drugs, medicines, books, wall paper, window shades, or anything else, go to their establishment and you will be received kindly and fairly dealt with.

CHRISTMAS is coming and the little hearts of the children are expanding in anticipation of some nice present. Go and see Ehler's beautiful stock, where you can make a selection, at a small cost that will make the eyes of your children spark with delight.

DANCE.—On next Christmas Eve, in the evening, a grand dance will be given in Snyder's new brick building The proprietors, Messrs. Sprott and Zern, have spared no pains to make this the best and most successful dance ever known in this vicinity. They intend to manage it on an exclusively new plan, and have engaged eight selected musicians.

W. W. HUMES has just received a large stock of goods in the boot & Shoe line, which he guarantees equal to anything ever brought to the county. He has a large supply of ladies winter goods that are just the thing for both looks and comfort. They are made of good material, warm as well as fashionable, and cheap, as well as durable. The styles are new, and every lady that desires good health should have a pair. Also a large lot of childrens shoes for winter ware, at the lowest prices.

THE LIQUOR EXCITEMENT!

No License Granted for Auburn.

We are everywhere taught that we should do good and shun evil; but we are nowhere taught definitely how to distinguish. The ten commandments enjoin and forbid certain acts and principles; but when this comes to be applied to practical life they are found to be greatly wanting. The golden rule says that we should "do as we would be done by;" but even this comes far short of a distinct statement of the difference between what is right and what is wrong. No subject seems to require so nice a distinction as that of the liquor question. Even our temperance bodies often disagree as to the best mode of advancing their cause while there are scarcely two persons of the great body politic that entertain exactly the same opinion on this subject.—But our remark in the last issue, that the temperance cause in this county was gaining ground, has been since that, substantiated by the great victory which they achieved before the Commissioners' Court, during its last session Three applicants were before the Board for license to sell intoxicating liquors, and each were successively defeated. Two were new aspirants for that honor, and the other has been successful in his application for several years past. As to the new applicants we congratulate our citizens upon the fate of their application, and though they may not have proven worse than others, the result relieves the public from all anxiety in the matter.

There seems to be a varied difference of opinion, as to the case of Mr. Eldridge.—To look at it from a temperance standpoint, it has reduced the saloon capacity, of our town, to one-half its former strength and taken from our midst an establishment that was largely patronized because of its respectability. It has pronounced a warning to all coming applicants, that will surely be heeded, and cannot fail to result in good. It is the establishment of a precedent that gives the cause of temperance a better and firmer foothold in its contests with its enemy, and encourages the battle of the weak against the strong. It breathes new vigor and enthusiasm into the advocates of temperance, and illustrates what can be accomplished by the active and the brave, though they lack in strength. They have much cause for rejoicing, not only because of their victory, but also that they have set an example to their friends in every county far and near that is worthy of emulation.

The public at large look at it somewhat differently. While there is little sympathy expressed for the rejection of the new applicants, yet under existing liquor laws, it is claimed that an injustice has been done Mr. Eldridge. We do not set ourself up as judge in this matter, though it would not be difficult to decide, if public sentiment was to be taken into consideration. We believe that Mr. Eldridge tried to keep an orderly place and discharged his duty before the law as faithfully as one can under the circumstances. We believe that he is as fit person to engage in this traffic as any other that would engage in the same. The Commissioners are bound to grant license to any male inhabitant of the county over twenty-one, of good character. One or two witnesses swore that they saw him sell to persons in a state of intoxication. That would disqualify him before the law. His own statement, under oath, that he did not know Mr. Showers was in the habit of getting drunk, was unfortunate, and doubtless was the hair that broke the camel's back, in the opinion of the Commissioners.

As long as the law remains as it is, we doubt whether there are much better men than Mr. Eldridge to engage in the traffic and we believe the system of selling by the quart is even more pernicious in its effects than by the drink. We hope, however, that the present Legislature will change, or amend, the law so as to embrace the main points of the Ohio law, holding both retailer and the owner of the property in which it is sold, responsible for all injuries sustained in its sale.

A large number of witnesses were examined, among them several ladies, whose persistent efforts to defeat the applicant, entitle them to a great share of the victory The excitement attendant upon the trial was unusual, and the friends of both sides watched with great anxiety the progress of the trial. Messrs. Moody and Peterson for prosecution, and Plum and Rickle for the defense. The attorneys made able arguments on both sides which were listened to by a large number of our citizens It put us in mind of the days of Webster and Choate, and—Shakespeare.

PROFESSOR HALL and his lady, who are stopping here a few days, have tendered their services and will contribute something to the programme, Friday night, at the benefit performance. These parties are awaiting the arrival of the balance of their troupe, and will start on a theatrical tour westward in a few days.

Grand Benefit Concert.

Don't forget that our Ameteur Minstrels will give an entertainment at the Court House, Friday evening, Dec. 13, the net proceeds of which are to be given to Auburn Lodge, I. O. O. F. Every one should attend, in order that the sum donated may be a handsome one, as that order certainly need it. We are promised a proper, and interesting programme, by our own boys and who but what delights to support home talent.

A Grand Concert will come off at Colerick's Opera House, next Tuesday evening, Dec. 17. Rubinstein, the greatest Pianist, and Weiniawski, the greatest Violinist, together with several first class singers, will appear.

We find the following prophecy in an almanic for 1873, but published some time ago:

> The relative positions of the planets, Saturn, Jupiter and Uranus towards the close of May, 1873, seem to portend evil to America, probably a visitation from some virulent epidemic, and perhaps domestic discord. The probabilities, however, are that the trouble whatever it may be, will not be of long duration. As the opinion is entertained by many persons that the Presidential election in November will be marked with violence and bloodshed, it is proper to state that the stars do not foreshadow any such disastrous disturbances of the public peace. In fact, the celestial signs for the month of November, are especially favorable to this county. The moon, near the Tenth Cusp, on the 15th of November denotes public quiet throughout the Union, and the acquiescence of all parties in the decision of the majority.—Nevertheless, about this time, there appears to be some misfortune im'ending over a person occupying a very prominent position in the public service. The siderial indictions are somewhat confused and afford no positive clue to the individual menaced, or to the nature of the threatened evil. Possibly the President may be the personage at whom the finger of destiny points, but this is by no means certain.

THOSE who want a good pair of boots should try Hume's. He gets up a good article, and warrants his work.

Peterson's Magazine for January, 1873, is already on our table. In spite of competition "Peterson" more than holds his own. It is hard to tell which of its two steel engravings is the best, Cherry Ripe or The Initials of the Tree, they are both so beautiful. The price is but Two Dollars a year, with libeaal deductions to clubs, and a five dollar engraving to those getting up clubs. Specimens are sent gratis. Address Chas. J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

George J. E. Mayer and F. Voinol "Jewelers," No. 29 East Main Street, Opposite First National Bank, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Invite the people of Auburn and vicinity to call and examine their goods—appropriate for holliday presents. It will afford them pleasure to exhibit their extensive stock of gold watches, chains, jewelry, solid and silver-plated ware, etc.—Special invitation to call and see their wonderful singing birds and boquet-vase just received from Europe.

$75,000 in cash for $1.—We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column of the Nebraska State Orphan Asylum. Here is a chance to win a fortune in a public legal drawing and at the same time help a noble and worthy institution. Oct. 17-8.

LET it not be forgotten that, for the complete cure of kidney, bladder and glandular diseases, mental and physical debility, loss of vigor, and to keep the human structure in a healthy and vigorous condition, no better remedy can be found than Smolander's Extract of Buchu. It is a grand panacea for female complaints, and is not unpleasant to the palate.

MARRIAGES.

RUSH—MURRAY—On Monday, Dec. 9th, by the Rev. Mr. Crary, at the U. B. Church in Pleasant Lake, Mr. John Rush, of this place, and Miss Cina V. Murray, of Pleasant Lake.

We congratulate John on his securing so beautiful a prize while we admire the good taste of the bride in taking a Rush in this matter. A host of friends join in wishing them a Murray and a Rushing time. May their days be long and full of pleasure, and happiness.

A Great Offer Horace Waters, 481 Broadway, N. Y. will dispose of New Pianos, Melodeons and Organs, of six first-class makers, including waters', at very low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly instalments,—New 7-octave first-class Pianos, modern improvements, for $275 cash Now ready a Concerto Parlor Organ, the most beautiful style and perfect tone ever make. Illustrated Catalogues mailed Sheet Music and Music Merchandise.

A Representative House.

Among the multitude of different branches of trade in Fort Wayne, none are of more importance than the boot and shoe trade. This branch is well represented; prominent among them all is the shoe house of Markley, Schrader & Co. They came to Fort Wayne in 1866, and by their gentlemanly deportment and close attention to business, they have acquired a trade perhaps not excelled by any house in their line. Not satisfied with bargains given their customers heretofore, they propose to do still better for them in the future. Their stock is very large, being a full line of everything needed for mens, boys and youths, women, Misses and children's wear. They are giving great bargains; one cannot know how cheap they are selling, unless they call. Examine the goods and learn prices, We advise all in want of boots, shoes or rubbers to give them a call. tf.

Lots of people that have never been in Fort Wayne and are not acquainted can find the Red Front clothing hall, No. 5, Keystone block. Any woman or child can find this place, and you will save from 20 to 25 cents on each dollar.

Everybody that goes to Fort Wayne should not fail to call at the Red Front Clothing Hall, No. 5 Keystone block, and see the largest stock of clothing in the city. It has all been bought for cash before the late advance of wool.

Dissolution Notice.

The co-partnership heretofore existing between Drs. Casebeer and Littlefeld is this day dissolved by mutual consent.

All knowing themselves indebted to said firm will find their accounts for settlement in the hands of Dr. Casebeer, who will continue business in the same office.

Every contract has been met, there is not a single failure, and Wall street is as quiet as usual......In the second trial of the celebrated Jumel will case, just commenced in New York, in view of the enormous interests involved, a "struck" jury has been ordered, consisting of a panel of 48 prominent citizens, including merchants, bankers and publishers.

THE wills of Mr. and Mrs. Greeley leave all their property to their two daughters...... Woodhull and Claflin have been released on bail.

THE property left by Mr. and Mrs. Greeley is less than $100,000. A subscription has been started in New York to raise $100,000 for their children......A report is current in New York that Harper & Brother contemplate the purchase of the Tribune, and making George William Curtis editor-in-chief. It is understood that they are ready to offer $1,000,000 for the establishment as it now stands. The last sale of stock in the Tribune was on an estimated value of $1,100,000. Shares are still held at that figure......A terrible collision occurred on the Pennsylvania Central railroad, 50 miles west of Harrisburg, last week, resulting in the death of five persons, and the wounding of several others. The killed were all Western people—Matthew Knowles and J. W. Bacon, of Chicago, and W. W. Dantz, wife and child, of Green Bay, Wis.

The West.

CUMMINGS' dualine manufactory, at Milwaukee, exploded recently, killing four persons and badly wounding a fifth......Mrs Priestly, of Des Moines, Iowa, has recovered $2,500 from a saloon-keeper for selling liquor to her husband......Two of the boilers of the new Springfield (Ill.) rolling mills exploded the other day, killing two persons......Over 35,000 hogs were received at the Chicago stock yards in one day, last week.

THE steamer Souvenir went ashore at Ludington, Mich., in the recent severe gale, and every member of the crew perished........ Measures are being taken in San Francisco to bring the authors of the diamond hoax to justice.......The recent visitation of the cold weather has had the effect of virtually closing navigation on the Western lakes.

THE celebrated Stanton ruby, claimed to be worth $200,000, which created such an excitement in San Francisco and the far West, was tested the other day, at St. Louis, and found to be a soft garnet, worth $100...... White men will be banished from the territory of the Cherokee Nation, if the bill to that effect, which has been passed by the Cherokee National Council, receives the signature of their Chief.

WILLIAM WILLNEBRING murdered his father, aged 60, at Davenport, Iowa, recently, by stabbing him to the heart......The Bee-Keepers' Association, at Indianapolis, the other day, unanimously resolved that the Italian bee is superior to the black......The Modoc Indians, of Oregon, seem to have resolved on a war of extermination against the white settlers. In addition to the soldiers killed in battle, they have slain over a dozen whites. At last accounts the settlers were abandoning their homes and fleeing to the forts......The exposure of the stupendous diamond fraud continues to excite considerable agitation in San Francisco, and steps are being taken to prosecute those engaged in the swindle, one of whom has made a clean breast of the matter, and names all the parties concerned......Gen. O. C. Maxwell committed suicide at Dayton, Ohio, the other day, by shooting himself through the head with a pistol.

GEN. SHERMAN delivered a lecture at Washington, the other day, on his travels among the Greek islands, before an audience composed of a large number of Washington savans, professors and invited guests...... The President has appointed ex-Gov. James L. Orr, of South Carolina, to be Minister to Russia. Mr. Orr will be remembered as former Speaker of the House of Representatives, which position he subsequently held in the lower house of the Confederate Congress......Gen. Julius White, of Chicago, has been named by the President as Minister to the Argentine Confederation......Secretary Boutwell has still on his hands a large amount of the bonds of the funding loan, and he has informed the Committee of Ways and Means that unless Congress takes some steps in the matter, he will form another Syndicate in order to get rid of the balance at 5 and 4½ per cent.

Foreign.

THIERS and his friends have won a needed victory in the French National Assembly. By a majority of 24 in a vote of 704, they have carried the resolution to refer to a committee of 30 the drafting of a law establishing ministerial responsibility. In the debate which preceded this vote President Thiers spoke for an hour and a half, acknowledging the supremacy of the Assembly, and his own individual preference for a constitutional monarchy, but asserting that the only salvation of France lay in the maintenance of the Republic, which must be made conservative. ......One farthing is the amount of damages awarded to Hepworth Dixon in his suit for libel against the Pall Mall Gazette.

THE latest advices from Paris represent the situation as exceedingly grave. All the ministers have tendered their resignations, but Thiers accepted only that of Lefranc, Minister of the Interior...... The Emperor of Germany has executed his threat to reconstruct the upper house of the Diet in such a manner as to ensure the passage of the county reform bill, by creating new peers to the number of twenty-five.

JOSIE MANSFIELD, now living in Paris, lost $37,000 by the failure of Bowles Brothers...... We are advised from Paris that the determination of Thiers not to resign has had a quieting influence on the country, and that everything is now tranquil.

THE storm which ravaged the coast of Northern Europe last month is said to have been the most severe in the last two hundred years......London was frightened but a short time ago by a formidable strike among its policemen. Now comes the news that it has been plunged into darkness by the striking of several thousand stokers employed by the gas companies. The dispatch states that all the theaters were closed, and candles were regarded as luxuries, that the inhabitants were filled with consternation and dread, and that the irration against the stokers was very great.

PARIS is again convulsed by a vote of the Assembly, and Frenchmen are evidently getting ready to go down into the streets and throw up barricades. The army is under McMahon, and he considers himself under the Assembly, not under Thiers. Meanwhile, the German army watches, and Napoleon, at Chiselhurst, waits......Another destructive inundation of the River Po, in Italy, is reported......The Italian Government recently ordered the closing of the four English schools in Rome, on the pretext that they had failed to comply with the prescribed sanitary regulations.

Political.

IT is said John A. Bingham, of Ohio, will be appointed Minister to Rome......Grant's official majority over Greely in Michigan is 58,368......Official vote of Alabama: Grant, 90,272; Greeley, 79,441; O'Conor, none...... The official majority for Grant and Wilson in California is 13,660......Senator Sumner and Vice President-elect Wilson met in the office of the New York Tribune the other day, and had a friendly chat, during which the former entertained his colleague with an account of his travels and the impressions received from men and matters abroad. The meeting was very cordial and politics were entirely ignored during the interview...... The President, according to all accounts from Washington, stands firm, and openly declares his purpose to enforce reform in the civil service by the promotion, in every instance of a vacancy, of the subordinate who is the most competent to discharge the duties of the position.........Charles Francis Adams, as the candidate of the Anti-Secret Society party, received one vote for President in Indiana........The vote of Indiana (official): Grant, 186,131; Greeley, 163,622. ......Illinois cast 20,000 less votes for President in 1872 than were returned in 1868...... The Republicans of Berrien county, Mich., seizing Old Time by the forelock, have nominated Schuyler Colfax for President in 1876.

JUDGE MERRIMAN, late Democratic candidate for Governor of North Carolina, has been elected United States Senator from that State in place of Pool........Senator Spencer has been re-elected to the Senate from Alabama.

IT is announced from Washington that, in the event that Mr. Fish retires from the State Department, the President has determined to offer the portfolio to Mr. Charles Francis Adams......Ward Hunt, the newly appointed Supreme Judge, is a prominent lawyer of Utica, N. Y., where he was born in 1810, and where his whole life has been spent.

SOUTHERN Republicans are urging Senator Pool, of North Carolina, for a Cabinet position......The revision of the Senate committees, as agreed upon by the Republican caucus the other day, reduces the anti-Administration representation on several of the important committees from two to one. The Liberal Republicans are almost wholly ignored in the new composition, Mr. Schurz being retained on the Foreign Relations' Committee only through the courtesy of Senator Casserly, who declined in order that the Democrats might nominate him as their representative. Fenton is removed from the Finance, and Bayard, Democrat, remains. Mr. Trumbull is removed entirely from the head of the Judiciary, where he has served for twelve years, and put at the tail of the Retrenchment Committee. The Chairmen determined upon are: Judiciary, Edmunds; Finance, Sherman; Elections, Morton; Foreign Relations, Cameron; Military, Wilson; District of Columbia, Patterson; Public Buildings and Grounds, Morrill, of Vermont; Patents, Ferry; Commerce, Chandler; Claims, Howe; Indian Affairs, Harlan; Pensions, Pratt; Contingent Expenses, Carpenter; Public Lands, Pomeroy; Pacific Railroads, Stewart; Disabilities, Boreman; Mines and Mining, Hamlin; Revision of Laws, Conkling; Territories, Nye; Enrolled Bills, Windom; Levees of the Mississippi, Kellogg; Naval Affairs, Cragin. Senator Logan is placed second on the Military Committee, with a view to his being made Chairman when Mr. Wilson resigns.

THE billiard match for the championship of America, played at New York, between Cyrille Dion and John Deery, resulted in a victory for the former. Score: Dion, 1,502; Deery, 1,201.

SENATOR SUMNER says Thiers is the "right man in the right place."......The money-order business of the Postoffice Department, during the year ending June 30, 1872, exceeded $98,000,000. Of this vast sum, sent in small remittances, averaging about $20, not a cent was lost.

JUSTICE NELSON, of the United States Supreme Court, having resigned, the President has named Ward Hunt, of New York, as his successor.

FORTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

CONGRESS reassembled on Monday, Dec. 2, in the old formal way. The Senate showed a good many absentees, while the House had barely a quorum, nearly a hundred being absent. Among those who were present the greetings were very cordial. Mr. Sumner was welcomed by everybody. Conkling and Schurz shook hands and joked over events since last they met. Morton, Sumner and Fenton held a triangular confab long before the Senate came to order, and the best of feeling prevailed on all sides.

In the Senate, Mr. Sumner introduced a resolution to strike from the United States flags and the army register all record of battles fought with our fellow-citizens.....Mr. Wilson introduced a bill for the benefit of the sufferers by the Boston fire.....After the reading of the message and reports of the departments, the Senate adjourned.

In the House, Mr. Banks offered his resignation as Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, but that body, by a vote of 75 to 89, refused to accept it.....Mr. Blaine (Mr. Cox in the chair) offered a resolution providing for a committee to investigate the Credit Mobilier scandal, which was adopted. Messrs. Poland, Banks, Beck, Niblack and McCrary were appointed on the committee.....Mr. Dawes offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives, That in view of the recent death of Horace Greeley, for whom at the late election 3,000,000 votes were cast for President, that a record be made on the journals of Congress of appreciation for the eminent services and personal purity and worth of the deceased, and of the sad impression created by his death, following a keen family bereavement."......The Indian and Pension Appropriation bills were reported. The amount appropriated under the former was $5,3[illegible]6, 65, while the Pension bill appropriates $30,480,000.....Bills were introduced and referred for the relief of sufferers by the Boston fire, and for the reduction of the officers and expenses of the Internal Revenue Department, after which the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, Dec. 3.—SENATE.—The Senate adjourned immediately after the reading of the journal.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced to repeal the stamp tax on bank checks and notes; for the relief of the State of Tennessee; authorizing the construction of ten steam vessels of war, and appropriating $3,000,000 therefor. The latter bill, which was introduced by Mr. Scofield, of Pennsylvania, gave rise to a long discussion.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 4.—SENATE.—The Senate adjourned immediately after the reading of the journal.

HOUSE.—The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Donan—To provide for the speedy construction of a ship canal of large capacity around the Falls of Niagara, on the American side. By Mr. Archer—To amend the act of 27th May, 1872, for the abatement and repayment of taxes on distilled spirits in bond, destroyed by casualty. By Mr. Kerr—To authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio river, between New Albany and Louisville......The consideration of the bill providing for the construction of ten sloops of war was resumed, and the discussion was continued until the expiration of the morning hour, when the bill went over......The House, at 2:20 p. m., went into Committee of the Whole, and distributed the President's annual message among appropriate committees. The question of referring the subject of Postal Telegraphy provoked considerable discussion, but it was finally agreed to commit the matter to the Appropriation Committee......The Centennial Celebration was referred to a select committee of nine, after which the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, Dec. 5.—SENATE.—Bills introduced: Lewis (Va.), to amend the Bankrupt law; Ferry (Mich.), for a Court-House and Postoffice at Grand Rapids, Mich.; Logan (Ill.), to facilitate the administration of justice; Wright (Iowa), extending time for construction of the railroad from McGregor to the west end of O'Brien county, Iowa.....Petitions for a prohibitory liquor law were presented.....A resolution was passed requesting the President to furnish information as to the African slave trade, and the action of Great Britain and other powers for its suppression.....Mr. Sumner asked to be excused from service on any committee.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced: Wheeler, to incorporate a banking association (capital $100,000,000), with the name of the "Exchequer of the United States;" Dawes, for the relief of Boston—similar to the Chicago bill; Myers, giving a $2,000 pension to the widow of Gen. Meade; Harris, to allow farmers to sell leaf tobacco without restrictions......The bill for the construction of steam sloops of war was amended so as to provide that but six shall be built, and that the armament of each shall not exceed ten guns. Passed as amended.

The Government Printing Office.

The report of the Congressional Printer contains much interesting matter in regard to the Government printing. The entire cost of the office for the year was $1,802,343, which is largely in excess of any previous year for the past ten, except the year 1865, which was $2,227,099. Of all executive and miscellaneous documents and reports, there are printed the usual number, 1,625 copies for the Senate and 1,650 for the House, and also 825 copies of bills and resolutions for the Senate and House each. The aggregate cost of the paper used in the office for the year was $498,989. The amount paid for lithographing and engraving for Congressional documents was $42 257, and the cost of maps for the Supreme Court was $1,331. The public binding alone cost $541,663. As previously stated, the orders made by Congress and executed in the Government office for Congressional printing and binding, during the past year, ending Sept. 30, amount to $893,189.97. The year preceding was $679,819 for the same class of work. This shows an increase during the last year over its predecessor within a fraction of 25 per cent. The office has completed during the past year 119,284 pages of documentary composition, and 7,869, volumes of that class of work, many of which exceed 1,000 pages each, on the subject of Patent Office reports, which, with their costly engravings, were so expensive a publication and so lightly regarded by the public. The printing office building, owing to the immense increase of work, is found to be too small for the purpose, notwithstanding that a wing costing $40,000 was finished a year ago. Mr. Clapp asks for an appropriation to erect another wing, which, he says, is urgently demanded. The printing for the House of Representates amounted to $205,909; and for the Senate, $125,645. The following shows the cost of printing for each department: State Department, $24,106; Treasury Department, $322,861; Interior Department, $225,798; War Department, $142,406; Navy Department, $88,001; Judiciary Department, $42,742; Postoffice Department, $167,366; Department of Agriculture, $21,790; office of Congressional Printer, $1,503; total, $1,036,307. Charging the Government for the materials, the machinery, the labor, and everything used in the prosecution of the business, it appears that the earnings of the office for the year were $2,367,946, while the expenses of the office were $2,134,771. There are over 1,000 employes, male and female.

Susan B. Anthony Hoisted 1,100 Feet.

Susan B. Anthony, one of the mules used in hauling car loads of ore from the 1,100-feet level of the Belcher mine through to the Yellow Jacket shaft for some time past, was hoisted out Saturday afternoon, her services being no longer required in the subterranean line. The boys tied all her heels together and did her up securely in canvas, but she behaved so rebelliously that she had to be hoisted up slow, therefore was nearly half an hour in coming up the shaft, and she finally arrived at the surface in a perfect smoking lather of sweat. Susan had not seen daylight for over six months, and it was some time before she could get used to it again. She couldn't stand for an hour when she reached the surface, but this was owing to her having strained her legs trying to kick loose while coming up the shaft, on the cage. Susan came up fat and saucy, and in much better order than when she went down. Victoria Woodhull and Horace Greeley, the other two mules working at the lower levels, will be required there a little longer. Both are in fine condition like Susan B. Anthony.—Gold Hill (Nev.) News.

THUS far during the present year 520,000,000 postage stamps have been completed, those made in January numbering 76,000,000; 38,500,000 have been completed in a week, and 13,000,000 in a single day. Three times as many three cent stamps are used as of all denominations combined; after them come the one cent and then the two and six cent.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—Total Receipts from all Sources for the Year, $131,770,946—Whisky Tax, $49,475,576—Receipts from Tobacco, $33,736,170.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue states that the aggregate receipts from all sources, exclusive of the duty on the capital, circulation and deposits of National Banks were for the following fiscal years ending June 30:

1870	$185,235,867
1871	144,011,176
1872	131 770 946

These amounts include sums refunded and allowed on drawbacks. The decrease in the aggregate receipts for the last two years is due to the legislation approved July 14, 1870, which reduced the revenue to the estimated amount of $55,000,000 per annum, but which did not go into full operation before the close of the fiscal year 1871. The receipts from spirits show an increase over the last year of $3,992,046. The total is given at $49,475,576.

The number of grain distilleries registered the last year was 511; fruit distilleries, 338; making a grand total of 3,649. The returns to this office for the last fiscal year show a total production in taxable gallons from materials other than fruit, of 68,275,745; from fruit, 757,788; total yearly production, 69,083,533.

By the act of June 6, 1872, the act of July 13, 1866, so far as it relates to fermented liquors, was re-enacted with some amendments made at the solicitation of the principal brewers of the United States, designed to afford brewers better facilities than heretofore for the conduct of their business under the Internal Revenue laws. These concessions do not appear to have been of a character to endanger the public interests, as the following statement will show: The tax received on fermented liquors, at $1 per barrel, during the first quarter of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, was $2,217,191, while the receipts from the same source during the first three months of the present fiscal year amount to $2,684,241, an increase of $466,949. The average increase of about a million dollars annually during the last three fiscal years, as contrasted with the stationary character of the receipts during the four years next preceding, is certainly gratifying, but the increase during the first three months of the present fiscal year, as above stated, far exceeds that of any corresponding period in any other year since the organization of this office. The tax received on fermented liquors at $1 per barrel was for the years.

1867	$5,819,345
1868	5,685,663
1869	5,866,400
1870	6,081,520
1871	7,115,974
1872	8,009,969

The number of persons engaged in the manufacture of fermented liquors during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, was 3,421, distributed as follows:

Alabama	5	Mississippi	2
Arizona	10	Missouri	124
Arkansas	1	Montana	36
California	226	Nebraska	23
Colorado	38	Nevada	41
Connecticut	25	New Hampshire	5
Dakota	6	New Jersey	53
Delaware	2	New Mexico	8
District Columbia	15	New York	479
Florida	2	North Carolina	1
Georgia	4	Ohio	288
Idaho	12	Oregon	31
Illinois	216	Pennsylvania	443
Indiana	169	Rhode Island	4
Iowa	171	South Carolina	1
Kansas	46	Tennessee	11
Kentucky	45	Texas	44
Louisiana	16	Utah	16
Maine	1	Vermont	4
Maryland	72	Virginia	13
Massachusetts	56	Washington	14
Michigan	189	West Virginia	17
Minnesota	114	Wisconsin	293

The total receipts from tobacco for the fiscal year ending June 20, 1872, were $33,736,170, showing an increase over the previous year of $157,263. The Commissioner says that, so far as he is able to judge, the law providing for a uniform rate of tax on all manufactured tobacco, whether chewing or smoking, is operating very satisfactorily. There is now no reason why revenue officers should examine into the modes of manufacturing tobacco employed by any one, or for opening or examining any package, to ascertain the character of its contents. If the package is a legal one, and has upon it a proper revenue stamp, denoting the payment of the tax, with such additional marks, and brands, and labels as the law prescribes, no officer is authorized to examine it further.

Owing to the disturbing causes which have affected the trade for some months past, it is now too early to predict with entire certainty what will be the actual result of the present uniform tax on the amount of revenue to be collected. He has reason to believe that, with the additional safeguards provided by the new law against the sale of manufactured tobacco in fraud of the revenue, and with the taxes imposed upon the sale at retail of raw or leaf tobacco for consumption without its being subjected to any process of manufacture, collections from tobacco, under the uniform rate of twenty cents a pound (which is a reduction of more than six cents a pound from the average rate for the last two fiscal years), will reach nearly, if not quite, the sums realized for either of the same years. In making this estimate I am relying upon making collections of from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 of pounds more of manufactured tobacco in consequence of the restrictians which the act of June 6, 1872, has placed upon the sale for consumption of raw or leaf tobacco.

Colfax.

Miss Laura Ream writes to the Cincinnati Commercial an account of an interview with Schuyler Colfax, in the course of which the retiring Vice-President remarked: "I stood to-day on the very spot in the Senate Chamber where I made my first reports to the Indianapolis Journal. It was then owned by Mr. Douglas, and he gave me $2.00 a day for my services. I remember pleading with him for another dollar. I had to pay $4.00 a week for my board, and with that and the expense of clothes and coming here and returning home I could not very well see my way clear. When I insisted on the other dollar Mr. Douglas said to me: 'You don't seem to consider the advantages you enjoy; you are in a way to make valuable acquaintances. See what Albert S. White has come to. He was once a reporter. You may be a member of Congress some day. Who knows?'" "I frankly confess," continued Mr. Colfax, "that I said to him in reply, I will give all my chances of being a member of Congress for the other dollar a day."

Mark Twain in a Railroad Car.

I got into the cars and took a seat in juxtaposition to a female. That female's face was a perfect insurance company for her—it insured her against ever getting married to anybody except a blind man. Her mouth looked like a crack in a dried lemon, and there was no more expression than there is in a cup of cold mustard. She appeared as if she had been through one famine and got about two-thirds through another. She was old enough to be a great grandmother to Mary that had a little lamb. She was chewing prize pop-corn, and carried in her hand a yellow rose, while a band-box and cotton umbrella nestled sweetly by her side. I couldn't guess whether she was on a mission of charity, or going West to start a saw-mill. I was full of curiosity to hear her speak, so I said:

"The exigencies of the time require great circumspection in a person who is traveling."

"Says she, "What?"

Says I, "The orb of day shines resplendent in the vault above."

She hitched around uneasy like, then she raised her umbrella, and said, "I don't want any of your sass—get out;" and I got out.

Then I took a seat alongside a male fellow who looked like the ghost of Hamlet lengthened out. He was a stately cuss, and he was reading.

Said I, "Mister, did you ever see a camel-leopard?" I said camel-leopard because it is a pious animal, and never eats any grass without getting down on its knees. He said he hadn't seen a camel-leopard.

Then said I, "Do you chew?"

He said, "No, sir."

Then I said, "How sweet is nature."

He took this for a conundrum and said he didn't know. Then he said he was deeply interested in the history of a great man. "Alas!" he exclaimed, we are but few."

I told him I knew one; "the man that made my cooking stove was a great man."

Then he asked, "Would I read?"

Says I, "What have you got?"

He replied, "Waltz Hymans," "Reveries by Moonlight," and "How to Spend the Sabbath."

I said, "None of them for Hannah," but if he had an unabridged Business Directory of New York city, I would take a little read.

Then he said, "Young man, look at these gray hairs."

I told him I saw them, and when a man got as old as he was he ought to dye. Said I, "You needn't think these hairs are any signs of wisdom, it is only a sign that your system lacks iron, and I advise you to go home and swallow a crowbar."

He took this for irony, and what little entente cordiale there was between us was spoiled. It turned out that he was chaplain of a base-ball club.

When we got to Rochester I called for a bowl of bean soup. It ought to be called lead soup. I send you the receipt for making it:

"Take a lot of water, wash it well, and broil it until it is done on both sides; then very carefully pour one bean into it and let it simmer. When the bean begins to get restless, sweeten with salt, then put it up into air-tight cans, hitch each can to a brick, and chuck them overboard, and the soup is done."

The above receipt originated with a man in Iowa, who got up suppers on odd occasions for Odd Fellows. He has a receipt for oyster soup, leaving out the salt.

Speaking of Iowa reminds me of the way I got money to pay for that fellow's supper. I bet a fellow a dollar that I could tell him how much water to a quart went under the railroad bridge at Dubuque in a year. He bet, and I said two pints to a quart.

I won the bet. After all, that supper was an awful swindle. If the city didn't settle faster than the coffee did, its old settlers' club would be a failure, and the city too.

Dubuque is celebrated for its fine turnouts on the streets. While I was there a wagon upset and spilled a lot of women. I didn't see it—I looked the other way. No cards.

Sebastopol.

A St. Petersburg letter says: "There is every reason to believe that Sebastopol is destined to a future not less brilliant than was the past of the ports in Taurida at the period of the commercial and maritime power of Genoa, and when the Crimea was the chief seat of the trade between Europe and India. You may remember that in November last the Emperor of Russia charged the Ministers of War, Finance, Interior, Public Works, and Marine, to study, under the presidency of the Grand Duke Constantine, what should be done with the port. At the end of the winter plans for the reconstruction of Sebastopol had been drawn up, and in the following summer a commission, at the head of which was Admiral Arcas, of the Black Sea fleet, was sent to the Crimea to examine the question on the spot. That body began by taking the opinion of the inhabitants themselves. The delegates of the city pronounced in favor of the establishment of a commercial port, and insisted especially on the necessity of in any case giving up the Southern bay to merchant shipping. The port of Sebastopol is in fact situated 150 miles farther south than Odessa. It is also much nearer the Dardanelles than the port of Taganrog, which, besides, presents great inconveniences for loading and unloading vessels. Lastly, unlike Odessa and Taganrog, the harbor of Sebastopol is never frozen over, and is accessible in all weather. A correspondent of the Globe writes to that journal that the commission presided over by Admiral Arcas has expressed an opinion that a military port would be better situated at Balaslava. The fact is incontestible, by the presence of all the English fleet quietly anchored there, of the superiority of that harbor, from a military point of view. In any case, the question cannot long remain undecided. In the meantime, the works of the Sebastopol railway are being rapidly carried forward, and the construction of the arrival station has already been commenced."

An Intruder.

BY HIRAM RICH.

Baby has been here, it seems—
Baby Annie on the wing—
In my little library,
Plundering and reveling.

Annie dear, the darling witch—
See how innocent she looks—
But she has a world of wiles
When she gets among my books.

Half the time I own she seems
Less a being than a star;
Then again I cry, "My books:
Annie, what a rogue you are!"

"No, no—" papa cries in vain:
Down the dainty volumes come:
Papa, here you are no king,
I am queen in baby-dom.

Stately Johnson lies in grief
Under laughing Rabelais;
Emerson is flat for once:
Heine's thumbing Thackeray.

Whittier, O poet rare!
Thou hast many pages less;
But if all were gone but one,
That would hold and charm or bless.

Baby with the double crown,
And the laughter-haunted eyes,
Papa's sanctum, volume-strewn,
Is to thee a Paradise.

I forgive thee when I feel
Breath and lips upon me pressed,
Sweet as any alien air,
Blown from harbors of the blest.

"Papa," something whispers me,
"Better every laden shelf
Emptied by her baby hands
Than the house all to thyself."

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In transmitting to you my fourth annual message it is with thankfulness to the Giver of all good, that as a nation we have been blessed for the last year with peace at home and abroad, and a general prosperity vouchsafed to but few peoples. With the exception of the recent devastating fire which swept from the earth at a breath, as it were, millions of accumulated wealth in the city of Boston, there has been no overshadowing calamities within the year to record. It is gratifying to note how like their fellow-citizens of Chicago, under similar circumstances a year earlier, the citizens of Boston are rallying under their misfortunes, and the prospect is that their energy and perseverance will overcome all obstacles and show the same prosperity soon that they would have had, had no disaster befallen them. Otherwise, we have been free from pestilence, war and the calamities which often overtake nations. And, as far as human judgment can penetrate the future, no cause seems to exist to threaten our present peace.

When Congress adjourned in June last, a question had been raised by Great Britain, and was then pending, which for a time seriously imperilled the settlement, by friendly arbitration, of the differences existing between this Government and that of her Britannic Majesty, which, by the Treaty of Washington, had been referred to the tribunal of arbitration which had met at Geneva, in Switzerland. The arbitrators, however, disposed of the question which had jeopardised the whole of the treaty and threatened to involve the two nations in most unhappy relations toward each other, in a manner entirely satisfactory to this Government, and in accordance with the views and the policy which it had maintained. The tribunal which had convened in Geneva, in December, concluded its laborious session on the 14th day of September last, on which day, having availed itself of the discretionary power given to it by the treaty to award a sum in gross, it made its decision whereby it awarded the sum of $15,500,000 in gold, as the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to its consideration. This decision, happily, disposes of a long standing difference between the two Governments, and in connection with another award made by the German Emperor under a reference to him by the same treaty, leaves the two Governments without a shadow upon the friendly relations, which it is my sincere hope may forever remain equally unclouded.

The report of the agent of the United States, appointed to attend the Geneva tribunal, accompanied by the protocols of the proceedings of the arbitrators, the arguments of the counsel of both governments, the award of the tribunal, and the opinions given by the several arbitrators is transmitted herewith.

I have caused to be communicated to the heads of the three friendly powers who complied to the joint request made to them under the treaty the thanks of this Goverment for appointment of arbitrators made by them respectively, and also my thanks to the eminent personages named by them, and my appreciation of the dignity, patience, impartiality and great ability with which they discharged their arduous and high functions.

Her Majesty's Government has communicated to me the appreciation by her Majesty of the ability and indefatigable industry displayed by Mr. Adams, the arbitrator named on the part of this Government, during the protracted inquiries and discussions of the tribunal. I cordially unite with her Majesty in this appreciation.

It is due to the agent of the United States before the tribunal, to record my appreciation of the marked ability, unwearied patience, and the prudence and discretion with which he has conducted the very responsible and delicate duties committed to him. And it is also due to the learned and eminent counsel who attended the tribunal on the part of this Government, to express my sense of the talent and wisdom which they brought to bear in the argument of the result so happily reached. It will be the province of Congress to provide for the distribution, among those who are entitled to it, of their respective shares of the money to be paid.

Although the sum awarded is not payable until the year from the date of the award, it is deemed advisable that no time be lost in making a proper examination of the several cases in which indemnification may be due. I consequently recommend the creation of a Board of Commissioners for the purpose. By the Thirty-fourth article of the Treaty of Washington the respective claims of the United States and of Great Britain in their construction of the treaty of the 15th June, 1846, defining the boundary line between their respective territories, were submitted to the arbitration and award of his Majesty the Emperor of Germany, to decide which of these claims is most in accordance with the true interpretation of the treaty of 1846. His Majesty the Emperor of Germany having been pleased to undertake the arbitration has the earnest thanks of this Government and of the people of the United States for the labor, pains and care which he has devoted to the consideration of this long-pending difference. I have caused an expression of my thanks to be communicated to his Majesty.

Mr. Bancroft, the representative of this Government at Berlin, conducted the case and prepared the statement on the part of the United States with the ability that his past service justified the public in expecting at his hands. As members of the Cabinet at the date of the treaty which has given rise to this discussion between the two Governments; as the Minister to Great Britain when the construction now pronounced unfounded was first advanced, and as the agent and representative of the Government to present the case and to receive the award, he has been associated with the question in all of its phases, and in every stage has manifested a patriotic zeal and earnestness in maintenance of the claim of the United States. He is entitled to much credit for the success which has attended the submission. After a patient investigation of the case, and of the statements of each party, his Majesty the Emperor of Germany, on the 21st day of October last, signed his award in writing, decreeing that the claim of the Government of the United States that the boundary line between the territories of her Britannic Majesty and the United States should be drawn through the Haro channel, is most in accordance with the true interpretation of the treaty concluded on the 15th of June, 1846, between the agents of her Britannic Majesty and of the United States.

Copies of the case presented on behalf of each Government and of the statement in reply to each, and a translation of the award, are transmitted herewith. This award confirms the United States in their claim to the important Archipelago Islands lying between the continent and Vancouver's Island, which for twenty-six years—ever since the ratification of the treaty—Great Britain has contested, and leaves us for the first time in the history of the United States as a nation without a question of disputed boundary between our territory and the possessions of Great Britain on this continent.

It is my grateful duty to acknowledge the prompt, spontaneous action of her Majesty's Government in giving effect to the award. In anticipation of any request from this Government, and before the reception in the United States of the award signed by the Emperor, her Majesty had given instructions for the removal of her troops, which had been stationed there, and for the cessation of all exercise or claim of jurisdiction so as to leave the United States in exclusive possession of the lately disputed territory. I am grateful to be able to announce that the orders for the removal of the troops have been executed, and the military joint occupation of San Juan has ceased. The islands are now in the exclusive possession of the United States. It now becomes necessary to complete the survey and determination of that portion of the boundary line through the Haro channel, upon which the Commission which determined the remaining part of the line were unable to agree.

I recommend the appointment of a Commission to act jointly with one which may be named by her Majesty for that purpose. Experience of the difficulties attending the determination of our admitted line of boundary, after the occupation of the territory and its settlement by by those owing allegiance to the respective Governments, points to the importance of establishing, by natural objects or other monuments, the actual line between the territory acquired by purchase from Russia, and the adjoining possessions of her Britannic Majesty. The region is now so sparsely occupied that no conflicting interests of individuals, or of jurisdiction, are likely to interfere to the delay or embarrassment of the actual location of the line. If deferred until population shall enter and occupy the territory, some trivial contest of neighbors may again array the two Governments in antagonism. I therefore recommend the appointment of a Commission to act jointly with one that may be appointed on the part of Great Britain, to determine the line between our territory of Alaska and the coterminous possessions of Great Britain.

In my last annual message I recommended the legislation necessary on the part of the United States to bring into operation the articles of the treaty of Washington of May, 1871, relating to the fisheries and to other matters touching the relations of the United States toward the British North American possessions, to become operative so soon as the proper legislation should be had on the part of Great Britain and the possessions. That legislation on the part of Great Britain and its possessions had not then been had, and during the session of Congress a question was raised, which for the time raised a doubt whether any action by Congress in the direction indicated would become important—a question which has since been disposed of, and I have received notice that the Imperial Parliament and the Legislature of the Provincial Government have passed laws to carry the provisions of the treaty on the matters referred to into operation, I therefore recommend your early adoption of the legislation in the same direction necessary on the part of this Government.

The Joint Commission for determining the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions, between the Lake of the Woods and the Rocky Mountains, has organized and entered upon its work. It is desirable that the force be increased, in order that the completion of the survey and the determination of the boundary line may be sooner attended to. To this end I recommend that a sufficient appropriation be made.

With France, our earliest ally; Russia, the constant and steady friend of the United States; Germany, with whose Goverament and people we have so many causes of friendship and so many common sympathies, and the other powers of Europe, our relations are maintained on the most friendly terms. Since my last annual message the exchange has been made of the ratification of a treaty with the Austro-Hungary Empire, relating to naturalization; also of a treaty with the German Empire, respecting Consuls and trade-marks; also of a treaty with Sweden and Norway, relating to naturalization; all of which treaties have been duly proclaimed.

Congress, at its last session, having made an appropriation to defray the expenses of commissioners on the part of the United States to the International and Statistical Congress at St. Petersburg, the persons appointed in that character proceeded to their destination and attended the sessions of the Congress. Reports shall in due season be laid before you. This Congress meets at intervals of about three years and has held its sessions in several of the countries of Europe. I submit to your consideration the propriety of extending an invitation to the Congress to hold its next meeting in the United States. The centennial celebration, to be held in 1876, would afford an appropriate occasion for such a meeting.

Preparations are making for the International Exposition, to be held during the next year in Vienna, on a scale of very great magnitude. The tendency of these expositions is in the direction of advanced civilization and the elevation of industry, of labor, and the increase of human happiness, as well as of greater intercourse and good-will between nations. As this exposition is to be the first which will have been held in Eastern Europe, it is believed that American inventors and manufacturers will be ready to avail themselves of the opportunity for the presentation of their productions, if encouraged by proper aid and protection. At the last session of Congress authority was given for the appointment of one or more agents to represent this Government at the Exposition. The authority thus given has been exercised, but in the absence of any appropriation there is danger that the important benefits which the Exposition offers will, in a large degree, be lost to citizens of the United States. I commend the subject strongly to your consideration, and recommend that an adequate appropriation be made for the purpose. To further aid the American exhibitors at the Vienna Exposition, I would recommend, in addition to an appropriation of money, that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to fit up two naval vessels to transport between our Atlantic cities and Trieste, or the most convenient port to Vienna, and back, their articles for exhibition.

Since your last session, the President of the Mexican Republic, distinguished by his high character and by his services to his country, has died. His temporary successor has now been elected with great unanimity by the people—a proof of confidence on their part in this patriotism and wisdom which, it is believed, will be confirmed by the results of his administration.

It is particularly desirable that nothing should be left undone by the Government of either Republic to strengthen their relations as neighbors and friends. It is much to be regretted that many lawless acts continue to disturb the quiet of the settlements on the border between our territory and that of Mexico, and that complaints of wrong to American citizens in parts of the country are made. The revolutionary condition in which the neighboring Republic has so long been involved has, in some degree, contributed to this disturbance. It is to be hoped that with a more settled rule of order through the Republic, which may be expected from the present Government, the acts of which just complaint is made will cease.

The proceedings of the Commission under the convention with Mexico of the 4th of July, 1868, on the subject of claims, have unfortunately been checked by an obstacle, for the removal of which measures have been taken by the two Governments which, it is believed, will prove successful. The Commissioners appointed pursuant to the joint resolutions of Congress of the 7th of May last, to inquire into the depredations on the Texas frontier, have diligently made investigations in that quarter. Their report upon the subject will be communicated to you. Their researches were necessarily incomplete, partly on account of the limited appropriation made by Congress. Mexico, on the part of that Government, has appointed a similar commission to investigate these outrages. It is not announced officially, but the press of that country states that the fullest investigation is desired, and that the co-operation of all parties concerned is invited to secure that end. I therefore recommend that a special appropriation be made, at the earliest day practicable to enable the Commissioners on the part of the United States to return to their labors without delay.

It is with regret that I have again to announce a continuance of the disturbed condition of the Island of Cuba. No advance toward the pacification of the discontented portion of the population has been made, while the insurrection has gained no advantages, and exhibits no more of the elements of power or of the prospect of ultimate success than were exhibited a year ago. Spain, on the other hand, has not succeeded in repression, and the parties stand apparently in the same relative attitude which they have occupied for a long time past. This contest has lasted now for more than four years. Were it seen at a distance from our neighborhood we might be indifferent to its result, although humanity could not be unmoved by many of its incidents whenever they might occur. It is, however, at our door. I cannot doubt that the continued maintenance of slavery in Cuba is among the strongest inducements to the continuance of this strife. A terrible wrong is the natural cause of a terrible evil. The abolition of slavery and the introduction of other reforms in the Administration of the Government in Cuba could not fail to advance the restoration of peace and order. It is especially to be hoped that the present liberal Government of Spain will voluntarily adopt this view. The law of emancipation, which was passed more than two years since, has remained unexecuted in the absence of regulations for its enforcement. It was but a feeble step toward emancipation, but it was the recognition of right, and was hailed as such and exhibited Spain in harmony with sentiments of humanity and of justice, and in sympathy with the other Powers of the Christian and civilized world. Within the past few weeks the regulations for carrying out the laws of emancipation have been announced, giving evidence of the sincerity of the intention of present Government to carry into effect the law of 1370. I have not failed to urge the consideration of the wisdom, the policy, and the justice of a more effective system for the abolition of the great evil which has oppressed a race and continues a bloody and destructive contest close to our border, as well as the expediency and the justice of conceding reforms of which the propriety is not questioned. Deeply impressed with the conviction that the continuance of slavery is one of the most active causes of the continuance of the unhappy condition in Cuba, I regret to believe that citizens of the United States, or those claiming to be such, are large holders in Cuba of what is there claimed as property, but which is forbidden and denounced by the laws of the United States. They are thus, in defiance o the spirit of our own laws, contributing to the continuance of this distressing and sickening contest. In my last annual message I referred to this subject, and I again recommend such legislation as may be proper to denounce and, if not prevent, at least to discourage American citizens from holding or dealing in slaves.

It is gratifying to announce that the ratification of the convention concluded under the auspices of this Government, between Spain on the one part and the allied Republics of the Pacific on the other, providing for an armistice, have been exchanged. A copy of the instrument is herewith submitted. It is hoped that this may be followed by a permanent peace between the same parties.

The differences which at one time threatened the maintenance of peace between Brazil and the Argentine Republic, it is hoped, are in the way of satisfactory adjustment. With these States, as with the Republics of Central and South America, we continue to maintain the most friendly relation. It is with regret, however, I announce that the Governor of Venezuela has made no further payments on account of the awards under the Convention of the 25th of April, 1866. That Republic is understood to be now almost, if not quite, tranquilized. It is hoped, therefore, that it will lose no time in providing for the unpaid balances of its debt to the United States, which having originated in injuries to its citizens by the Venezuelan authorities, and having been acknowledged pursuant to a treaty in the most solemn form known among nations, would seem to deserve a preference over debts of a different origin and contracted in a different manner. This subject is again recommended to the attention of Congress for such action as may be deemed proper.

Our treaty relations with Japan remain unchanged. An imposing embassy from that interesting and progressive nation visited this country during the year that is passing, but being unprovided with powers for the signing of a convention in this country, no conclusion in that direction was reached. It is hoped, however, that the interchange of opinions which took place during their stay in this country had led to a mutual appreciation of the interests which may be promoted when the revision of the existing treaty shall be undertaken.

In this connection I renew my recommendation of one year ago that to give importance and to add to the efficiency of our diplomatic relations with Japan and China, and to further aid in maintaining the good opinion of these people, and secure to the United States its share of the commerce destined to flow between these nations and the balance of the commercial world, an appropriation be made to support at least four American youths in each of these countries, to serve as a part of the official family of our Minister there. Our representatives would not even then be placed upon an equality with the representatives of Great Britain or some other powers. As now situated, our representatives in Japan and China have to depend for interpreters and translaters upon natives of those countries who know our language imperfectly, or procure for the occasion the services of employes in foreign business houses, or the interpreters to other foreign Ministers.

I renew the recommendation made on a previous occasion of the transfer to the Department of the Interior, to which they seem more appropriately to belong, of all the powers and duties in relation to the territories with which the Department of State is now changed by law or by custom.

Congress, from the beginning of the Government, has wisely made provision for the relief of distressed seamen in foreign countries. No similar provision, however, has hitherto been made for the relief of citizens in distress abroad other than seamen. It is understood to be customary with other Governments to authorize Consuls to extend such relief to their citizens or subjects in certain cases. A similar authority and an appropriation to carry it into effect are commended in cases of citizens of the United States, destitute or sick, under such circumstances. It is well known that such citizens resort to foreign countries in great numbers; though most of them are able to bear the expenses incident to locomotion, there are some who, through accident or otherwise, becoming penniless, and have no friends at home able to succor them. Persons in this situation must either perish, cast themselves upon the charity of foreigners, or be relieved at the private charge of our officers, who usually, even with the most benevolent disposition, have nothing to spare for such purposes. Should the authority and appropriation asked for be given, care will be taken to carry the beneficence of Congress into effect, that it shall not be unnecessarily or unworthily bestowed.

From the foregoing statement it appears that the next reduction of the principal of the debt during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, was $99,960,253.54. The source of the reduction is as follows: Net ordinary receipts during the year, $364,694,229.91; net ordinary expenditures, including interest on public debt, $270,559,695.91; total, $94,134,534. Add amount of receipts from premium on sales of gold, in excess of the premium paid on bonds purchased, $2,454,470.89; add amount of reduction of the cash balance at the close of the year, accompanied with the sales at the commencement of the year, [illegible]; total, $99,960,253.54. This statement treats solely of the public debt. By the monthly statement of the public debt, which adds together the principal and interest due and unpaid and the interest accrued to date due, and deducts the cash in the Treasury, as ascertained on the day of publication the reduction was $100,544,491.28. The source of this reduction is as follows: Reduction in principal account, $99,960,253.54; reduction in unpaid interest account, $3,330,952.96; total, $103,290,956.50. Reduction in cash on hand, $2,746,465.22; total, $100,544,491.28. On the basis of the last table the statements show a reduction of the public debt from the 1st of March, 1869, to the present time as follows: From March 1, 1869, to March 1, 1870, $87,134,782.84; from March 1, 1870, to March 1, 1871, $117,619,630.25; from March 1, 1871, to March 1, 1872, $94,895,348.94; from March 1, 1872, to Nov. 1, 1872, eight months, $64,047,237.84. Total, $363,696,999.87. With the great reduction of taxation by the acts of Congress at its last session the expenditures of the Government in collecting the revenue will be much reduced for the next fiscal year. It is very doubtful, however, whether any further reduction of so vexatious a burden upon any people will be practicable for the present. At all events, as a measure of justice to the holders of the nation's certificates of indebtedness, I would recommend that no more legislation be had on the subject unless it be to correct errors of omission in the present laws, until sufficient time has elapsed to prove that it can be done and still have sufficient revenue to meet the current expenses of the Government, pay interest on the public debt, and provide for the sinking fund established by law. The preservation of our national credit is of the highest importance. Next in importance to this comes a solemn duty to provide a national currency, of fixed, unvaryingv alue as compared with gold; and as soon as practicable, having due regard for the interests of the debtor class and the vicissititudes of trade and commerce, and convertible into gold at par.

The report of the Secretary of War shows the expenditures of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1871, to be $35,799,991.82; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, to be $35,372,157.20, showing a reduction in favor of the last fiscal year of $427,834.62.

The attention of Congress will be called during its present session to various enterprises for the more certain and cheaper transportation of the constantly increasing surplus of the Western and Southern products to the Atlantic seaboard. The subject is one that will force itself upon the legislative branch of the Government sooner or later, and I suggest, therefore, that immediate steps be taken to gain all available information to insure equitable and just legislation. The route connecting the Mississippi Valley with the Atlantic, at Charleston, S. C., and Savannah, Ga., by water, by the way of the Ohio and Tennessee rivers and canals and slack water navigation to the Savannah and Ocmulgee rivers, has been surveyed and report made by an accomplished engineer of the army. Second and third new routes will be proposed for the consideration of Congress, namely, by an extension of the Kanawha and James river canal to the Ohio, and by extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. I am not prepared to recommend Government aid to those or other enterprises, until it is clearly shown that they are not only of national interest, but that when complete they will be of a value commensurate with their cost. That production increases more rapidly than the means of transportation in our country, has been demonstrated by past experience. That the unprecedented growth in population and products of the whole country will require additional facilities and cheaper means for the more bulky articles of commerce to reach tide water and a market will be demanded in the near future is equally demonstrable. I would therefore suggest either that a committee or commissioner be authorized to consider this whole question, and to report to Congress at some future day for its better guidance in legislating on the important subject. The railroads of the country have been rapidly extended during the last few years to meet the growing demands of producers, and reflect much credit upon the capitalists and managers engaged in this construction. In addition to these, a project to facilitate commerce by the building of a ship canal around Niagara Falls, on the United States side, which has been agitated for many years, will no doubt be called to your attention this session. Looking to the great future of the country and the increasing demands of commerce, it might be well, while on this subject, not only to have examined and reported upon, the various practicable routes for connecting the Mississippi with tide-water, but the feasibility of an almost continuous land-locked navigation from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico. Such a route along our coast would be of great value at all times, and of inestimable value in case of a foreign war. Nature has provided the greater part of this route, and the obstacles to be overcome are easily within the skill of the engineer.

I have not alluded to this subject with the view of having any further expenditure of public money, at this time, than may be necessary to procure and place the necessary information before Congress in an authentic form to enable it hereafter, if deemed practicable and worthy, to legislate on the subject without delay.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy, herewith accompanying, explains fully the condition of that branch of the public service, its wants and deficiencies, expenses incurred during the past year, and appropriations for the same. It also gives a complete history of the service of the Navy for the past year, in addition to its regular services. It is evident that unless steps are taken to preserve our Navy, that in a very few years the United States will be the weakest nation upon the ocean of all the great powers. With an energetic, progressive, business people like ours, penetrating and forming business relations with every part of the known world, a navy strong enough to command the respect of our flag abroad is necessary for the full protection of their rights. I recommend careful consideration by Congress of the recommendations made by the Secretary of the Navy.

The accompanying report of the Postmaster General furnishes a full and satisfactory exhibit of the operations of the Postoffice Department during the year. The ordinary revenues of the Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, amounted to $21,915,426.37, and the expenditures $26,658,192.21. Compared with the previous fiscal year, the increase of revenue was $1,878,380.95, or 9.37 per cent., and the increase of expenditures $2,268,088 23, or 9.29 per cent. Adding to the ordinary revenues the annual appropriation of $700,000 for free matter, and the amounts paid in subsidies on mail steamship lines from special appropriations, the general Treasury was $3,317,765.94—an excess of $389,707.28 over the deficiency for the year 1871. Other interesting statistical information, relating to our rapidly extending postal service, is furnished in this report. The total length of railroad mail routes on the 30th of June, 1872, was 57,911 miles; 8,077 miles of such service having been put into operation during the year. Eight new lines of railway postal service have been established, with an aggregate length of 2,909 miles. The number of letters exchanged in the mails with foreign countries was 3,066,502, or 20 per cent. over the number in 1871, and the postage thereon amounts to $1,871,257.25. The total weight of the mails exchanged with European countries exceeded 820 tons. The cost of the United States trans-Atlantic mail steamship service was $220,301.70. The total cost of the United States ocean steamship service, including the amounts paid to the subsidized lines of mail steamers was $1,027,020.97. The following are the only steamship lines now receiving subsidies for mail service under special acts of Congress: The Pacific Mail Steamship Company receive $500,000 per annum for carrying a monthly mail between San Francisco, Japan, and China, which will be increased to $1,000,000 per annum, and a semi-monthly mail on and after October 1, 1873. The United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company receive $150,000 per annum for carrying a monthly mail between New York and Rio Janeiro, Brazil; and the California, Oregon, and Mexico Steamship Company receive $75,000 per annum for carrying a monthly mail between San Francisco, Honolulu, and Hawayan Islands. Making the total amount of mail steamship subsidies at present $725,000 per annum. Our postal communication with all parts of the civilized world have been placed upon a most advantageous footing by the improved postal conventions and arrangements recently concluded with the leading commercial countries of Europe and America, and the gratifying statement is made that, with the conclusion of a satisfactory convention with France, the details of which have been definitely agreed to by the head of the French Postal Department, subject to the approval of the Minister of France, little remains to be accomplished by treaty for some time to come, in respect to reduction of rate, or improved facilities for postal intercourse.

I have heretofore commended the abolition of the franking privilege, and see no reason now for changing my views on that subject. It not having been favorably regarded by Congress, however, I now suggest a modification of that privilege to correct its glaring and costly abuses.

I would recommend also the appointment of a committee or commission to take into considerations the best method, equitable to private corporation who have invested their time and capital in the establishment of telegraph lines, of acquiring the title to all telegraph lines now in operation, and of connecting this service with the postal service of the nation. It is not probable that this subject could receive the proper consideration during the limits of a short session in Congress, but it may be initiated, so that further action may be fair to the Government and to private parties concerned.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury will show an alarming falling off in our carrying trade, for the last ten or twelve years, and even for the past year. I do not believe that the public treasure can be better expended in the interest of the whole people than in trying to recover this trade. An expenditure of five million dollars per annum for the next five years, if it would restore to us our proportion of the carrying trade of the world would be profitably expended. The price of labor in Europe has so much enhanced with the last few years that the cost of building and operating ocean steamers in the United States is not so much greater than in Europe that I believe the time has arrived for Congress to take this subject into serious consideration.

Detailed statements of the disbursements, though the Department of Justice will be furnished by the Attorney General, and though these have been somewhat increased by the recent acts of Congress to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union, and to force the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the amendment thereto, I cannot question the necessity and salutary effect of these enactments. Reckless and lawless men, I regret to say, have associated themselves together in some locali'ies to deprive other citizens of the right guaranteed them by the Constitution of the United States, and to that end have committed deeds of violence, but the prevention and punishment of many of these persons have tended greatly to the repression of such disorders. I do not doubt that a great majority of the people of all parts of the country favor the full enjoyment by all classes of persons of these rights to which they are entitled under the Constitution and the laws, and to invoke aid and influence of all good citizens to prevent organizations whose objects are by unlawful means to interfere with those rights. I look with confidence to the time not far distant when the obvious advantages of good order and peace will induce an abandonment of all combinations prohibited by the acts referred to, and when it will be unnecessary to carry on the prosecutions or inflict punishments to protect citizens from the lawless doings of such combinations. Applications have been made to me to pardon persons convicted of a violation of said acts upon the ground that clemency in such cases would tend to tranquilise the public mind, and to test the virtue of that policy I am disposed, as far as my sense of justice will permit, to give to these applications a favorable consideration, but any action thereon is not to be constructed as indicating any change in my determination to enforce with vigor such act so long as the conspiracies and combinations therein named disturb the peace of the country. It is much to be regretted, and is regretted by none more than myself that a necessity has ever existed to execute the enforcement act. No one can desire more than that necessity of applying it may never again be demanded.

The Secretary of the Interior reports satisfactory improvement and progression in each of the several bureaus under the control of the Interior Department. They are all in excellent condition. The work which in some of them for some years has been in arrears has been brought down to a recent date, and in all the current business has been promptly despatched.

The policy which was adopted at the beginning of the Administration with regard to the management of the Indians has been as successful as its most ardent friends anticipated within so short a time. It has reduced the expense of their management, decreased their forage upon the white settlements, tended to give the largest opportunity to the extension of the great railways through the public domain and the pushing of settlements into the more remote distr cts of the country and at the same time improve the condition of the Indians.

The policy will be maintained without any change, excepting such as further experience may show to be necessary to render it more efficient. The subject of converting the so-called Indian Territory, south of Kansas, into a home for the Indians, and entering thereon a Territorial form of government, is one of great importance as a compliment of the existing Indian policy. The question of removal to the Territory has within the past year been presented to many of the tribes resident upon other and less favorable portions of the public domain, and has generally been received by them as a preliminary step to the organization of such a territory will be necessary to confine the Indians now resident therein to farms of proper size, which should be secured to them in fee, the residue to be used for the settlement of other friendly Indians. Efforts will be made in the immediate future to induce the removal of as many peaceable-disposed Indians only to the Indian Territory as can be settled properly without disturbing the harmony of those already there. There is no other location now available where a people who are endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of pastoral and agricultural pursuits can be as well accommodated as upon the unoccupied lands of the Indian Territory.

Affairs in the Territories are generally satisfactory. The energy and business capacity of the pioneers who are settling up the vast domain not yet incorporated into States, are keeping pace in internal improvements and civil government with the older communities. In but one of them, Utah, is the condition of affairs unsatisfactory, except so far as the quiet of the citizens may be disturbed by the real or imaginary danger of Indian hostilities. It has seemed to be the policy of the Legislature of Utah to evade all responsibility to the Government of the United States, and even to hold a position in hostility to it. I recommend a careful revision of the laws of the Territory by Congress and the enactment of such a law as the one proposed in Congress at its last session, for instance, or something similar to it, as will secure peace, the equality of all citizens before the law and the ultimate relinquishment of polygamy. Within the Territories where mining is the principal business, agricultural products have exceeded the local demand and liberal shipments have been made to distant points.

The ninth census is about completed. Its completion is a subject of congratulation, inasmuch as the use to be made of the statistics therein contained depends very greatly on the promptitude of publication. The Secretary of the Interior recommends that a census be taken in 1857, which recommendation should receive the ready attention of Congress. The interval at present established between the Federal census is so long that the information obtained at the decimal periods to the material condition, wants and resources of the nation is of little practical value. After the expiration of the first half of that period, it would probably obviate the constitutional provision regarding the decimal census, if a census taken in 1875 should be divested of all political character, and no apportionment of Congressional representation be made under it. Such a census, coming as it would in the last year of the first century of our national existence, would furnish a noble monument of the progress of the United States during that century.

The rapidly increasing interest in education is a most encouraging feature in the current history of the country, and it is no doubt true that this is due in a great measure to the efforts of the Bureau of Education. That office is continually receiving evidences which abundantly proves its efficiency, from the various institutions of learning and educators of all kinds throughout the country. The report of the Commissioner contains a vast amount of educational details of great interest. The bill now pending before Congress, providing for the appropriation of the proceeds of the sales of public lands for education of their rising generation, is a measure of such great importance to our real progress, and is so unanimously approved by the leading friends of education, that commend it to the favorable attention of Congress.

The report of the Commissioner of Agriculture gives a very full and interesting account of the several divisions of that department. The horticultural, agricultural, statistical, entomological and chemical, and the benefits conferred by each upon the agricultural interests of the country. The whole reports a complete history in total of the workings of that department in all its branches, showing the manner in which the farmer, merchant and miner is informed and the extent to which he is aided in his pursuits. The Commissioner makes one recommendation that measures be taken by Congress to protect and reduce the planting of forests, and suggests that no part of the public lands should be disposed without the condition that one-tenth of it be reserved in timber where it exists, and where it does not exist inducements should be offered by planting it.

In accordance with the terms of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, providing for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of American independence, a Commission has been organized, consisting of the two members from each of the States and Territories. The Commission has held two sessions, and has made satisfactory progress in the organization and in the initiatory steps necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of the act, and for exceeding the provisions also of the act of June 1, 1871, creating a continual Board of Finance. A preliminary report of progress has been received from the President of the Commission, and is herewith transmitted.

It will be the duty of the Commission at your coming session to transmit a report of the progress made, and to lay before you the details relating to the exhibition of American and foreign arts, products and manufactures which, by the term of the act, is to be held under the auspices of the Government of the United States in the city of Philadelphia in the year 1876. This celebration will be looked forward to by American citizens with great interest, as making a century of greater progress and prosperity than is recorded in the history of any other nation, and proving a further good purpose in bringing together on our soil the people of all the commercial nations of the earth, in a manner calculated to secure international good feeling.

An earnest desire has been felt to correct abuses which have grown up in the civil service of the country, through the defective method of making appointments to office, which have been regarded too much as the reward of political services. Under the authority of Congress rules have been established to regulate the terms of office and the mode of appointment. It cannot be expected that any system of rule can be entirely effective and prove a perfect remedy for the existing evils till they have been thoroughly tested by actual practice and amended according to the requirements of the service. During my term of office it shall be my best endeavor to so apply the rules as to secure the greatest possible reform in the civil service of the Government. But it will require the direct action of Congress to render the enforcement of the system binding upon my successors, and I hope that the experience of the past year, together with appropriate legislation by Congress, may reach a satisfactory solution of this question, and secure to the public service for all time a practical method of obtaining faithful and efficient officers and employes.

Scientific and Practical.

A REMARKABLE fossil bird was lately discovered in Western Kansas that is creating not a little sensation among the savans. It differs widely from all known birds. It is about as large as a pigeon, and has been named ichthy-ornis dispar, which signifies a fish bird.

ONE of the novelties of the American Institute, in New York, is a saw with diamond teeth. It cuts its way through all opposition in rapidly sliding a marble block into thin sheets. Only a few of these precious stones are set several inches apart, but steam force drives them to and fro vigorously without wearing off their sharp angles.

A WRITER in The Country Gentleman recommends that late winter and early spring celery should not be earthed up at all. Just before winter sets in have all the plants carefully lifted with a spade and the earth partly shaken out from the roots. Place them in a trench in a place protected from the winds, and cover them over with a foot of dead leaves.

AT a recent meeting of the French Academy of Science a paper was contributed by a Dr. Gournier, detailing a process by which he can destroy any portion of the brain that might be desired without killing the animal. A little hole is made in the skull, and a blue solution of the chloride of zinc injected on that part of the brain selected, which at once becomes petrified. The experiments were successfully tried on rabbits.

M. PAUL BERT, an eminent French scientist, has discovered that the difficulty of respiration experienced by aeronauts at high altitudes is due, not to the mere rarefaction of the air, but to the comparative deficiency of oxygen supplied to the blood. He therefore asserts that by the simple expedient of providing a balloon with a reservoir of oxygen gas for annihilation, an ascent may be made with impunity to a far higher elevation than has hitherto been reached.

Facts for the Household.

To Remove Pimples from the Face.—Take the bark of an elder stalk and put it in a pint of rhubarb wine, then take a tea spoonful once a day, an ounce of the elder bark is sufficient.

Peach Pudding.—One quart of peaches, cut fine and well flavored, one desert plate of bread crumbs three eggs one pound of suit chopped fine, one nutmeg, and one glass of wine. Serve with wine sauce.

Apple Float.—To one quart of apples partially stewed, and well mashed, put in the whites of three eggs well beaten and four heaping tablespoonfuls of sugar, beat them together for about fifteen minutes, and eat with milk and nutmeg.

To Cure Enlarged Neck.—Take two table spoonfuls of salt, two of borax, two of alum: and mix enough water to dissolve them; (two tablespoonfuls of water is sufficient to dissolve them); apply to the neck every day for about three weeks.

To Wash Calico.—To prevent calico from fading when washing infuse three gills of salt into four quarts of water; put the calico in while hot. and leave it in until cold. In this way the colors are rendered permanent, and will not fade by washing.

Preserving Sausages.—After they have been hung three weeks in a dry, moderately dry room, pack them in a box or cask between layers of clean dry oats. in this way, they will keep dry and moist, until warm weather. Keep them in a cool dry place:

Dish for Breakfast.—Take half a dozen good cooking apples, cut them in slices of about a quarter of an inch thick and drop them in fresh hot lard; fry brown, serve hot with sugar sprinkled over.

Beautiful Pink Dye.—Take three parts cream tartar and one of cochineal nicely rubbed together; tie a teaspoonful in a mustard bag; put this with a quart of boiling water; dip in the articles to be colored, previously cleaned, and dipped into alum water: if it is wished stiff, put in a little gum of aradic.

What greater thing is there for two souls than to feel that they are joined for life, to strengthen each other in all labor, to rest on each other in all sorrow, to minister to each other in all pain, to be one with each other in silent, unspeakable memories at the moment of the last parting.

The most peculiar American form of humor yet developed is that which has lately become so popular, among editorial paragraph writers in our Western States. It is indiscribable, and we can indicate what it is only by giving one or two examples.

'Mrs. Owen, of Davenport, assisted the fire one day last week, with the kerosene can. The heavy rain kept a good many people from attending the funeral."

A Chicago man ate ten dozen eggs on a wager last week, The money he won, was paid to his widow.'

"A man out in Kansas, said he could drink a quart of Cincinnati whisky, and did it. The silver mountings on his coffin cost 13,75.

We cannot fail to discover at once, the parentage of anything of the sort. It is evidently too indigenous to be mistaken for an exotic.

HOW TO GO WEST

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Mrs. Daniels, of Shawnee, Kansas, wrote Mr. Fortner a note inviting him to meet her by moonlight alone, there or thereabouts. Mr. Daniels got hold of the note but had it delivered, and then went and kept the tryst instead of his wife. Mr. Fortner immediately sent for the doctor who at once went to exploring that gentleman's anatomy in search of a lead mine His official report of the exploration places the number of buck-shot at thirty-eight.

The people of Indiana are not likely to longer enjoy the benefits of the low State taxation inaugurated by the Democratic Legislature of 1871. The munificent appropriations made by the Radical majority in both branches of the Legislature will soon drain the Treasury to its last cent. The Benevolent, Charitable, Reformatory and Educational institutions of the State all ask large sums of money. And last and greatest comes the fastening upon the people of a million dollars of the infomous Canal Bond swindle.—Cheerful prospect.

A Surprise Party that Failed.

One night last week ten Stearnsville couples, with heads full of fun, went to Richmond to 'su prise' a friend. They had'nt the least doubt of a cordial welcome. They arrived in good time, laughing in the greatest glee. Provisions, furs shawls, etc., were thrown off without hesitation. By this time the party began to give some attention to the master of the house. He inquired if they hadn't got into the wrong pew. He was answered that the cheerful occasion was intended for his benefit—they said this smilingly, expecting he would welcome them. He didn't welcome worth a cent. He told his son to load his double-barrel gun and let the dog out o' the woodshed. The lady of the house reached the mop from behind the cellar door. The party began to think they were getting too warm a welcome and slip for their garments. The radical farmer told them not to hurry, as he'd have the other barrel loaded in a minute, and then he'd help 'em off. They didn't wait. The ladies said it was mean, and the men said dammit.

Some Significant Figures,

The annual report of the Treasurer of State, Hon. James B. Ryan, which will be found in the advertising department of this moring's Sentinel, is worthy of a careful perusal, presenting as it does, a clear and succinct statement of the financial condition of the State. The receipts of the year [including amount on hand Nov. 1, 1871,] have been $3,450,558,22, and the disbursements $2'587,201 85. Against the creaking predictions of our advarsaries that the heavy decrease in the rate of taxation, inaugurated by the Democratic Legislature in 1871. would compel the officers of the State to borrow money to meet the necessary expenses, the Treasurer submits the unanswerable and satisfactory exhibit of $793.356 37 in the Treasury. A careful examination of the figures presented by the Treasurer will furnish gentlemen of both parties food for whole sale reflection. It will be well for partisans and the people at large to examine in detail the items of expenditures in which the Democratic State officers have so admirably succeeded in largely reducing the expenses without impairing the efficiency or usefulness of any of the institutions or departments of the State administration. The reports of the Treasurers' of State for 1869, 1870, 1871 and 1872, have been carefully examined and the following estimates and comparison found on the records of these officers for the years 1869 and 1870, under Republican State officers, and the expenses for 1871 and 1872 under Democratic State officers, as illustrating the extravagance which marked the Administration of the former, and the economy which was inaugrated by the latter.

U. S. M.—Postal Regulations—A Few Suggestions.

If there is anything more absurb than some of the rulings and instructions of the post office department, we should like to see it. For instance the following:

Mail matter deposited in a post-office for mailing, on which at least one full rate of postage has been paid, should be forwarded to its destination charged with the unpaid rate to be collected on delivery. The unpaid rate is double the prepaid rate which should have been paid at the mailing office.

That is to say, if A writes B a letter so bulky that the postage is six cents, and only affixes one three cent stamp, B has to pay six cents on delivery of the letter. In this way B is punished for the ignorance or neglect of his correspondent.

We have a few improved rulings to submit to the department:

Monthly magazines, published weekly, must be charged letter postage when delivered daily. Powder magazines, except to regular subscribers, are not permitted to frank their reports.

If no stamp is affixed to a letter, retain it. If, however, the postage is overpaid, letter rip!

If you feel any debut about a paper going with a one cent stamp, have two sent.

Seeds can go through the mails as merchandise. The postmasters are cautioned agriust allowing any old seeds to go through their mail.

Signs cannot be sent without paying letter postage, three cents on every letter.

Calico prints, any foreign prince, reprints and footprints, all go as printed matter, and pay tax accordingly. Vaccine matter must be properly (pock) marked.

Poetry in its various stages, including Edgar A. Poe stage, must be sent postage paid, whether read or not.

A postmaster is not permitted to make a material change in the site of his post-office without affixing a two cent stamp for every two ounces. He can charge double postage for a sight of the postmaster.

Shirts may be mailed at the rate of two cents for every two ounces of shirt. If the owner's name is on the shirt, letter postage must be charge. This rule is indelible.

A subscriber residing in the county in which a paper is printed, can take the paper provided he pays in advance, and urges his neighbors to subscribe. If he does not live in the county in which he resides, and the paper is not printed in the same county where it has its press work done, then the county must pay double postage on the man—we mean a two cent county must be affixed to every postage stamp—that is to say, every two ounces of man—we mean the paper county—the man—well, we must leave this ruling to the discretion of the postmaster.—Sat. Night.

The Danger of Letter Writing.

It is not political candidates alone who should be careful about writing letters.—Candidates for matrimony, as well, should make their communications as exclusively verbal as possible; for under certain circumstances a love letter may become an ugly thing to deal with.

An Iowa bride learned this by costly experience a few days ago. The church was full of people, silks rustled, jewels flashed, eager expectation and unfrigned delight were everywhere manifested.—But when the holy man came to the usually meaningless words:

"Let him speak now, or forever after hold his peace."

Lo! a strong limed, dark haired, fierce-eyed man among the congregation rose and forbade the bans, giving as his reason that the fair but false one was 'engaged' to himself. And lest these words should be deemed the mere idle utterances of a jealous rival, he immediately drew from his pocket and began to read aloud, the letters which the bride had written him. The tender and gushing character of these epistles made it evident that his claim was just. The friends of the young woman tried to silence him with a storm of hisses and yells, while a strong party of his own friends sent forth a counter blast and a charming uproar was the rapid result. The clergyman made his escape by the vestry door, the crowd surged out at front, and the battle was renewed in the yard. The bridegroom disappeared, and the bride expressed her willingness to settle the dispute by marrying her first lover —an offer which is likely to be accepted.

The nineteenth annual meeting of the Indiana State teachers' Association, will be held at Logansport, the present season, commencing on the 21st of December, and continuing in session 4 days.

THE INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

Special Session.

The Senate Monday, passed Mr. Taylor's bill, amending the Supreme Court act of 1852 so as to make the Supreme Bench consist of five Judges, three of whom shall constitute a quorum. The majority report offering a substitute for the bill, dividing the State into 5 Judicial districts, also passed. A bill was passed to the second reading providing for getting the sense of the qualified voters, upon the need of a Constitutional Convention. A bill was also passed restraining all persons under 21 years of age, from making, selling, or giving away liquor. The Senate then adjourned.

In the House a bill was passed to its second reading, providing against cruelty to animals. Another bill was passed to its second reading, amending the act, regulating the apportionment of estates. It provides that where husband or wife dies intestate, one half of the property shall go to the deceased party's heirs, and the other half to the survivor, provided that the estate does not exceed 10,000. A bill was ordered to engrossment, rendering wives competent to testify in actions brought for injury done to them in person or character. Several private claims were reported and concurred in, and a bill was ordered, to be engrossed, prohibiting township trustees from levying taxes on the inhabitants of incorporarated towns. The Soldier's Monument bill, appropriating $100,000 for a monument in Governor's Circle was reported with amendments, and ordered to be engrossed. On the call of counties for new bills and resolutions, a number were introduced and referred to the appropriate committees. Among them —a joint resolution requesting an act of Congress giving 160 acres of bounty land to all soldiers or seamen of ninety days service; a resolution instructing the Judiciary, Committee to consider and report, on the expediency of substituting imprisonment for life, for the penalty of death; a bill regulating the change of venue; regulating sales of drugs and medecines; reorganize the Supreme Court; a temperance bill.—The Senate joint resolution was adopted, instructing congressmen to vote for the passage of the bill relating to the two per cent claims of Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri on the sale of public lands, and reservations, the house then adjourned.

TUESDAY

The Senate in assembling, engaged in a discussion of the railroad bills, to fix the freight and passenger tariffs of roads doing business in the State, and to prevent extortionate charges and unjust discriminations by railroads, and other common carriers. Against the latter Mr Scott made an objection that it would be just as proper to regulate the prices of labor and of meat, as of railroad tariffs. He thought that if people could not afford to pay railroad prices, the carrying would be done by horses or oxen. Other Senators thought that the extortion practiced for carrying freights a short distance, was a wrong that demanded a remedy, more than anything else, and Mr. Brown said, concerning the constitutionality of the bill, that Governor Baker had spent three weeks in getting it up, and that he would trust the Governor's legal knowledge. A motion to make both bills a special order for Fridry, was lost, yeas 16, nays, 26. The special order for the afternoon session was Mr. Dwiggings' bill repealing the drainage act of 1859 and the suplemental act of 1871. The next special order was Mr. Chapmans bill outhorizing the organization of companies for the reclamation of wet or of overflowed lands.

In the House the special order was Mr. Kimballs' bill and the bill to protect the Wabash and Erie Canal. A motion to lay Mr. Kimball's bill on the table was seconded by himself, and prevailed by 81 yeas to one nay. Mr. Bowser then made a motion that the bill should be recommitted and the Canal Trustees instructed to appeal the Garrett case to the Supreme Court.—the motion after some debate, was laid on the table. The question recurring, on the passage of the bill, Mr. Wynn demanded the previous question, and the bill was passed by 55 yeas, to 41 nays. The bill rendering uniform the interest on the common school fund was favorably reported and ordered to be engrossed.

There is a man in one of the suburbs who supports his family in handsome style by simply tying an able-bodied cat by the tail to a clothes line every night, and then going out in the morning to collect the soup, shaving cups, brushes &c., thrown into the yard by dwellers of adjoining houses.

Sir John Moore Buried Epizootically.

Not a sound was heard on the silent street,
As home from the concert we hurried;
For we found not a street car, carriage, or 'bus,
And we felt [illegible]

We hailed a driver we used to know,
And hurriedly asked the reason;
He said, as he sadly shook his head,
That the horses were all a sneezin'.

And so we silently went our way,
To the place where we kept our filly:
We found her weeping at eyes and nose,
And shaking as though 'twere chilly—

In vain we offered her tempting oats,
And ; "bran mash" warm and smoking:
She turned her head from the fragrant bait,
And swallowed as if she was choking.

We shook down a bed of fresh new hay,
With a bag of corn for a bolster;
And we gazed at the saddle overhead,
With its shining stirrups and holster.

We thought, as we looked in the glazing eye,
That her troubles would soon be over;
Never more would she crop the grass,
Or graze on the crimson clover.

Slowly we turned from the stable door,
With heart that was sadly beating;
And when we went in the early morn,
We found her quietly eating.

Repentance.

He kissed me, and I knew 'twas wrong,
For he was neither kith nor kin:
Need one do penance very long
For such a tiny little sin?

He pressed my hand; that wasn't right:
Why will men have such wicked ways?
It wasn't for a minute—quite—
But in it there were days and days.

There's mischief in the moon, I know—
I'm positive I saw her wink
When I requested him to go:
I meant it, too—I almost think.

But, after all, I'm not to blame:
He took the kiss. I do think men
Are quite without a sense of shame.
I wonder when he'll come again!

—Harper's Bazar.

DR. SPENCER'S GREAT CRIME.

I was sitting in my office, half dozing over an interminable article on defective nutrition, in the best medical review.

The fire in the grate was low, the night was stormy and the clock was on the stroke of eleven. I was just about to turn off the gas and retire, for, being a bachelor, I slept in the room connected with my office, when there was a pull at the bell.

I started up suddenly, for this was something new. Middlebury was a decorous sort of place, and the people usually managed to be taken sick at seasonable hours.

Old Mrs. Jerome had been threatening to die for the past five years, and at every visit I paid her she solemnly informed me that when the decisive moment did come she desired me present. But, as nothing ailed the old lady beyond now and then an indigestion from too much high living, I had never yet been called upon to be present at her death.

Now, I thought, it must be old Mrs. Jerome is going.

I took up my night-lamp and went to the door. A strong gust of damp, sleety wind nearly extinguished the light, but shading it with my hand, I dimly discerned the form of a woman.

"Come in," said I, holding open the door, but she declined, with a gesture of impatience.

"You must come out," she said, in a sharp, decisive voice, "and be quick about it."

I put on my overcoat without demur, locked the surgery door, and stepped into the storm. As I did so the woman laid laid a firm hand on my arm, and, putting her face close to mine, said:

"Dr. Lockwood, can you keep a secret?"

"I think so, madam."

"Swear it."

"Is this secret of a professional character?—that is, is it anything you wish to confide in me as a medical man?"

"It is."

"Very well, then, I swear it."

"That is right."

A man respects an oath, though why he should is a mystery, since men's mouths are running over with them.

"Whither are you taking me, and for what purpose?"

"To the Clifton House, to see the mistress."

I started.

Clifton House was the old mansion recently taken by Dr. Spencer, a stranger to every one in Middlebury. Spencer was a tall, dark, rather distinguished-looking man, who had hung out his sign in the village, only a few doors above mine, but as yet he had got no practice.

He was unsocial in the extreme, avoiding his neighbors persistently, and when he did speak it was in such a curt, half-savage way, that one was not likely to attempt prolonging the conversation.

The doctor had a wife, it was said, but no one ever saw her. She was an invalid, and Miss Melrose, a friend of the family, presided over the establishment and sat at the head of the table.

Miss Melrose was yet beautiful, and won the admiration of all who visited Clifton House, by her grace of manner and fascinating conversation.

"As we walk along," said my companion, "let me explain to you just what it is necessary you should know. My mistress is very ill."

"I beg your pardon—is it Mrs. Spencer or Miss Melrose?"

She laughed bitterly.

"Miss Melrose! I would stab her to the heart sooner than own her as a mistress. My mistress is a lady—noble, royal and of gentle birth. It is an honor to serve my mistress."

"And is she ill? How long since?"

"Ever since she married him—curse him!" she muttered, in a fierce tone; "but I must not get excited. I must tell my story, or rather hers. Two years ago, through the desire of her dying father, Alice Herndon became James Spencer's wife. Before that she was a healthy, blooming girl; immediately after this marriage she began to fail. Do you see anything strange in that?"

"Not necessarily."

"Let me enlighten you further. Dr. Spencer was at one time engaged to Miss Lucilie Melrose, but he broke the engagement and married my mistress instead. Miss Melrose was as poor as Job's turkey; Miss Herndon was an heiress, and Dr. Spencer was deeply in debt and and hard pressed by his creditors. Do you see anything strange in that?"

"Perhaps. Go on."

"When my mistress married Spencer she was only seventeen, and had been taught to obey her father in everything. She was a gentle, affectionate child, and it would have been easy for Spencer to have won her love. But he did not care for that. It was her money he wanted. It paid his debts and bought him fast horses; it set his table with nice, costly dishes, and put it in his power to keep Miss Melrose robed like a queen. And all this time my mistress has been slowly but surely sinking; and, look you, Dr. Lockwood, I believe she is not dying of disease, but of——" she lowered her voice to a whisper as she spoke the word—"poison!"

"Impossible! This is a grave charge."

"Of poison given her by her husband, who, at her death, will have sole control of her property and be free to marry Miss Melrose. There is no time to explain to you in detail the thousand and one circumstances which have led me to the belief, for we are almost at the door. It is never the case that Miss Melrose and Spencer are out at the same time, or I should have called another physician before; but to-night they are called away by the death of Miss Melrose's sister, and will not be back until to-morrow. With the consent of my mistress. I came for you, and oh! Dr. Lockwood, I pray you save my dear mistress! I nursed her when her mother died and left her a helpless infant; all through her innocent youth she was like an own child to me; and now to see her fading hour by hour before my eyes! Good heavens! if I knew beyond doubt that he was guilty, his life should pay the forfeit."

I was already beginning to feel a deep interest in Mrs. Spencer, although I had never seen her, and, like her old nurse, I was inclined to feel a great animosity for Dr. Spencer.

Mrs. Spencer received me in her bedchamber. It was on the second floor, and was furnished with exquisite elegance.

Everything in the room bespoke the taste and delicacy of the occupant. The warm air was fragrant with the faint odor of the heliotrope; and, glancing around, I saw the purple blossoms and green leaves in an alabaster case on the ledge of the south window.

She was a woman who, when once seen, could never be forgotten. I have met in my life many beautiful women, but never one so lovely.

She was tall and straight, with a purely oval face, liquid brown eyes, and a dash of hectic in her cheeks, which is never seen in perfect health. She received me, as I know she received everybody, gracefully, and though there was a slight embarrassment in her manner when I spoke of her illness, she answered my professional inquiries without hesitation.

As to myself, I laid aside all false delicacy and questioned her plainly as to her symptoms. Mrs. Hurd, her nurse, remained in the room and added many little important items of information.

When she spoke of her husband it was with a sort of hopeless sadness, which distressed me greatly.

Not a breath of suspicion against him in her answer to my questions, and I felt sure that at present she knew nothing of what Mrs. Hurd had such serious apprehensions. I was glad that it was so, for, with her finely strung organization, it might have produced serious results. I made my examination of the patient as closely as I could, and drew my own conclusions. I could have sworn that Mrs. Spencer daily swallowed arsenic in small quantities, and the deadly drug was telling fearfully on a constitution never robust.

She said, answering my questions, that she had no physician except her husband. He had thought himself better acquainted with her case, and, therefore, better qualified to treat it. He never left medicine with her to take; he always brought it fresh from his office, and administered it promptly.

There was little enough I could do in such a case. Anxious to do everything, the circumstances of the affair left me nearly powerless.

A charge of such a nature, of course, I could not make out against Dr. Spencer without the amplest proof. If I hinted a suspicion, every one would at once set it down to my professional prejudice, and if I could not substantiate my statement, the doctor could make me pay dearly for such a slander uttered against his character.

The only dependence seemed to be in Mrs. Hurd. To her I unbound myself freely. I told her, without reserve, that I believed Dr. Spencer was killing his wife by slow poison, and besought her to be constantly on the watch to save the victim, and to discover some proof by which we could fasten the guilt upon him.

She smiled grimly, and promised obedience. I gave her a powerful antidote for the poison I suspected, and went home perturbed and anxious in mind. I did not sleep that night, and all the next day I was in a high fever of excitement. A ring at the bell made me tremble—a step on the gravel outside my office stopped my breath, and I hardly knew what I expected to hear, yet, I felt sure that before I slept I should hear something.

And now, I must tell the story as it was told to me:

Dr. Spencer returned home in the morning after my visit to Clifton House. He looked wretchedly, the nurse said, appeared gloomy and depressed. Miss Melrose came with him, and was decorously sad over the death of her sister. Women of stamp always do mourn to perfection. They neither overdo nor underdo the thing, as women of feeling are likely to do.

Dr. Spencer came at once to his wife's chamber. He thought she looked ill, and prescribed a cordial at once, saying he would go and fetch it.

"You are always ordering cordials for her," said Mrs. Hurd, musingly. "Why not take something yourself? You look like a ghost."

He eyed her keenly, but replied, composedly:

"I think I will take some of the cordial myself, for I do not feel quite well. Alicia, dear, shall I bring it here and drink your health?"

Mrs. Spencer smiled sadly in assent—she never disputed her husband—and he went out. Presently he returned with two glasses. Both contained liquid, colorless and odorless. Mrs. Hurd was watching him with her heart in her throat, for, as she told me, she felt that the decisive moment had come. There was something in the gray pallor in the doctor's rigid face that told her of a desperate purpose in the man's soul.

He lifted the glass on the right of the tray and gave it to his wife.

"Drink it, dear," he said; "it is a panacea for all evils. I also am going to take a glass of it," and he pointed to a glass still on the tray.

Mrs. Spencer accepted it, and was putting it to her lips, when Mrs. Hurd interrupted.

"If you will bring her a tumbler of water, doctor, Mrs. Spencer complains that the cordial leaves a bad taste in her mouth, and my old bones are so full of rheumatism that it nearly kills me to go down stairs."

The doctor turned and bent on her a look as if he would read her through. But she kept her face passive. If he had any suspicions her manner quieted them, and, putting down the glass, he left the room. Then Mrs. Hurd changed the position of the glasses.

When he came back—and he was gone but a moment—the nurse stood just exactly where he had left her, and Mrs. Spencer was laying back in her chair with her eyes closed.

Again he lifted the glass—this time it was the one intended for himself—and placed it at the lips of his wife. She drank the contents, swallowed a little of the water he had brought her and thanked him in her sad, seeming way.

"Now, for my own cordial," said he, with affected gayety. "I indulge in something a little stronger," and as he spoke he tossed off the mixture.

"It made me stone cold to my fingers' ends to see him do it," said Mrs. Hurd, relating the circumstances to me; "but, Heaven is my witness, I felt not a twinge of conscience. I argued like this: If it was a simple cordial, as he said, it would do him no harm. If it was poison, his blood would be upon his own sinful head."

He went to bed half an hour after complaining of fatigue. In the morning they found him dead!

I was called to the post mortem examination, and we discovered in the stomach of the deceased a sufficient quantity of the deadliest poison known to modern science to kill half a dozen men.

My brother physicians agreed that the man was insane, and had probably taken the dose in one of his unsettled fits of mind. I did not dispute them, but even before Mrs. Hurd told her story I had my own theory in regard to his death.

There was no public exposure, however. Mrs. Hurd and I agreed that it would profit no one to make the affair public, and so we kept our own counsel.

Miss Melrose, in spite of my conviction that she had been an active party in the conspiracy against Mrs. Spencer's life, I could not help pitying. Such a miserable, worn and haggard face as hers I have never seen; and when they buried Dr. Spencer she was confined to her chamber with brain fever.

I attended her in her illness, but although she recovered her health, she never was herself again. She was a harmless maniac, whose delight was in gathering flowers and decorating the doctor's grave with them.

She is living still, and still gathers flowers and lays them on that grave, singing to herself meanwhile a sort of low incantation, which no one ever pretends to understand.

Not until Mrs. Spencer had been many days my wife, and the faithful Mrs. Hurd slept under the violets, did Alicia ever know the perfidy of her former husband.

And when I told her, after the first shock was over, she crept into my arms and whispered:

"But if it had not been for James' crime, I should not have found you, Herbert. So good sometimes does come out of evil."

How the President Prepares his Messages.

The Washington Star says: "The President, in preparing his annual messages for Congress, usually commences about ten days before the opening of the session, and devotes about two hours each day, in the forenoon, to the work. He writes rapidly, and with no reference to notes, further than to refresh his memory as to subjects which he proposes to write about. Devoting two hours each day to it, he usually completes it in about four days, or eight hours' work. He examines thoroughly the various departmental reports, statistics included, before he begins work, and carefully stores his mind with the contents. After he prepares the document he reads it to the Cabinet, and requests the members to make such suggestions as they desire concerning their respective departments. If such suggestions meet his approval they are incorporated in the message, and the document is then handed to Messrs. Luckey and Sniffen, who prepare two perfect copies for the Senate and House, after which they manifold six or eight copies for the press."

To Clean Smoky Paper-Hangings.

Take a piece of wood of the shape of a scrubbing-brush, nail a handle on the back, then upon the face nail a piece of dried sheepskin, with the wool upon it, or flax or tow will do, or cotton-flannel of several thicknesses will answer very well. Dip this brush into dry whiting, and rub the smoke lightly with the brush on the upper parts of the room first—protecting the carpet with matting or newspapers, as the whiting dust is hard to sweep off a carpet. The whiting that remains on the wall is easily brushed off with a soft cloth attached to a stick. It is very effectual if the room is not damp and the whiting is dry.—Agriculturist.

The deficiency of the wheat crop of Great Britain, according to one English authority, is 22,079,200 bushels, not taking into account the inferior quality of a large portion of that saved. Another authority places the crop twenty per cent. below the average in England proper, and not half an average in Scotland. Add to this the deficiency in the potato crop, and the widespread disease among live stock, and the winter prospect is not a hopeful one for the poor of the British Isles.

Care of the Eyes.

Multitudes of men and women have made their eyes weak for life by the too frequent use of the eyesight reading fine print and doing fine sewing. In view of these things, it is well to observe the following rules in the use of the eyes:

Avoid all sudden changes between light and darkness.

Never read by twilight on a very cloudy day.

Never sleep so that on waking the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eyesight by light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light of a window or door.

It is best to have light fall from above obliquely over the left shoulder. Too much light creates a glare and pain and confuses the sight. The moment you are sensible of an effort to distinguish, that moment stop and talk, walk or ride.

As the sky is blue and the earth green, it would seem that the ceiling should be a bluish tinge, the carpet green, and the walls of some mellow tint.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub the eyes, that moment cease using them.

If the eyelids are glued together on waking, do not forcibly upon them, but apply the saliva with the finger and then wash your eyes and face with warm water.

Civil Service Rules.

Since the President's inforcement of the Civil Service rules in the selection of a Postmaster for Philadelphia, there has been some curiosity to know exactly what those rules are. We quote that which relates to the Postoffice Department:

"8. When a vacancy occurs in the office of postmaster of cities, according to the census of 1870, in a population of twenty thousand or more, the Postmaster General shall ascertain if any of the subordinates in such office are suitable persons qualified to discharge efficiently the duties of postmaster, and, if such one be found, he shall certify to the President the name or names of those subordinates, not exceeding three in number, who, in his judgment, are best qualified for the position, from which list the President will make the nomination to fill the vacancy. But if no such subordinate be found so qualified, or if the nomination be not confirmed by the Senate, the nomination will be made at the discretion of the President."

A Heavy Contract.

Last Fourth of July, a young man in the employ of a wholesale house in Dubuque, in conversation with his employer, was induced to enter upon a simple task, at what seemed a high salary. He was offered $500 per annum, in addition to what he was then receiving, if he would merely carry from any place on Main street to the river shore, and throw into the Mississippi the first week, one single shot, No. 6; the second week, two shots; the third week, four shots; the fourth week, eight shots; and so on, doubling the number of shot each week—the young man who took the contract to find the shot.

Well, he entered upon his contract. The first month, as will be noted above, his work was easy—simply to go to the river four times, carrying with him the aggregate fifteen No. 6 shot. The fifth week, he carried 16 shot; the sixth week, 32; the seventh week, 64; the eighth week, 128; the ninth week, 256; the tenth week, 812; the eleventh week, 1,024; the twelfth week, 2,048; the thirteenth week, 4,096. At this juncture, from curiosity, and to save the labor of counting the shot, which was getting to be troublesome, he weighed his 4,096 shot, and found that they balanced just 1½ pounds. He had now carried and deposited something less than three pounds of shot. He congratulated himself that this was earning $125 very easily.

The fourteenth week he deposited—still doubling the amount—3 pounds; the fifteenth week, 6 pounds; the sixteenth week, 12 pounds; the seventeenth week, 24 pounds; the eighteenth week, 48 pounds. That brings him to date. This week, the nineteenth of his contract, he made a little calculation in regard to the matter, as follows:

He finds that next week, the twentieth of his contract, he will have to deposit 192 pounds; the twenty-first week, 384 pounds; the twenty-second week, 768 pounds; the twenty-third week, 1,536 pounds; the twenty-fourth week, 3,072 pounds, something over 1½ tons; twenty-fifth week, 3 tons; the twenty-sixth week, 6 tons; the twenty-seventh week, 12 tons; the twenty-eighth week, 24 tons; the twenty-ninth week, 48 tons; the thirtieth week, 96 tons; the thirty-first week, 192 tons; the thirty-second week, 384 tons; the thirty-third week, 768 tons; the thirty-fourth week, 1,536 tons; the thirty fifth week, 3,072 tons; the thirty-sixth, 6,144 tons; the thirty-seventh week, 12,228 tons; the thirty-eighth week, 24,576 tons; the thirty-ninth week, 49,152 tons; the fortieth week, 98,304 tons; the forty-first week, 196,208 tons; the forty-second week, 393,216 tons; the forty-third week, 786,432 tons; the forty-fourth week, 1,572,864 tons; the forty-fifth week, 3,145,782 tons; the forty-sixth week, 6,291,456 tons; the forty-seventh week, 12,582,912 tons; the forty-eighth week, 25,165,824 tons; the forty-ninth week, 50,321,648 tons; the fiftieth week, 100,643,296 tons; the fifty-first week, 201,286,592 tons; the fifty-second week, 402,573,184 tons.

The young man has thrown up his contract.—Dubuque Times.

Swallowing Pennies.

If a child swallows a penny, should not some purgative be given at once to help expel it? No. It is very rare that any harm comes in such cases, but there is more danger when a purgative is given than when not given. We have had occasion to observe this many times, and no doubt others have. The first thought of most parents, after a child has swallowed insoluble substance, is to give physic. This stimulates the bowels, inducing contraction, which in some instances is dangerous, and so softens the fecal matter that the penny is more likely to be entangled or lodged in the folds of the intestines, in which case great danger may result. It is far better for the child to eat freely of such food as shall produce a large fecal formation to surround the insoluble substance, in which case the danger is very slight. We once knew a child to swallow a key an inch and a half long, which passed through the body in forty-eight hours without harm. On the other hand, we have known a cherry stone to produce death, and grape seeds to produce serious intestinal disorders. Children should early be taught to use care and precaution in what they take into their stomachs. Still, the accidental swallowing of insoluble substances should never lead to the unwise practice of trying to physic it away. The reason why there is little danger when no physic is given us because the thick lining membrane of the bowels and the fecal matter around the foreign body prevents entanglement and bears it on till expelled.

Lager Beer.

Only a few years ago German lager beer was entirely unknown in this country, and even the English strong beer was but little known. The little that was used was chiefly imported in bottles, either because the demand for it was so small, or the reason that Englishmen gave that "Hamericans 'ad no 'ops to brew it with." But now beer is getting to be used here almost to the extent that it is in England or Bavaria. According to statements made before the Brewers' Congress, which lately met at New York, there are over 3,000 breweries in operation in this country, employing over $100,000,000 capital. The amount of fermented liquors brewed in this country during the year ending June 30, 1871, was 7,159,740 barrels. This would furnish nearly one hundred glasses to every inhabitant. The revenue derived from malt liquors, in 1870, exceeded $6,500,000; in 1871, it was over $7,800,000; and it is said there will be a very large increase this year. To make the beer manufactured in the United States last year required, it is stated, 25,000,000 bushels of barley, and 18,000,000 lbs. of hops. It is gratifying to know that this traffic, which drains so many millions of dollars from the pockets of the people living chiefly in towns and cities, does something to replenish the pockets of farmers, who use very little of fermented or distilled liquors.

Lays of Labor.

From the early dawn of morning
Till the closing of the day,
Helping to enrich another,
Toiling hard for little pay;
Living in a pent-up alley,
On the coarsest kind of food,
Whilst the rich man lives in luxury:
Is this human brotherhood?

Better far to be a savage,
In the desert roaming free,
Than to live a life degraded,
And a mere machine to be.
But, cry preachers, be contented,
It is only for your good,
Man was made to toil and suffer—
Is this human brotherhood?

Vain it is to talk of freedom,
Whilst distinctions thus remain,
Slaves of wealth are slaves as truly
As the slave that wears the chain.
Though God's earth was made for all men,
Owning not a single rood,
Robbed of all, and blamed for toiling,
Is this human brotherhood?

Arouse yourselves, ye toiling millions!
Join together in your might,
Cast off sleep—be up and doing,
If you would obtain your right,
And oppression sweep before you
Like the torrent of a flood,
Be your watchword truth and justice,
Universal brotherhood.

Valuable Rubbish.

The value of metallurgic skill has recently been strikingly demonstrated in Greece. Some time ago the Greek Government parted for a mere trifle, to two enterprising foreigners, their rights over the rubbish heaps of the Laurium mines, which were first worked 3,300 years ago by the King of Athens. It was soon found that even the debris, which had been cast aside by the ancients as worthless, possessed great value, and the Government, repenting of their bargain, assessed the property at $200,000,000, and are demanding more money for their rights.

The funny man of the Danbury News, whose quaint paragraphs are having such a run through the facetious columns of all the newspapers in the country, denies the statement now circulating, that his name is Riley. He says he was born with the good old New England name of Bailey, and that he still retains it, in spite of the leap years that have rolled over his head. He is as clear as a mountain rill, with nothing "Riley" about him.

The Supreme Question.—Health is the most important of earthly blessings, and therefore the nervous anxiety of the sick to ascertain the relative merits of the various medicines in use is not surprising. Within the last two years many thousands of invalids have abandoned the preparations of the pharmacopolist for the remedy introduced by Dr. Walker, of California, under the somewhat eccentric name of VINEGAR BITTERS. That this new Vegetable medicine is "winning golden opinions of all sorts of people" is beyond a doubt. The accounts we hear of its extraordinary effects in cases of chronic dyspepsia, rheumatism, liver complaints, malarious fevers, nervous prostrations, and many other distressing diseases, certainly justify the popularity which it has everywhere acquired.

Dr. Walker claims for his specific a remedial power over all disorders that do not involve an irreparable destruction of bone and fiber, and results so far appear to have justified the claim. In this age of wonders we are not disposed to deny the possibility of any phenomena not directly at variance with the laws of nature, and as it is held by many physiologists that all maladies proceed from the same generic cause, we see no reason for the incredulity with which some people regard the idea of a Universal Medicine. Dr. Walker's preparation seems destined to be universally approved.—[Com.

The New York Weekly Tribune Agriculturally Considered.

The Weekly Tribune, now more than thirty years old, has kept up with the progress of the age in improvement and in enterprise. It devotes a large share of its columns to Agriculture as the most essential and general of human pursuits. It employs the ablest and most successful cultivators to set forth in brief, clear essays their practical views of the farmer's work. It reports public discussions which elucidated that work; gathers from every source agricultural news, the reports of the latest experiments, the stories of the latest successes and failures, and whatever may tend at once to better Agriculture, and to commend it as the first and most important of progressive Arts, based on natural science.

There are hundreds of thousands engaged in diverse pursuits who own or rent a "place," and give some portion of their time to its culture and improvement. The Weekly Tribune shows them how to make the most of their roods and their hours, both by direction and example. No information equal in quality or quantity can be elsewhere obtained for the price of this journal.

The Weekly Tribune also appeals to Teachers, Students, and persons of inquiring minds, by the character of its Literary contents, which include reviews of all the works proceeding from the master minds of the Old or of the New World, with liberal extracts from those of especial interest. Imaginative Literature also claims attention, but in a subordinate degree. "Home Interests" are discussed weekly by a lady specially qualified to instruct and interest her own sex, and the younger portion of the other. No column is more eagerly sought or perused with greater average profit than hers. The News of the day, elucidated by brief comments, is so condensed that no reader can deem it diffuse, while given sufficiently in detail to satisfy the wants of the average reader. Selections are regularly made from the extensive Correspondence of The Daily Tribune from every country, and its editorials of more permanent value are here reproduced. In short, The Weekly Tribune commends itself to Millions by ministering to their intellectual wants more fully than they are met by any other journal, while its regular reports of the Cattle, Country Produce, and other Markets, will of themselves save the farmer who regularly notes them far more than his journal's price.

Herring's Safes Again Triumphant.

A GLORIOUS RECORD.—Twelve years ago a few modest lines in a New York journal invited public attention to a new Vegetable Restorative, and solicited a trial of its merits as a remedy for indigestion, biliousness, fever and ague, debility, nervous disorders, rheumatism, and all complaints requiring invigorating and regulating treatment. In this quiet, unpretentious way, PLANTATION BITTERS was introduced to the world. It was a success from the beginning. All that was claimed for it as a tonic, a corrective and antidote to malarious fever, was found to be strictly true. Within five years the annual sales of this article amounted to over One Million of Bottles. A few years more and the demand had swelled to five millions. The annual consumption of the bitters has now reached the almost incredible aggregate of SIX MILLIONS OF BOTTLES, and for every bottle sold a copy of the ILLUSTRATED MEDICAL ANNUAL, published by the proprietors, at a cost of $150,000, is given away.—[Com.

MAGNETISM—THE MOVER AND MYSTERY OF THE WORLD!—New facts are constantly coming to light in regard to this potent agent in nature. The Magnetic Springs of Michigan and other localities are attracting the profound attention of Scientific Men. Many cures are claimed to have been accomplished through the agency of the "Magnetic" waters. If those waters are impregnated with magnetism, is it at all wonderful that Dr. Trask should be able to combine magnetism with vegetable extracts, and present to the world an "Electric" or "Magnetic Ointment?"

Dr. Trask claims to have discovered and accomplished this result. From its powerful penetrating qualities it seems to possess strong magnetic qualities and is worthy a trial by the public.

The Chicago Tribune

Now occupies its rebuilt premises with greatly improved facilities, and appears in a new quarto form of fifty-six columns, the largest, handsomest and best newspaper published west of New York. Its distinguishing features are: the earliest and fullest news from all quarters, at whatever cost; full and accurate commercial, real estate and general market reports, and great ability in its editorial, literary and agricultural departments. It is independent and outspoken in its views, with full faith that Time, which sooner or later gives to right the victory, will vindicate its principles. It has been the most powerful agency in the Northwest in inspiring and moulding that strong, free public sentiment, which, at last, has united all parties in maintaining the equal rights of all, irrespective of race, creed or color. The advocate of Progress, the friend of Virtue, the fosterer of Art, Education and general culture, its great success is largely due to its high character as the best representative of the Industrial and Business interests, and the marvellous enterprise, of the West. Its advertising columns reveal the great fact—more convincing than words—that, whoever wishes to know, or to make known, anything patronizes the Tribune. It is emphatically the peoples' Tribune, which no Western man of business or culture can afford to be without.

The Tri-Weekly contains, in each issue, the substance of two Dailies.

The Weekly will contain the cream of the Dailies, the unrivalled articles of Rural on "The Farm and Garden," so eagerly looked for by Western readers, and original and selected sketches, tales and articles of special interest to the Home and the Fireside. In the copiousness and freshness of its news, literary excellence and adaptation to the wants of Western people, it has no equal.—[Com.

A Palatial Jewelry House.

N. Matson & Co., the oldest and wealthiest jewelry house in Chicago, have removed to their spacious new marble building, cor. State and Monroe Sts., which is superbly finished in carved woods, marble, silver-plate, and plate glass, grandly lighted and is doubtless the handsomest jewelry house in the world. Mr. Geo. E. Johnson, a successful and wealthy Boston merchant, has become an active partner in the firm. With large capital, an immense stock of the best assorted goods to be found East or West, all purchased from the manufacturers for cash, the firm challenges competition in the prices and quality of their goods. Those who would see the richest and most extensive display of jewelry, watches, gold chains, diamonds, solid and plated silverware, bronzes, Russia leather, toilet and fancy goods ever exhibited in the West, should visit Matson & Co.'s jewelry store, the ornament and pride of the New Chicago.—Chicago Trib.

Epizooty.

MR. EDITOR:—Among all the many remedies for the Epizooty, or horse disease, we have found in our experience that what is good for humanity is good for the horse; we therefore used Davis' Pain Killer for bathing and for them to inhale, and in some cases where Bronchitis is bad, have given 1 ounce of Pain Killer in a pint of warm water and molasses, drank with this, the results in bad cases have been beneficial. In bad cases, where the animal does not expectorate freely, give about 1 ounce of Allen's Lung Balsam three times a day. It will act on the horse as on man. Let those having an occasion try it. We have cured fourteen horses with this treatment, some of which were very sick. A.

Why Endure What is Curable?

"What can't be cured must be endured," says the proverb; but indigestion can be cured, and therefore it is the merest stupidity to endure it. Dyspeptics have certainly a right to continue dyspeptics to the end of their days if they choose; but as it is not supposed that any rational being prefers physical torment to ease and health, the probability is that if all sufferers from indigestion were convinced that an absolute, infallible remedy for their complaint existed, they would with one accord resort to it. We most emphatically declare that such a remedy does exist, and that its name is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The record of its success extends over a period of more than twenty years, and it is fearlessly alleged that during the whole of that time it has never failed to afford permanent relief in any disorder or derangement of the stomach that was not organic, malignant and incurable. The testimonials that go to establish this important fact can be counted by the thousand. Stomach complaints that had been aggravated by a total disregard of all dietary rules, and intensified and rendered chronic by medicinal treatment or drastic purgation, have in hundreds of instances been cured within three months by the systematic use of this celebrated stomachic and alterative. It should be remembered that weakness of the digestive organs involve many other ailments. Biliousness, headache, nervous debility, spasms, palpitation of the heart, rush of blood to the head, nausea, vertigo and sleeplessness are among its concomitants and results; and for all these the great vegetable tonic is a specific. It acts first upon the stomach, and through the stomach upon the secretory and nervous systems and the bowels, its general effect being always genial and beneficent.

A CHALLENGE

IS extended to the world to place before the public a better cough or lung remedy than ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

VERILY IT HATH NO EQUAL.

CONSUMPTIVES, READ!

Would you cure that distressing cough, and bring back that healthy vigor till lately planted in your cheek? If you would, do not delay; for, ere you are aware, it will be too late.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM

Is your hope. It has been tried by thousands such as you, who have been cured; many, in their gratitude have lent their names to us, that suffering humanity can read their evidence and believe. Don't experiment with new and untried mixtures—you cannot afford it—but try at once this invaluable article. It is warranted to break up the most troublesome cough in a few hours, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction in all cases of lung and throat difficulties.

UNSOLICITED EVIDENCE OF ITS MERITS

READ THE FOLLOWING!

WHAT WELL KNOWN DRUGGISTS SAY ABOUT ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 11, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam at once. We have not a bottle left in our Store. It has more reputation than any cough medicine we have ever sold, and we have been in the drug business twenty-seven years; we mean just what we say about the Balsam.

Very truly yours,
HURT & TANNER.

AGAIN READ THE EVIDENCE from a Druggist who was cured by use of the Balsam, and now sells it largely.

L. C. Cottrell, Druggist at Marine City, Michigan, writes, Sept. 12, 1872: "I am out of Allen's Lung Balsam; send me half a gross as soon as you can; I would rather be out of any other medicine in my store. The Lung Balsam never fails to do good for those afflicted with a cough."

It is harmless to the most delicate child.
It contains no opium in any form.
It is sold by Medicine-dealers generally.

CAUTION.

Be not deceived. Call for ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, and take no other.

DR. A. TRASK'S
MAGNETIC OINTMENT
FOR THE CURE OF INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing diseases is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.
His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.
Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.
It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.
Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it copes as readily with internal as external disease.
Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.
No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.
For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.
In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.
For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.
Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Breast, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills.
These are the only medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption. Dr. Schenck, of Philadelphia, has been in constant practice for over thirty years, continually examining lungs, and knows his medicines, if properly taken, will cure Consumption. His Mandrake Pills cleanse the liver and stomach; his Seaweed Tonic dissolves the food, stimulates the coating of the stomach, and aids digestion. His Pulmonic Syrup ripens the matter, and nature throws it off without any exertion. For sale by all druggists.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Vinegar Bitters are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.
No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.
Dyspepsia or Indigestion. Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.
For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.
For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.
They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, and in Bilious Diseases.
For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.
Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.
Grateful thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.
Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.
Mechanical Diseases. Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, will be subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS once or twice a week, as a Preventive.
Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. There are always more or less obstructions of the liver, a weakness and irritable state of the stomach, and great torpor of the bowels, being clogged up with vitiated accumulations. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.
Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goiter, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.
Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.
The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic and Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.
The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are the best safeguard in all cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their Sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc. Their Counter-Irritant influence extends throughout the system. Their Diuretic properties act on the Kidneys, correcting and regulating the flow of urine. Their Anti-Bilious properties stimulate the liver, in the secretion of bile, and its discharges through the biliary ducts, and are superior to all remedial agents, for the cure of Bilious Fever, Fever and Ague, etc.
Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, and the nerves are rendered disease-proof by this great invigorant.
Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, December 19, 1872

That able German newspaper, the Cincinnati Volksblatt makes the following felicitous comments upon the Postmaster General's report:

'It is expected to take charge of the telegraph, and establish postal saving banks. Why should it not also help maidens of nebile age to husbands and fix the price of bread? Go is, we are prepared for any thing.

'The postal Department is the least self-sustaining of all the branches of the Government. Its deficit instead of diminishing, increases every year. Our Postal services cannot sustain itself and defray it's own expenses, and for that inviting reason, it seems, still other administrative branches are to be intrusted to that department It is to be put into possession of the telegraph lines and also, as the Postmaster General preposes, to the report just published, to be formed into a savings bank. To the gentlemen in Washington, our army of officers do not seem large enough. They want it increased so that the people may finally be entirely saved of the trouble of self-government.'

There is an item for those persons to ponder over, who believe in the doctrine of Protection to Home Industry. We find it going the round of the press though we believe that it first appeared in the Warsaw Indianian. 'If those persons who, each year, take so much pains to make up clubs for distant papers and periodicals would turn their attention in the direction of home, and labor as faithfully for their home paper, many of them would not present the sickly, half-starved appearance they now do, owing to the lack of support of people who should take a deep interest in their welfare. We repeat the request, that the home paper every where, should not be neglected at this season of the year, when distant publishers are making strenuous exertions to procure the names of new subscribers at every post office in the land.—A united support would make nearly every country paper now published the equal of most of the city weeklies.—Think of this for a moment, and ask yourself the question whether it is not so.'

HOW TO LIVE LONG.—They live longest as a class, who live calm and even lives mentally and physically who are most exempt from the turmoils and shocks and strains that are incident to human existence, and are assured of to-morrow's bread. There is no one thing which has such a direct influence of promoting longevity as an assurance felt to be well grounded, of a comfortable provision for life for all ordinary wants of station. Not long ago, a man died in the poorhouse in England, where he had been taken care of for ninety years; he had no anxiety for to-morrow's bread; he had no quarter's day to provide against, in default of which wife and children would be turned into the street, from the doors of elegant brown mansions. He had no notes to meet in the bank, which if not paid by a day or hour, would involve, protest, and financial ruin.—Ah, this load of debt! how it grinds one's manhood to powder—how it shames a man's honor—how it has driven to desparation, to drunkenness, to suicide, to murder! How the anguish of it, takes the energy and health out of man, and makes him pine and languish for weary days and weeks, on beds of thorns that pierce through the body into the soul! So one good way to avoid sickness and premature death is to avoid debt as you would the evil one.

'There is no such man as Horace Greeley, in existence, since the Presidential election, but in looking over our exchanges we saw a name like this "damn Greeley." Wonder who gave our legislators the authority to change his name. Gentlemen, the poor fellow is sick, and it is wrong for you to go ahead and make such a change. You ought to have made a motion to lay it on the table. It is too late now, and we will surely have to call the old Gent., by his right name.—Plymouth Republican.

This is the return accorded for years of service rendered by the foremost man in the Republican party, by one of the whangdoodles of journalism, in Indiana whose attempt to even unlatch the shoes of Horace Greeley would be contamination and an insult to him whose integrity of purpose no honorable man would question.—Elkhart Union.

The Liberal Electoral vote for President is according to the above divided among the following gentlemen:

Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana	34
B. Gratz Browne, of Missouri	24
Blank, [Lousiana]	8
Horace Greeley	3
Ex-Gov. C. Jenkins of Georgia	2
D. Davis, of Illinois	1

A Cincinnati Widow.

It is said that the following letter was written by a bereaved widow in Cincinnati.

'DEAREST LOUISA:—Darling John died last night. Conjestion of the lungs. Our loss is his gain. I shall join him on the other shore. I have ordered the lovliest mohair for the funeral—made with polonaise, and trimmed with real point lace. Loss covered by insurance on the ten year plan; will be paid in sixty days. I know your sorrow with me. We had four doctors at two dollars a visit. Aunt Maria will not go into mourning, because she has just bought her fall and winter goods. Her bonnet is a straw. There is a balm in Gilead, but my heart is nearly broken. Send me a cut paper pattern of that casque of yours. Your devoted

Prices for the Holidays!

GREAT REDUCTION ON
Raisins, Currants, Peaches, Prunes, Teas,

Etc. We purchased 1000 boxes No. 1 Layer Raisins before the advance, and now offer them at 12½c per pound, or $2.50 per box of 25 lbs. This is equal to 10c per lb, and the lowest they have ever been in this market.

We also purchased a large lot of Zanta Currants. This fruit is generally considered low at 15c, we now offer the best quality at 10c.

The greatest reduction is on teas—selling 2 and 3 chests a day—no intermediate profits to pay, as we purchase direct of the importers and sell to the customers, thereby saving the profits of the Jobber, speculator and wholesaler. The failure of five of the largest tea importers of N. Y. has broken the tea market. We have taken advahtage of the situation, and purchased large quantities at low rates, and we now offer all grades 15c per pound lower than former prices

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

Owing to the fact that our boys want a short season of rest, after a long year's work, we will issue no paper next week. Bear this in mind or you will be asking for your paper next week.

How are your horses?

Beautiful winter weather but the roads are fearful icy.

J. O. St. Clair, returned last week from a visit to his old home in the Keystone State.

J. B. Stoll has sold his interest in the Laporte Argus, and Wadsworth & Kessler are now the proprietors.

H. W. Ford, has been in Iowa for several weeks past, but is now at home. He reports the condition of the west somewhat epizootic.

The minstrel performace last Friday evening was quite well attended, and went off as well as was expected. With a little practice the boys will do well.

The most shocking instance of modesty that we have heard of lately is that of a lady who refused to carry a watch in her bosom simply because it had hands.

The great tragedienne, Mrs Scott Siddons, will appear at Colerick's Opera House, Fort Wayne, next Friday evening. If you want to hear something grand, you should attend.

Now is the time to prepare for passing the winter evening pleasantly. Let socials and other entertainments be prepared. They will be a benefit as well as a pleasure.

Mrs. Samuel Colt, made $800,000 profit out of revolvers last year. She has a lovely daughter who will inherit $9,000,000. A friend suggests this would not be a bad colt to have.

Have you seen those beautiful musical Albums just received by Abright & Shepherd. Go in and hear them, and see them and buy one.

Mr. Davis has been doing quite a heavy business in the sale of drafts and in collections and other banking business during the last year, and this is a still greater reason why we should have a regular organized bank. Let some captalist come in and join with our citizens in establishing one.

Figs by the box or piece at the Bakery

Another effort will be made this week to finish up the work of right of away for the Baltimore line. This is the last chance and we trust there are none put what will act liberally towards this line. There is such a thing as its adopting another line farther away from us, and perhaps through Fort Waye, and if we want this road we will strike now while the iron is hot.

The cheapest place to buy candy is at Smith & Hare's.

If ever there was a dance that will prove satisfactory, it is the one to given at this place on next Tuesday evening.—The programme will be different from any ever yet had in this place, and those who delight in this will miss a great treat by remaining at home or going elsewhere Remember your ticket will only cost one dollar.

Administrator's Sale.

The administrators of the estate of C. S. Hare, deceased, are now selling, at private sale the immense stock of boots & shoes, belonging to the estate. The object is to sell at the lowest figures for cash only. Call and see their goods and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

—The Warsaw Union is grievously mistaken in its statement that the Alvord who is editing the New Era is the chairman of the Democratic state central committee.—Plymouth Democrat.

W. W. Humes, has just received a large stock of winter goods, consisting of gents ladies' Misses and children's winter ware.

Reader, are you a subscriber to the Courier? Have you paid your subscription for the last two years? If so your are happy. If not, why not? There are some who have not paid us a cent since we have been here. We want them to come up to the scratch by the first of January next. We cannot wait any longer. We are preparing a list to publs so that all may know who are delinquen

A fine assortment of Albums, suitable for holiday presents, just received at Gordon's Gallery.

The dedicatory ceremonies at the Baptist church last Wednesday evening, were quite largely attended. The edifice is a fine one, and all take a pride in its success. The debt, about $750, was about all lifted by a liberal subscription during the evening. Our Baptist friends may well feel proud over the achivement of so grand a result.

Fresh oysters by the can or dish at the Bakery.

Oyster Supper,

A grand oyster supper will be given at Case's Hall on Christmas Eve, Dec. 24th, for the benefit of the new Silver Cornet Band. The boys have been to considerable expense in purchasing new horns, and intend having a band that will be a credit to our place. There is no one but what ought to feel an interest in this matter, and patronize this affair to the extent of their means. They should receive every encouragement, and our citizens can be generous in this matter.

Go to Humes' and get yourself a nice pair of overshoes of the latest style.

—The Auburn Courier turns one column rule for Greeley. Mays has got a patent backside, thus enlarging his sheet and giving a large amount of reading matter—such as it is.—Kendallville Standard.

The editor of the Standard has not said patent, which accounts for the superabundence of dirt on hand. The fondest, dearest greatest hope of our lives has been that we would escape the playful sarcasm of the Standard. Now, that the hope is blasted, we feel that we have lived in vain.

The Darwinian theory is important if true; but what concerns the people vastly more is to know beyond peradventure that the place to go to get a good picture is at Gordon's gallery and now is the time to do it. Mr. Gordon has been sick for a long time, but is now at work again and is taking a hold of the picture business with a new zest. New improvements are being made, and now is the time to get good pictures cheap.

Handsome Toys, not easily broken, just the thing for children, at Abright & Shepherd's.

The backbone of the Fluke property has at last been broken. Our produce dealers, Messrs. Totten & Wood have purchased a business lot off of the west half of the east lot, facing south. They are already to work putting up a frame building for present use, until they can get material to build a nice brick. Now somebody buy the other lots, and in this way we will finally get our town improved. If Fluke was not so poor he might improve that fronting on Main street.

Go to Humes' and get a number No. 1 rubber boot and shoes, for the lowest prices.

Our Poor.—"God pity the poor," is a general expression, often used, and means with a great many, that He ought to do all the pitying, and relieve them from any action in the matter. One of our most worthy families have been brought down to want by a fearful seige of sickness and suffering, and a subscription was started, and over fifty dollars obtained for their relief. Some of our business men signed 25 and 50 cents. "God have mercy on their poor stingy souls," is another expression that comes in just now. But we are glad that we have a few liberal, whole souled, warm-hearted citizens, men and even boys that love to respond to a worthy cause with a generosity that ought to put to shame the niggardly donations of the former.

Go to Humes' and you can get anything in the Boot & Shoe line.

Go to Humes' and get a pair of winter cloth boots.

Fire at the Poor Farm!

Last Tuesday night, about 12 o'clock, the alarm of fire was given in our place. It proved to be at the Poor Farm, about a mile and a half away. A large number turned out, and it was well they did for through their exertions the main building was saved. The fire originated in a small put-house used as a kitchen. This and a new building adjoining, used as a kind of jail for unruly members, was entirely destroyed. Loss estimated at $1000. There was considerable blowing by the time our folks got there, especially by the corpulent portion of our citizens.

Those handsome sets just recived for the ladies, at Abright & Shepherd's jewelry store. New styles at cheap rates.

Swindled.—We hear many complaints from persons, who bought cloths of the peddlers, who perambulated this county a week or two ago. The buyers generally aver that the goods they bought are worth less, and the patterns are almost always short. Some of the individuals who bought on time, talk of resisting payment. This course will hardly pay, however, and these victims ought to consider what they have learned as worth something to them.—Press.

Go to Humes' and get your repairing done in good style.

Waterloo has been indulging in a prize fight. Two belligerant disposed individuals, got to fighting in the corporation, but were kindly interfered with, when an adjournment was made to the suburbs to fight it out. De Long and short of the matter was that a Summer lot was pulverized in a jiffey.

Go to Humes' and let Mart make you a pair of those nice tongue morroco legged sewed or pegged, boots.

What Paper to Take.

As the present year is drawing to a close, the reading public are looking the field over for good family papers for the year 1873, and just here we wish to say a word relative to the selection of such.—Every person, of course, has a right to select such a journal as he or she may choose, but notwithstanding that, every citizen is in a certain sense, obligated to the support of his home newspaper, for the interest of the two are closely allied. And yet how many of our farmers and citizens generally take a county paper. Out of nearly two thousand Democratic voters there is about one-fourth who take the Courier in this county. Great efforts are taken to make up clubs for foreign papers, and we don't see why the county paper ought not to come in for a share of attention. If all who take their county paper would say a word to neighbor who do not, it would result in good to all concerned.

Go and see the many new things just received by Abright & Shepherd for the holidays. No trouble to show them.

Just recived at Martin & Sons, a nice selection of holiday goods, embracing china tipped dolls, wax dolls, sets of china dishes, horses and riders, and many other articles to suit the little folks. Also a nice lot of mouth-organs, hair brushes, cloth brushes, etc., all to be sold at bottom prices. Give them a call before purchasing elsewhere.

All persons ought to be instructed how to shut a door. Few know how. As the rule, the door is shut by the wind, or it is pushed, slamed or banged shut. How delightful to the sensitive ear of a nervous invalid! Then the heavy step like horse on a bridge which some people have.—Another glides about the house so sylph-like that it is indeed the poetry of motion What a difference! Reader do try to learn how to shut a door, and to move around in the house, especially in a sick room.

The nicest assortment of candy in town is at Smith & Hare's.

A verdant youth, not more than a thousand miles from this portion of the original "foot.stool" is very anxious to know which is grammatically correct. To say, 'Boston is burning' or 'Boston is being burnt,' to say the 'street is paving' or the 'street is being paved. We are inclined to favor the opinion that 'is being burnt,' and 'is being paved,' are proper, for the following reasons. Suppose you wanted to express and idea like the following would say, 'Johny is spanking or Johny is being spanked? The difference to you may seem immaterial, but is certainly a matter of no little importance to Johny; and it is probable that if any choice were given him he would suddenly select the former alternative. Again, you say the 'missionary is eating,' which is very pleasant for the missionary, but a little change of syntax, if you say, 'the missionary is being eaten,' you yourself are not affected, but the missionary experiences a painful sensation.

The derangement of such sensitive and delicate organs as the kidney and bladder must be approached with tenderness, and the best, surest and safest medicine is without doubt Smolander's Buchu. It is soothing, healing and strengthening. It is also a special remedy for mental and physical debility, diabetes, gravel, loss of vitality, retention or incontinence of urine, female irregularities, and all debilitating, nervous maladies. It acts at once on the nervous structure, and is a positive cure for the above diseases.

FORT WAYNE, IND'A.

A Representative House.

Among the multitude of different branches of trade in Fort Wayne, none are of more importance than the boot and shoe trade. This branch is well represented; prominent among them all is the shoe house of Markley, Schrader & Co. They came to Fort Wayne in 1866, and by their gentlemanly deportment and close attention to business, they have acquired a trade perhaps not excelled by any house in their line. Not satisfied with bargains given their customers heretofore, they propose to do still better for them in the future. Their stock is very large, being a full line of everything needed for mens, boys and youths, women, Misses and children's wear. They are giving great bargains; one cannot know how cheap they are selling, unless they call. Examine the goods and learn prices, We advise all in want of boots, shoes or rubbers o give them a call. tf.

Lots of people that have never been in Fort Wayne and are not acquainted can find the Red Front clothing hall, No. 5, Keystone block. Any woman or child can find this place, and you will save from 20 to 25 cents on each dollar.

Notice of Administration.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley has been compelled to discontinue his lectures in New York on his African adventures, for the reason that the receipts fell short of the expense. It is stated that his failure is owing to poor elocution and badly written lectures......Rogers, the murderer of Policeman Donohue, was hung in Brooklyn, N. Y., last week......A proposition has been started in New York to erect a printers' monument to Mr. Greeley.

Near St. Joseph, Mo., a few days ago, an express train ran into a wagon crowded with people, which was attempting to cross the track, killing three persons, and fatally injuring two others......The owners of the lucky ticket which drew the capital prize ($75,000) in the Louisville lottery is a party of ten, most of whom live at Columbus, Ind.

A Greeley National Monument Association is forming at Boston, to raise $500,000 for the erection of an enduring testimonial to Mr. Greeley's memory; $175,000 have already been promised to the fund......Maj. Gen. Hancock, who succeeds Gen. Meade in the command of the Military Division of the Atlantic, will make New York his headquarters instead of Philadelphia, as heretofore......The editor of the Journal of Commerce, has brought Postmaster-General Creswell into Court, to see what right he has to demand full postage upon letters half-prepaid at the starting point. Mr. Stone will push the case to a legal decision......Mayor Hall, of New York, denies the story that he is to assume editorial management of the Herald......The New York Fifth Avenue Hotel was damaged by fire and water to the extent of $150,000, last week......The daughters of the late Mr. Greeley appeared before the Surrogate, at White Plains, N. Y., the other day, to offer for probate the last will of their father, executed Nov. 20, 1872. At the same time counsel appeared to contest this will, offering in its stead one dated January, 1871. The contestants are Samuel Sinclair, Richard H. Manning and Charles Storrs. Counsel for the contestants thought the will executed by Mr. Greeley before his death did great injustice, inasmuch as it gave all his property to Miss Ida, with the qualification that one-half of it was to be used by her at her own discression, to support and educate her sister Gabrielle, and that some relatives would be deprived of property intended for them. The Misses Greeley then declined to consider any proposals for compromise, and regular proceedings for the contest will ensue, on the ground of the incapacity of the testater to execute the will of 1872.

The Italians who intrusted themselves to a band of emigrant swindlers, who contracted to take them to South America but abandoned them in New York in hopeless destitution, are now lying at Castle Garden in a starving condition. Most of them do not know that they are not in Buenos Ayres. Immediate action on the part of Secretary Fish in their behalf has been called for by the authorities of New York.

The West.

The office of the New York Express has been destroyed by fire......S. N. Pike, the well-known liquor dealer, formerly of Cincinnati, died in New York last week......According to the "best authority," Mr. Greeley's vacant place on the New York Tribune has been offered to Vice-President Colfax......Rumor connects the name of Mayor A. Oakey Hall with the managing editorship of the New York Herald, at the expiration of his official term.

Cincinnati was the scene of a horrible accident the other day. A scaffolding at the water works gave way, precipitating eight men a distance of eight feet, killing four of them, and wounding the other four......Cairo has been convulsed by a $20,000 robbery, perpetrated upon one of her leading dry goods firm—Messrs. Blum & Amesar......The Scandinavian National Bank, of Chicago, has collapsed......Capt. Thompson, an old lake navigator, says the recent storm on Lake Superior was the severest he ever experienced.

The steamer Emma was burned in the Ohio river, below Evansville, a few days ago. Loss on boat and cargo about $40,000......Capt. Bogardus, champion pigeon-shooter, while out hunting near Elkhart, Ind., recently, received an ugly wound in the thigh by the accidental discharge of his fowling-piece.

The South.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., a few days ago, a desperado knocked down Mr. Colwell, a merchant, and, sitting down upon the prostrate man, stabbed and carved him in a horrible manner, killing him. Then, when his arrest was attempted, he shot and killed two policemen and wounded a third, afterward escaping across the river in a canoe......Two chivalrous editors—James H. Heyward and Malcolm J. Browning—conductors of rival sheets at Orangeburg, S. C., fought a duel the other day. We read that after the exchange of two shots without bloodshed the parties saluted and left the field......The Louisiana political muddle grows more complicated. The Pinchback or Custom-House Legislature convened in the State House on Monday, the 10th, and, after organising, immediately proceeded to pass resolutions impeaching Gov. Warmoth for high crimes and misdemeanors, Lieut. Gov. Pinchback assuming the duties of Governor. The Senate was organized as a High Court of Impeachment, Chief Justice Ludeling being sworn in as Presiding Judge of the Court. There was much excitement in the city, and serious apprehensions of bloodshed prevailed.

The large statue of Chief Justice Taney was unveiled at the Capitol building, in Baltimore, the other day......A large meeting was held in New Orleans, on the 11th, of citizens who regard the action of Judge Durell and the Custom House faction as an invasion of their rights. The speeches, one of which was by Gov. Warmoth, were temperate in tone. The Governor advised that an appeal be made to Congress for redress. A committee of 100 was appointed to visit Washington, lay their grievances before the President and Congress, and ask that the Federal troops be withdrawn from the State House and the people be left to govern themselves, or else that the present unbearable conflict of authority be quieted by the establishment of a Military Government over the State.

Washington.

Barney Woods was hung at Washington, last week, for the murder of Samuel N. Cheeseman, in August last......It is said an attempt will be made during the present session of Congress to secure the admission of Colorado and New Mexico as States.

Judge McArthur, of the Criminal Court of Washington, rules that a landlord is the proper judge of who shall be received into his house......The President has appointed Gen. Croxton, of Kentucky, Minister to Ecuador.

Wm. Carey, of Galena, Ill., has been appointed United States District Attorney for Utah, vice George C. Bates, removed......The Commission appointed to inspect the Minnesota division of the Northern Pacific railroad in their report to the Secretary of the Interior, say they have found it judiciously located, well constructed and adequately equipped......The House has passed a bill removing the political disabilities of Lucius Quintus Curtius Lamar, recently elected to Congress from Mississippi......The President and family attended the wedding of ex-Secretary Borie's niece, at Philadelphia, last week.

Foreign.

The new President of Mexico, Lerdo de Tejada, was formally inducted into his office on the 7th of December.

A terrific gale swept over England on the 9th inst., which proved very disastrous on land and water. In London it was particularly severe. Houses were unroofed, street-lamps and signs blown down, awnings demolished, and pedestrians dashed violently to the ground. Three pinnacles of the tower of St. Thomas' church were blown down while the congregation were at worship, and, falling on the roof, crushed through into the body of the church, creating a wild panic, and many people were injured in the rush which followed. Many marine disasters are reported. Eight ships were blown ashore at Plymouth alone. Ireland and Wales were visited by the same gale, many towns being flooded. In Cork the damage was very great, several vessels being blown ashore......The Duke of Noailles, French Minister at Washington, has received telegrams from Paris assuring him that President Thiers will be sustained, but that he will have to make some concessions......Advices from the Cape of Good Hope report a fierce battle in the interior between two factions of native Africans, many of whom, it is stated, were armed with Enfield rifles, and other improved weapons. About 1,000 natives were slaughtered......The Committees Reform bill has passed the upper house of the Prussian Diet by a vote of 116 to 91......A Paris telegram announces the appointment of Goulard as Minister of the Interior; Leon Say, Minister of Finance; Fourtier, Minister of Public Works; and Colmont, Prefect of the Department of the Seine. It is added that these appointments indicate the termination of the crisis, and secure to the Government the support of the Right Center and Left Center.

In London, six houses were blown down and forty persons injured by the late gale......Jules Favre and fourteen other moderate Republicans, with ninety-two members of the Left Center, have given to the National Assembly their views of reforms needed to assure peace to France. They suggest the prolongation of Thiers' term four years, the election of Vice-President, the partial renewal of the Assembly yearly, the establishment of the principle of Ministerial responsibility, the creation of a second Chamber, and the settlement of the relation between the Executive and Legislative Departments.

Gambetta, together with Louis Blanc and 86 other French Radicals, has issued a manifesto, in which he demands that the National Assembly be dissolved and a new election held, in order to secure an Assembly free from the factions that disable the present body, and undivided in its support of Thiers and the Republic.

Political.

It is said the Prisident is greatly disgusted at the disgraceful political squabble in Louisiana, and that he is opposed to any interference, save so far as may be necessary to prevent open revolution and bloodshed.

The name of Henry Clews, the New York banker, is being urged in connection with the Secretaryship of the Treasury....It is announced that Senator Sumner is preparing a speech in support of his resolution proposing to erase the names of the battles of the civil war from the Army Register and regimental flags. It is added that an Administration Senator has prepared an amendment to his resolution, proposing to abolish Bunker Hill, Concord and Lexington.

The official vote of Michigan for President has just been published, and foots up: Grant, 138,811; Greeley, 78,650; others, 4,118; majority for Grant, 60,161. The whole vote of the State is 4,040 less than in 1868......John J. Patterson has been elected to succeed Sawyer as Senator from South Carolina. The Hon. John J. P. was arrested on a charge of bribery a few hours after his election.

J. J. Patterson, the new Senator from South Carolina, hails from Pennsylvania, and was formerly editor of the Harrisburg Telegraph, Cameron's home organ......The next House of Representatives will consist of 292 members, an increase of 48 over any previous Congress.

General.

The New York World is authority for the statement that a number of business men have formed a joint stock company for the purchase of Samana Bay, in San Dominao.

FORTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

Friday, Dec. 6.—Senate.—Bills introduced: Cole, to withdraw from circulation national bank notes, instituting therefor legal tenders; Morton, to refund to the States the interest on the money borrowed to equip United States troops in the late war; Morton, creating a commission to settle claims under the Geneva award; Ferry, for the repeal of the iron-clad oath......Wright (Iowa) offered a resolution directing the Finance Committee to inquire as to the relief of the stringency in the money market, and the propriety of providing for the further issue of legal tender notes......Rice called up the resolution asking the President for information regarding the application for sending troops to Arkansas, and the action thereon. Referred to Military Committee.

House.—The bill abolishing the offices of Assessor and Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, and transferring their duties to the Collectors, was passed......Harris introduced a bill for payment for property destroyed by authority of Government during the war......The Centennial Committee was instructed to inquire into the feasibility of taking the census in 1875.

Monday, Dec. 9.—Senate.—Bills introduced: Pomeroy, for the relief of settlers on the Cherokee lands of Kansas; Wright (Iowa), for a military road in New Mexico; Morton, refunding to the States interest on moneys borrowed to equip United States troops in the late war; Cole, relating to the payment of duties; Fenton, providing for the payment of pensions to pensioners' widows or heirs in case of death during the pendency of application; Carpenter, providing that the annual session of the Supreme Court shall convene on the first Monday of October in each year......Referred: Sumner's Presidential one-term joint resolution......Passed: The Ohio River Bridges bill; for the relief of Lizzie Gilmer, Postmistress at Pittsfield, Ill.

House.—Banks (Mass.) offered a resolution fixing the salary of the President at $50,000 per annum; restricting the term of office of the President and Vice President to six years, the President to be ineligible to re-election; and providing for their election by the people at the same time that Congressmen are chosen......Hibbard (N. H.) offered an amendment to the Constitution authorizing Congress to fix a uniform day for State elections......Bills introduced: Shellabarger, facilitating postal telegraphic communication; Morgan (Ohio), to secure justice to the wool-growers of the United States; Claggett (Montana), to promote education in the Territories, also to secure a more efficient administration of Indian affairs, also for the removal of obstructions to navigation in the upper Missouri river; Blair (Mich.), extending for four years the Southern Claims Commission; Dunnell (Minn.), authorizing the bridging of the Mississippi, at LaCrosse, by the Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad; Negley, to complete the James River and Kanawha canal. Bills were also introduced to repeal the tax on spirits from fruit; to reduce taxes; repealing the usury section of the Currency act; amending the Postal act; and providing for the collection of statistics of inland and coastwise trade between the States......Mr. Hooper's bill proposing an appropriation of $20,000 to the Boston firemen for their heroic conduct in saving the $13,000,000 in the Sub-Treasury during the late fire gave rise to considerable discussion. It was referred to the Appropriation Committee......A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill removing all political disabilities was negatived......The Speaker announced the select Centennial Committee, as follows: Kelley (Pa.), Dawes (Mass.), Maynard (Tenn.), Sargent (Cal.), Hawley (Ct.), Havens (Mo.), Cox (N. Y.), Marshall (Ill.), and Hancock (Texas.)

Tuesday, Dec. 10.—Senate.—Bills introduced: By Sherman, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue coupons in exchange for registered bonds; Cameron, upon the claim against Japan for indemnity......The Finance Committee reported in favor of the bill prohibiting the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia; referred back to the Judiciary Committee......Cole offered a resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution as to provide for the election of President, Vice President and United States Senators by a direct vote of the people.

House.—Bills introduced and referred: Establishing a new scale of fees and salaries of customs officers; repealing the Bankruptcy act; repealing the special tax on retailers of leaf tobacco; repealing the Enforcement act; abolishing the stamp duty on bank checks; for a railroad bridge across the Ohio river at Owensboro, Ky......The Soldiers' and Sailors' Homestead bill came up, and was discussed at length without action......The remainder of the day's session was devoted to the consideration of the Indian Appropriation bill.

Wednesday, Dec. 11.—Senate.—Bills passed: Placing colored soldiers on the same footing with white soldiers as to bounty lands; establishing an assay office at Helena, Montana......The House bill abolishing the office of Assessor of Internal Revenue was reported, with amendments that the office shall cease only in such districts as the Commissioner shall deem practicable, and authorizing the appointment of twenty-five additional revenue agents.

House.—Passed: The Indian Appropriation bill......The Judiciary Committee was instructed to report as to the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States as relates to oppressive freight charges......The House resumed the consideration of the Soldiers' Bounty Land bill. A long and acrimonious discussion of the merits of the bill ensued, and the bill finally went over.

THE LAST HORROR.

Burning of a Portion of the New York Fifth Avenue Hotel—Eleven Servant Girls Burned to Death.

The list of horrors that are charged to the account of the closing year has had a most deplorable addition in the fire at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, in New York. Eleven human cinders, and pecuniary damage to the amount of $150,000, are the net results of the calamity. A New York paper gives the following particulars of the terrible affair:

The fire originated in the Twenty-third street wing, occupied by the 500 servants employed in the hotel, through which a wooden spiral staircase runs from top to bottom, and also the laundry elevator. The smoke was first detected by a gentleman boarder about retiring to bed, who informed the clerk. The alarm was given, and when the employes of the house reached the upper stories, occupied by the servants, the flames had gained furious headway on the top floor where the spiral staircase was ablaze. The servants in the fifth and sixth stories were roused with difficulty, and escaped hurriedly in their night dresses. By this time consternation had spread among the guests, nearly all of whom vacated the premises more or less panic-stricken.

The scrub-women, occupying two rooms in the seventh story, were completely cut off from escape by the stairway. A window opened on the roof, a few feet below, but it was barred up by a strong iron grating, intended to prevent any ingress from the quarters of the late servants. It is said this grating could have been readily wrenched loose, but the women who perished had doubtless lost all presence of mind, for their roasted bodies were found huddled together in the center of the room.

The fire originated probably through the carelessness of some of the female servants, and crept rapidly upward between the lath partition to the wooden cockloft, covered with tarred roof, where the unfortunate women perished. It must have been burning some time before the alarm was given.

The bodies of the victims were taken in ambulances to the Morgue. The scene at the Morgue was truly heartrending. From 8 o'clock until 5 a constant stream of men and women viewed the bodies of the unfortunate women who were burned or scalded to death in the fire-trap attic. It is estimated that over 25,000 persons viewed the charred remains, most of whom were attracted by morbid curiosity, though many were searching for relatives and friends who had been employed in the hotel. The police had great difficulty in restraining women, thousands of whom clamored for admission. When many of them confronted the terrible sight, they began a terrible weeping, praying, and deported themselves extravagantly. Several were led off in a fainting condition, and one young woman, who was accompanied by her mother, fell in a fit and was removed by force.

The bodies were ranged side by side, in rough pine coffins, in the yard at the western end of the Morgue. Several among the deceased had been burned almost to cinders, while others had been literally roasted. In some instances the flesh was scalded from the bones.

The Herald editorially says it is stated that gross carelessness was apparent in the condition of the warming apparatus, and that there was too much anxiety to keep the fire a secret, and too little effort made to save the unfortunate girls. The whole subject will no doubt be thoroughly investigated.

The losses are estimated at from $130,000 to $150,000.

Western Patents.

The following Western patents were issued from the United States Patent Office for the week ending November 12, 1872, as reported by Gridley & Warner, Patent Attorneys and Solicitors of Patents, No. 135 South Clark street, Chicago, Ill.:

ILLINOIS.

Bottoming shot metal ware—William C. Bruson, Chicago.

Printing telegraph instrument—Elisha Gray, Chicago.

Portable fence—Joseph J. McMakin, Middletown.

Construction of step-ladder—Calvin G. Udell, Chicago.

Harvester—William R. Low, Sandwich.

Machine for tapping gas-fittings—Richard T. Crane, Chicago.

Uterine supporter—George Dirkin, Freeport.

Wheel for vehicles—William A. Lewis, Chicago.

Reversible pinion for watches—Nicholas Staflin, Chicago.

Cultivator—James G. Stowe, Bloomington.

MICHIGAN.

Railway cross-tie—Daniel C. Kallam, Pontiac.

Grain thrasher—Frederick Leadbeter, Ypsilanti.

Washing fluid—Martha A. Sanderson, Fremont.

INDIANA.

Hub for carriage wheels—Joseph Ridge, Richmond.

Hand corn-sheller—Julius O. Frasier, Werthington.

Fly-catcher—Charles E. Penny, Fort Wayne.

Baby-jumper—Seth G. Bigelow, Silver Lake.

Corn-planter—James Rice, Prairie Creek.

MISSOURI.

Washing machine—William Parker, Rolla.

KANSAS.

Steam wash-boiler—John C. Nobles, Lawrence.

Girder and cord for iron bridges—Theodore B. Mills and Byron M. Smith, Iola.

Vault light—Thaddeus Hyatt, Atchison.

MINNESOTA.

Fruit-knife gauge—Charles H. Howe, Minneapolis.

Queer Amputation.

For some time past Mr. John Rafferty, one of the most responsible and skillful engineers on the Rock Island railroad, has been seriously inconvenienced by what many considered a tumor over one of his eyes. He was treated for a tumor, and one operator made a local application and warranted a cure. But for all the difficulty was not removed and the pain became intense. Sunday afternoon Drs. Grimes and Ulrich made an examination of the case and found another eyebrow underneath the true eyebrow. The hair on the duplicate was nearly as long and thick as on the original. The physicians cut out the extra member, concluding that two eyebrows were enough for one man. We are informed that the case is without a parallel in medical history.—Des Moines (Iowa) Register.

Youthful Precocity.

Several months ago, a little boy named Seger became interested in the children of the Howard Mission, and determined to do what he could for them. It is not much, apparently, a boy of seven years can accomplish in this diaection, but he went to work with a will, saved the pennies given him, ran off errands, and picked up bits of iron and sold them. On Saturday he opened his treasure-box, and found therein two dollars and eighty-three cents, with which he bought a broken-lock pistol, and has twenty-eight cents left. So much for perseverance.—Danbury News.

THE DEPARTMENTS.

Annual Report of the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Treasury.

The Report of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Postal Telegraphy—Views of the Postmaster General.

THE ARMY.

Summary of the Report of Secretary Belknap.

The report of the Secretary of War shows that the expenditures of that department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, were $36,372,157.20, being a reduction of $427,834.62 on the previous year.

The total estimate for military appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, is $33,801,378.78.

The estimates of the Chief Engineer are submitted separately, as presented by that officer, namely:

Fortifications and other works of defense....	$3,725,000
River and harbor improvements....	12,302,800
Public buildings and grounds and Washington aqueduct....	612,024
Total....	$16,639,824

About one-sixth of the army is stationed in the Southern States. The Secretary states that "it is hoped that an improved condition of affairs in that section may permit the withdrawal, at an early day, of a portion of the forces."

The expenditures for the service of the Quartermaster's Department during the year have been $12,517,631.37.

The number of artillery horses purchased during the year is estimated at 3,277; mules, 209; number of horses in service, 9,729; mules, 8,758.

The expenditures for clothing during the year were $667,529.63; for railroad transportation, $1,300,000; wagon transportation, $1,100,000; water transportation, $[illegible],373.52; stage transportation, $48,975.84.

Under the act of Congress providing for the relief of loyal citizens in certain loyal districts of the South, the Quartermaster General has examined and transmitted to the accounting officers for settlement 665 claims for Quartermasters' stores taken during the war, amounting, as allowed, to $367,102.72; 274 others, amounting to $396,100.75, have been rejected. There are still 10,351 of these claims on file, amounting in the aggregate to $6,857,006.56.

The 74 National Cemeteries contain the remains of 317,962 deceased soldiers. Fifty-eight of these cemeteries have been permanently inclosed.

Subsistence stores to the amount of $192,186.11 have been issued to the Indian tribes of the West.

The monthly army reports of sick and wounded during the year represent an annual mean strength of 24,101 white and 2,494 colored soldiers. The total number of deaths during the year was 367 white and 54 colored soldiers.

The Rock Island bridge has been completed, and will be immediately opened for railroad and wagon use.

In conformity to the two acts of Congress, passed last spring, relating to the bridging of the Mississippi river, the proper site for the bridge at La Crosse, Wis., has been determined.

A satisfactory state of proficiency in discipline and study at the West Point Military Academy is reported. The number of failures to master the academic course, including original rejections, was 87; the number of admissions, 95; the total number of cadets now at the academy is 240. There are 53 vacancies, caused by failures upon preliminary examinations, discharge of cadets for deficiency, and the failure of Congressional representatives to select suitable candidates for the past September examination. The standard of proficiency in the corps of cadets has much improved, but great obstruction to the usefulness which the academy might otherwise attain in fitting scientific and highly educated young men for the public service is experienced, because of the large amount of time necessarily expended in giving new cadets a thorough knowledge of the mere elementary branches of learning, which they should have acquired before entering the academy. Under the present system a large percentage of the candidates who seek admission to the academy fail in their preliminary examination, or are found incapable of mastering the academic course during the first year. Many of those who go to West Point with the prestige of high scholarship obtained elsewhere, fail, under examination, in the very rudiments of an education. That such failure cannot be charged to a too severe examination is shown by the fact that the qualifications demanded of candidates are less than those established by perhaps a majority of the higher scholastic institutions of the country; and the examinations are not conducted more rigidly than is absolutely necessary. A considerable modification of the existing mode of selection of cadets seems to be demanded, as the only effectual remedy for this evil.

THE TREASURY.

Synopsis of the Annual Report of Secretary Boutwell.

The annual report of the Secretary is too lengthy a document to admit of its reproduction in full in our columns. It opens with a recommendation that the salaries of the Assistant Secretaries be increased, with a view of retaining competent and faithful officers in the public service. The report gives in detail the figures showing the receipts and expenditures of the Treasury for the fiscal year, which, as they were amply summarized in the President's message, it is unnecessary to present here. The total reduction of the public debt from March 1, 1869, to Nov. 1, 1872, was, in round figures, $363,696,999.87, and the reduction in the annual interest, $24,187,851. The receipts for the remaining three-quarters of the fiscal year are estimated at $218,000,000, and the expenditures at $173,700,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, the revenue is estimated at $320,300,000, the expenditures at $286,600,000, and the surplus for reduction of the debt, $33,700,000. The reduction of taxation since the close of the war, secured by various acts, is estimated at $248,651,000 in the internal revenue, and $60,699,171 in customs.

Since the institution of the sinking fund in 1869, and in accordance with the act of Feb. 25, 1862, there has been purchased on this account, up to and including June 30, 1872, $98,367,600 in bonds of the various issues known as 5-20s, at a net cost in gold of $94,097,243.82. In addition to these purchases for the sinking funds, bonds have been purchased to the amount of $178,237,950, at a net cost in currency of $195,008,288.53, or an estimated cost in gold of $163,376,054.35.

The imports and exports of the United States for the fiscal year were $1,070,641,163, and of this vast trade only 27½ per cent. was in American vessels. The acts of Congress allowing a drawback on foreign articles used in the construction of American vessels have given encouragement to ship-building, but Mr. Boutwell is of the opinion that this measure is inadequate to the revival of our decaying commerce. "When," he says, "we consider that nearly three-fourths of the foreign commerce of the country is under foreign flags, it is plain that there can be no considerable and speedy change unless the Government shall act at once, and in a liberal and comprehensive spirit."

The details of our trade with foreign countries are also represented as unsatisfactory. The imports on merchandise for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, were $626,595,077, and the exports, estimated in gold, were $444,046,086, showing a balance against the country of $182,548,991. The imports of merchandise for the year 1872 were $13,298,983 less than for the year 1871. The exports of wheat, flour, raw cotton, cotton manufactures, gold and silver, firearms, manufactures of leather, illuminating oil and beef fell off $82,066,325, while there was a gain of $68,767,392 in the exports of corn, furs, hides, skins, bacon, hams, lard, leaf tobacco, manufactures of iron, wood, leather, and many minor articles. There was an increase of exports in every branch of manufactures except cotton, leather, and firearms. The decrease of our exports in wheat and wheat flour was $12,000,000; raw cotton, $37,000,000; manufactured cotton, $1,250,000; gold and silver, $11,800,000; firearms, $12,000,000; manufactures of leather, $600,000; illuminating oils, $3,500,000, and beef, $2,000,000. The statistics of imports show an increase of $700,000 in coffee, $18,000,000 in sugar, nearly $6,000,000 in tea, nearly $8,000,000 in raw wool, $2,000,000 in pig iron, $10,000,000 in manufactures of iron, $5,000,000 in manufactures of cotton, $8,000,000 in manufactures of silk, and about $20,000,000 in manufactures of wool.

On account of an expected continuance of the depreciation of the value of silver, the Secretary recommends the discontinuance of the use of silver coinage for home circulation. He says:

"In the last ten years the commercial value of silver has depreciated about 3 per cent. as compared with gold, and its use as currency has been discontinued by Germany and some other countries. The financial condition of the United States has prevented the use of silver as currency for more than ten years, and I am of opinion that upon grounds of public policy no attempt should be made to introduce it, but that the coinage should be limited to commercial purposes and designed exclusively for commercial uses with other nations. The intrinsic value of a metallic currency should correspond to its commercial value, or metal should be used only for the coinage of tokens redeemable by the Government at their nominal value. As the depreciation of silver is likely to continue, it is impossible to issue coin redeemable in gold without ultimate loss to the Government, for when the difference becomes considerable holders will present the silver for redemption and leave it in the hands of the Government to be disposed of, subsequently, at a loss. If the policy should be adopted of issuing silver coin irredeemable, but whose intrinsic value should correspond to gold, the time must come when the country would suffer from the presence of a depreciated silver currency, not redeemable by Government nor current in the channels of trade."

The Secretary advises that authority be given for the coinage of a silver dollar that shall be as valuable as the Mexican dollar for use in the China trade, as a means of facilitating trade with our Celestial friends.

The Secretary presents strong arguments against the abandonment of our national banking system, which has been sometimes proposed. He considers the bank paper and our greenback currency the necessary complements of each other. If the banks alone furnished the circulating medium, they would be able to increase or diminish its volume at pleasure, and thus hold the most important business interests of the country at their mercy. But, argues the Secretary, there should be provision for a certain degree of elasticity in the currency, on account of the regular recurrence of a large temporary demand for money to move the crops to market every autumn. The power to meet this demand, he insists, should be lodged in the financial department of the Government. As to a return to specie payments, that can be reached by relative or actual contraction of the currency. As the country is not now prepared for the actual withdrawal of any part of the circulating medium, the only course is to await a growth and development of the country and its trade which, if there is no proportionate increase of paper, will gradually equalize the two kinds of currency. This point, the Secretary thinks, will be reached at no distant day, through the increase of our population, and the more general use of paper money in the Pacific States, Texas, and the South generally.

THE CURRENCY.

Extracts from the Report of the Comptroller.

The following extracts from the report of the Comptroller of the Currancy will be found of interest:

The National Currency act became a law on the 25th of February, 1863, and nearly ten years have therefore elapsed since the organization of the system. Since then two thousand and sixty-one national banks have been organized; twenty-one of these have failed, and ninety-six gone into voluntary liquidation, leaving nineteen hundred and forty-four banks in existence on Nov. 1, 1872.

The following table will exhibit the progress of the system from October, 1863, to October, 1872. [Only the first and last years are given below.—Ed.]

The whole amount of circulation issued and unredeemed on Nov. 1, 1872, including circulation of banks which have ceased to do business, was $342,593,470.

The act of June 3, 1864, limited the issue of notes of circulation to three hundred millions of dollars. The act of March 3, 1865, provided that one-half of this amount shall be apportioned according to "the representative population," and the remainder among associations formed in the different States, District of Columbia, and Territories, "having due regard to the existing banking capital resources and business of each State, District, and Territory." The three hundred millions of circulation authorized were not, however, distributed in accordance with the act of March 3, 1865, already quoted. To remedy this inequality, the act of July 12, 1870, was passed, providing for an additional issue of circulating notes, amounting to fifty-four millions of dollars, to be distributed among those States having less than their proportion. This additional circulation has been distributed to associations already organized, or in process of organization.

The following table will exhibit the amount of circulation outstanding and authorized to be issued to each State, and the amount to which each State is entitled upon the basis of population and wealth:

The final distribution of the fifty-four millions will still leave a deficiency of forty millions in different States of the Union, which will require to be filled before the proportion among the several States will be equalized upon the basis of wealth and population. This deficiency arises from the fact that while fifty-four millions of new circulation were authorised, there was, at the time of the passage of the act, a deficiency existing of ninety-four millions of dollars.

Section 6 of the act of July, 1870, provides that, after the whole fifty-four millions of circulation shall have been distributed, twenty-five millions additional shall be withdrawn from banking associations organized in States having an excess, and distributed among States having less than their proportion, first, by reducing, in such States, the circulation of all banks having more than one million of dollars, to that amount; and, secondly, by withdrawing from other banks having a circulation exceeding $300,000 their circulation pro rata in excess of that amount. Under this act it will be the duty of the Comptroller, as soon as the amount of circulation authorized shall have been issued to make requisition upon the banks indicated as prescribed. The twenty-five millions of circulation would be withdrawn from the following cities and States: From four banks in the city of New York, $5,018,000; from thirty-six banks in the city of Boston, $11,493,000; from fifty-three country banks in Massachusetts, $2,894,000; from fifteen banks in Connecticut, $2,997,000; from sixteen banks in the city of Providence, $2,688,000. This would reduce the circulation of all the banks of Massachusetts, of Rhode Island, and of Connecticut to $300,000, without reference to the business of each. If the banks do not respond to these requisitions—and, as their notes are scattered throughout the whole country, it will be impracticable for them to do so—the Comptroller is required at the end of one year to sell a sufficient amount of bonds and redeem their notes as they come into the Treasury, until the whole amount required shall have been returned. The notes will not come to the Treasury for redemption unless first asserted by the brokers and resold by them to new national banks about to be organized. This will encourage the the objectionable practice of authorizing new national banks with circulation upon the condition that currency shall be purchased of brokers in the market at from four to six per cent. premium—a practice which should not be encouraged or authorized by law. The Comptroller therefore recommends the repeal of this section, and the authorization of the issue of five millions of dollars of additional circulation annually for the next five years, to be distributed among the States which are deficient.

This, with the fifty-four millions of circulation recently authorized, will probably furnish all the additional currency required during the next five years for the establishment of new national banks in the States which are deficient, and virtually inaugurate a free banking system.

The Comptroller also recommends that the law be so amended that national banks may be organized in accordance with its provisions, without circulation, upon the deposit of ten thousand dollars of United States bonds with the Treasurer, instead of the deposit of one-third of the capital paid up, as now required.

Section 24 of the act provides that the worn-out and mutilated circulating notes of the national banks "shall be burned to ashes in the presence of four persons, one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, one by the Comptroller of the currency, one by the Treasurer of the United States, and one from the association, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe." From the organization of the system in 1868 to Nov. 1, 1872, $86,695,305, more than one-fourth of the whole amount issued, has been returned to this office for destruction, as follows:

Previous to Nov. 1, 1865....	$175,490
During the year ended Oct. 31, 1866....	1,050,382
During the year ended Oct. 31, 1867....	3,401,325
During the year ended Oct. 31, 1868....	4,602,825
During the year ended Oct. 31, 1869....	8,603,729
During the year ended Oct. 31, 1870....	14,305,689
During the year ended Oct. 31, 1871....	24,344,047
During the year ended Oct. 31, 1872....	30,211,720

It is probable that the amount of mutilated currency to be returned hereafter for reissue will exceed thirty millions of dollars annually, and that the whole amount of national bank circulation will be reissued as often as once in ten years.

POSTAL TELEGRAPHY.

The Postmaster-General's Annual Report.

Postmaster General Creswell's report is chiefly devoted to postal telegraphy. A formidable array of facts is submitted, showing—

That the Government originally built and owned the telegraph, and only relinquished its management because its facilities were then so imperfectly appreciated.

That all the arguments offered now against postal telegraphy were offered originally to the carrying of the mails, and that sending messages by telegraph is but a legitimate sequence of mail carrying, since the only difference is in speed of transmission.

That so long as telegraphy remains in the hands of a private monopoly, neither the Government nor the public can receive the accommodation to which they are entitled, nor at at a cost reasonable when compared with the profits of the telegraphic business, nor with the rates paid in every other country.

That the objection to placing important secrets in the hands of Government agents is transparently silly when it is remembered that the temptations to misuse the telegraph now, managed by men having enormous business interests, is far greater than it could be if conducted by Government employes, sworn to fidelity, and bound by law governing the Government as well as private persons.

That no existing corporation has sought to adapt itself to public wants; that facilities have only been supplied where they were certain to be privately profitable, and not where they were most needed.

That the Government can purchase any of the existing lines at a fair appraisal, and pay the whole cost within a few years, at largely reduced rates.

It will be observed that the President recommends the postal telegraphy, but believes it may be expedient to postpone it to the next Congress.

One of Mr. Greeley's Last Letters.

One of Mr. Greeley's last letters was to Alex. K. McClure, bearing date of the last day Mr. Greeley was at his editorial office. It was written in reply to one expressing sympathy with Mr. Greeley for the loss of his wife and the political misfrotune that so suddenly followed:

New York, Nov. 10, 1872.

My Dear Friend: I am a man of many sorrows, and doubtless have deserved them; but I beg to say that I do not forget the gallant though luckless struggle you made in my behalf. I am not well.

Yours, etc.,

Horace Greeley.

Good Points of a Cow.

Observation and experience have taught some rules to be observed in the choice of good milkers, which, though not infallible, are by no means to be despised. A few doggerel verses, which appeared some months since in the Farmers' Magazine, states what are popularly considered in England the points of a good cow, though, as already remarked, it is a rare thing to find them all combined in one animal; and, therefore, this brief cow poem is to some little extent a fancy sketch. As now quoted, it is slightly altered from the original:

She's long in her face, she's fine in her horn,
She'll quickly get fat without cake or corn;
She's clean in her jaws, and full in her chine,
She's heavy in flank, and wide in her loin.

She's broad in her ribs, and long in her rump,
She's straight flat-backed, without e'er a hump;
She's wide in her hips, and calm in her eyes,
She's fine in her shoulders, and thin in her thighs.

She's light in her neck, and small in her tail,
She's wide in her breast, and will fill the milk pail,
She's fine in her bone, and silky of skin,
She's fry without—a meat market within.

To state in prose the characteristics of a good milker, as a guide in purchasing dairy stock:

1. Youth. A cow is in her prime at from four to six years, and the best paying time to buy is just after the birth of her second or third calf.

2. Prominence and fullness of milk veins, and velvety softness of skin. The milk veins run down on either side of the animal toward the udder, and are easily perceptible to the eye, or can be readily found by pressure of the hand, if the animal is not over-fat. The skin should be soft and mellow, not hard, rough and "staring."

3. Symmetry, fullness and softness of the udder. It should be broad, well spread out, projecting behind the legs, and also reaching forward under the belly. There should be a softness and thinness to the touch, and an absence of fleshiness and thickness.

4. Perfect number and condition of teats. If one teat is wanting, about a fourth less milk will be the result. A cow's udder is not, as some suppose, a barrel with four taps, but is divided into four different compartments, called "milk glands," each of which has its own tap or teat. It is not only important that the full number of teats be present and in working order, but it is desirable that they be well placed, not crowded together, but pretty far and uniformly apart; rather long and tapering; all pointing out and downwards; equal in size and even in appearance.

5. Docility and quietness of disposition. These are indicated by large, mild and clear eyes, and an air of contentment generally. A cow that is quiet and contented feeds at ease, chews her cud with entire satisfaction, and will secrete and yield more milk than any restless and turbulent animal having similar milking characteristics in other respects.

Rules for Measurement.

The following rules for measuring corn and liquids will be useful to many of our readers:

1. Shocked corn: Measure the length, width and depth of the crib in feet; multiply the three dimensions and their product by eight; then cut off two figures to the right; those on the left will be so many barrels, and those on the right so many hundredth of a barrel.

2. Unshocked corn: Multiply as in rule first in the above example, and the product obtained by five and a half; then cut off two figures on the right; those on the left will be so many barrels, and those on the right so many hundredths of a barrel.

For grain, fruit, herbs, in house or box, find the length, breadth and depth; multiply them together; then annex two ciphers and divide the product by four hundred and twenty-four. Answer in bushels, pecks and quarts.

3. Liquors: Find the length in inches from the bung, the under edge of the chime, multiply it into itself twice, and the product by five hundred and seventy. Answer in gallons, quarts, pints and gills.

Measure three hundred and seventy feet on each side, and you have, lacking one inch, one square mile.

Sweeney in Horses.

Sweeneyed shoulder in horses is not a disease of the shoulder originally, but is a representative of other diseased parts, through sympathetic action of the limbs from the feet.

A horse suffering severe pain from bone spavin for months will exhibit sweeney or shrunken hip as a result of the morbid action of the diseased parts. All diseases of the fore feet affect the shoulders. Canker, contraction, founder, gravel, prick from a nail, are affections of the feet only. Some people will say that such a horse is chest-foundered while the horse apparently perishes in the chest. This is caused by the horse standing with his fore feet stretched out forward. If a man were to remain with his arms stretched forward, his chest would suffer the same way. Contraction is not so much a disease as the result of bad management on the part of the smith in shoeing the horse.

"Sericulture, or How to Make £100 Per Acre of Ground."

A new treatise on rearing silkworms, is just out in London. It gives the palm to the white mulberry tree as a food producer, against the morus multicaulis, which once created such a furore in England and America. It shows how to accomplish the difficult feat of making silkworm culture profitable. China earns by its silk $85,000,000 annually; Japan, $25,000,000; Italy, $11,000,000; and France over $4,000,000, while England and America (outside of California) produce almost no silk. With six million mulberry trees and three crops of silk a year, the Californians expect to produce two million pounds of silk within two or three years.

Useful Recipes.

A BIT of glue, dissolved in skimmed milk, will restore crape.

STRONG lye put in hard water will make it as soft as rain water.

HERE is said to be a good cement for sealing cans: 2 ounces rosin, 1 ounce shellac, ½ ounce white wax.

THE following is excellent for spiced plums: 7 pounds plums, 3½ pounds sugar, 1 ounce ground cloves, 1 ounce cinnamon, 1 quart vinegar; boil one-half hour.

TAKE an old penny, or a piece of copper, put in a teacup, and pour enough vinegar on it to cover it; let it stand until verdigris appears; rub the verdigris on the ringworm, and I warrant a cure.

Alexis.

Alexis the young, the beautiful, has been toasting us in the wine of memory and the syllabub of gush. 'Twas in Singapore he did it. He protests that he doth love us much, and, like Romeo, hath lent love eyes. This is what he says of us: That we are a country of splendid men and handsome women, and that of all things he wants to visit us again. He declares that America has not only the most beautiful ladies in the world, but more in proportion to the population than any other country. Of our splendor and beauty we are already well aware; it needs not that a crowned head of effete, tyrannical, gore-stained and luxurious Yurrup should give us all this information; still it is gratifying. But it is with sorrow and with compassion that we observe the wild ingratitude of the Duke toward "newspaper interviewers." He says that they are the only things he doesn't like about us—that "they are very trying." After all the pains they took with him too! When they even described how he parted his hair, and what he had for dinner! Told how much his blankets cost and what he thought of our institutions, and how many towels he used of a morning! It is not everybody who can be "interviewed" with such Gothic height and breadth of vision, we can tell him. Why, then, oh why these Bragian words of disapproval? Alas! this is not the first time that a lanquid and luxurious crowned head has rumpled the feathers of the Bird o' Freedom and turned up an unprogressive and snail-like nose at the noble simplicity of our manners. It is to be expected.—New York Tribune.

How Paper Stood the Fire in Boston.

Curious results have followed some of the experiments made upon charred paper and documents, and the examinations of books in safes which proved worthless in the great fire. It has been found that what paper-makers call poor paper, paper considerably "clayed," stood the test best. Parchment paper, used for bonds and legal documents, shriveled up exceedingly, and the print blistered so that it could be read when writing was illegible. So it was with the engraved work on notes. The gilding on the account books burned and charred showed out as bright and clear as when the books were new, which brings up the question if to introduce gilt-edged books would not be well, on the ground that the gilt would stay the passage by fire of the pages within.

Books crammed into a safe so that it was difficult to get them out, suffered considerably less than those that were set in loosely, and in some instances came out from safes in which everything else was worthless, so far preserved that the figures on their pages could be deciphered. With charred papers, which could not be made transparent by any light whatever used, it was found, after the employment of vitriol, oxalic acid, chalk, glycerine, and other things, that anything that moistened them to a certain stage—to which it was delicate work to get and not pass—made the lines, words and figures legible through a magnifying glass. It has been the almost universal experience that lead-pencil marks show out all right where ink marks cannot be distinguished. The success of the use of photography has already been noted.

Sunk by a Swordfish.

A dispatch from Levuka, the capital of the Fiji Islands, announces the total wreck of the schooner Trent, after having been attacked by a monster sword fish. It appears that the Trent left Levuka on the 28th of December last, on a "labor" cruise, and called at Rewa, which she cleared on the 30th. On the 9th February something struck the vessel, and directly afterwards water rushed into the cabin from a large hole in the quarter. On looking over the side it was discovered that an immense swordfish had attacked the vessel, and was hanging by its sword to the ship's side. The fish was caught, and on its being hauled on board it was found to measure twelve feet in length, and four and a half feet round the body. Its sword, which was over two feet long, had been driven through the planking up to the fish's head with such force as to split the fish's lower jaw. On the 21st March, after experiencing a hurricane of four days, Boham's Island was sighted; and on June 9 the Trent commenced to take in water freely through the place where she had been struck by the swordfish. The vessel went ashore on a reef, and afterwards foundered, all efforts to stop the leak being futile. The crew escaped to the shore.—Manchester (Eng.) Guardian.

Sad Story of Gen. Loomis.

Another chapter is added to the sad and strange story regarding the late Gen. Loomis, of Michigan. He died in an insane asylum, at Washington, as before stated, and was buried in the potter's field. Owing to difficulty about a physician's certificate, his remains, after disinterment at Washington, was sent to the morgue in New York, and when they were finally obtained for transportation westward, it appears circumstances resulted in consigning the body to the flames. Freight had been piled on the coffin at Suspension Bridge, so that it was overlooked on arrival at Detroit. It went on in the train. When near Niles, Mich., a fire was discovered in the baggage car, catching from sparks thrown out by the locomotive. It had made such headway when discovered that there was no hope of saving anything, and the whole contents of the car were lost. The remains were nearly consumed, but the ashes were carefully collected and taken back to Detroit, where the funeral occurred Sunday.

THERE are over two million dollars' worth of new churches building in the city of New York.

DUST TO DUST.

Obsequies of Horace Greeley—A Solemn and Imposing Pageant—The Funeral Cortege Witnessed by Thousands.

New York (Dec. 4) Correspondence of Chicago Tribune.

The funeral of Horace Greeley to-day was a tribute befitting the memory of a man whose life and character have so strong a hold on the affections of the American people. The dense throng at the church; the long and solemn procession; the endless multitudes lining Broadway; the draped horses and flags; the tolling bells and the final rites at Greenwood, combined to form the most impressive obsequies in the history of the metropolis. The floral contributions that poured in from all sides were unexampled in number and novelty of design.

The interior of the Church of the Divine Paternity, where the obsequies were held, presented a somber and beautiful appearance. Outside of the church were throngs waiting in respectful silence. Police stood in front of the church as a guard. The church was opened at about half-past 10, although ladies had previously been admitted and filled the galleries. During the hour which elapsed before the arrival of the procession, a strain of music was discoursed by the choir.

Among the first celebrities to arrive were Governor Hoffman, President Grant and Roscoe Conkling; soon after entered, and immediately following them, were Henry Wilson, Minister Washburne, and Secretary Belknap, who sat at the right of the pulpit. There were also Gen. Schurz, Lyman Trumbull and Vice-President Colfax, who took a seat near the President. The crowds outside extended as far as the eye could reach on either side on Fifth avenue, awaiting the arival of the procession.

The church had been appropriately decorated. Over the door in front hung a flag draped with black. In the vestibule was a portrait of Greeley, with crape around the frame. The screen behind the pulpit was covered with black cloth, hanging in graceful folds and relieved by festoons, while from the top of it depended graceful strings of smilax. The pulpit itself and rail in front were fully draped. Drapery ran around the front of the galleries and from bracket to bracket along the side walls. Lengths of serge drooped from the center of the ceiling to the spring of each arch, twined about columns and hung from the pinnacles of the organ. The clock, stopped at 10 minutes before 7, the hour of Greeley's death, was surrounded with black, and above it, in a green wreath, was a white cross of flowers. The pew Mr. Greeley used to occupy about midway of the north aisle, next the wall, was draped with crape. The figure in flowers of a lyre with broken strings, hung at the head. The seat was thickly strewn with white flowers, camelias being placed in the spot which Greeley himself used to occupy. This pew will be left empty for thirty days. The most remarkable decorations of the church, however, were the flowers. There was a beautiful appropriateness and personal significance in many of the devices which surrounded his bier. At the back of the pulpit, under the words: "It is done," with which his great life closed, was a weath of ripened wheat, a fit emblem of the rich harvest the keen sickle of Death had so lately reaped. Below this was a shield of white flowers, with the arms of the State of New York in purple blossoms, the gift of the Common Council. Still below the last, an axe and a pen were arranged in the form of a cross. A magnificent arch of white flowers, presented by the ladies of Dr. Chapin's congregation, spanned the pulpit over the speaker's head. On its white ground was wrought in crimson blossoms the legend "I know that My Redeemer Liveth." Indeed, these words and "It is done," were repeated again and again in decorations, in all sorts of devices.

About the coffin itself were arranged gifts of the choicest kind from personal friends. The air was full of the sweet breath of flowers. They were thick under the foot which trod so reverently as they bore him away. They filled every available space with their beauty.

Thurlow Weed was a pall-bearer at his own request. Dudley S. Gregory, also a pall-bearer, was the man who loaned Mr. Greeley the thousand dollars with which he started the Tribune.

At twenty minutes past 11 o'clock the procession entered the church. The solemnity of the scene was most impressive. The stillness was such that it seemed as though the people in the church scarcely breathed.

Rev Dr. Chapin opened the ceremonies by reading an appropriate selection from the scriptures. Miss Clara Louise Kellogg next sang very touchingly, "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth;" after which Henry Ward Beecher delivered the funeral oration.

The address was followed by earnest prayer and another hymn, "Angels ever bright and fair."

The Rev. Dr. Chapin then pronounced the benediction, and the choir sang a most beautiful and touching chant, "O, what is life?" after which the procession moved down Fifth avenue.

No music was in the line. The procession, as it slowly moved down the avenue, presented a magnificently imposing appearance.

The door-steps of all the houses along the avenue, without exception, were thickly crowded. The windows and balconies were full, and the hotels, clubhouses, and public buildings of all kinds presented a sea of human faces. The gathering was greater than the multitude which welcomed the Grand Duke Alexis, or watched the funeral of Abraham Lincoln. From Dr. Chapin's Church to Madison Square, a distance of just a mile, the avenue was nearly blockaded. On the outer edge of the sidewalk the crowd was huddled two and three deep, and on the walk within there was barely room to pass. In Madison Square and on the space before the Fifth Avenue Hotel, the concourse was still greater.

All along Broadway, from Fourteenth street, through which the procession moved, to Hamilton Ferry, there was a dense mass of people. About Bowling Green, the Battery, and the Ferry-house, the crowd stood patiently waiting.

On the Brooklyn side, the same scenes were repeated. Along Union street to Fourth avenue, and down the avenue to the cemetery, stretched the wonderful double lines of watchers. At Greenwood there was a still more surprising sight. Here an enormous concourse had gathered, standing about the entrance gates and fringing the winding roads, and concentrating about the open grave, so that the mourners, when they arrived, had great difficulty in following the hearse.

About one hundred and twenty-eight carriages followed the remains to Greenwood Cemetery. The body was deposited in Mr. Greeley's lot. There were no ceremonies of any kind further than laying the body in its last resting place.

Life and Services of the New Major General.

Brig. Gen. Irwin McDowell, who has just been appointed Major General United States Army, vice Meade, deceased, is a native of Ohio, from which State he was appointed to a cadetship in the United States Military Academy at West Point in 1834. He graduated in July, 1838, and was immediately promoted to the rank of Brevet Second Lieutenant. He was assistant instructor in tactics at West Point, from September to November, 1841, and Adjutant to October, 1845; he was promoted to a First Lieutenancy in October, 1842; Aid-de-Camp to Gen. Wool, from October, 1845, to May, 1847, and took an active part in the war with Mexico. He received the honorary rank of Brevet Captain for gallant conduct in the battle of Buena Vista, February 23, 1847; promoted to post of Assistant Adjutant General, with rank of Captain, in May, 1847, and relinquished rank in line in February, 1851; Assistant Adjutant General, with rank of Major, March 31, 1856; Brevet Brigadier General, May, 1861. He was the General first in command of the Army of the Potomac, and continued in that position until after the battle of Bull Run, when he was succeeded by McClellan. During the war he held many important commands, and since peace was restored has been in charge of the Department of the East, as senior Brigadier in the army.

A Little Boy Who Will Never Lick Skates any More.

Yesterday forenoon a boy about 12 years old, whose name we did not learn, met with an accident while coming down Michigan street, which should be a warning to all boys in the future. It seems that the boy was bringing his skates down town to have them repaired, and very foolishly touched his tongue to the iron of one of the skates, to ascertain, we presume, if it were cold. The result can be imagined. The tongue being very moist and warm and the iron cold, they froze together. The little fellow endeavored to withdraw his tongue, but could not. Several gentlemen went to the rescue, but it required the most careful handling to loosen the boy's organ of taste from the iron. They ejected saliva upon the iron and rubbed it fully five minutes before they succeeded, and then a piece of the skin of the tongue, about the size of a nickel, was left on the handle, leaving the surface of the tongue where it had come in contact with the iron, as white as though it had been seared with a hot iron. During the time he was fast, the boy gave vent to the most excruciating cries. —South Bend (Ind.) Tribune.

Narrow Gauge Railways.

A good deal has been said and written in regard to the narrow guage railroads, but the latest invention in that line has lately come to light in England. Mr. Fell, a Mont Cenis engineer, has put a narrow gauge line of only eight inches in width in successful operation as a conveyor of the heavy traffic of iron mines to a railway. After this accomplishment the Government engaged him to construct a line at Aldershott for military purposes. The gauge there is eighteen inches wide. The width of the line is ten feet, and the whole rests on posts. The road is a perfect success, and a speed of twenty miles an hour was attained, thirty miles being the maximum attainable. The London News says that the success of this little road will gradually lead to the introduction of the same means of communication at other military stations, to say nothing of the possible use of similar means of transit should England be again involved in war. The cost of a road like this, of 18 inch grade, is from $7,500 to $10,000 a mile. Such roads must yet come into use in the mining regions, and up and down the contracted valleys of streams.

Labor at Cornell.

Hon. Ezra Cornell, writing of the labor system among the students at Ithaca, says the University has paid students for their work about $10,000 per annum for the last four years, and estimates that they have earned about as much more by employment obtained outside of the institution. Mr. Cornell believes that experience demonstrates "that students can apply themselves to physical labor for three or four hours a day without detriment to their studies." "Our working students," he adds, "are prize-takers, and they are rarely found among 'rushers' or 'hazers.'" The difficulty is, however, to furnish suitable and profitable employment to all who wish it. "The farm and garden have afforded much work; our printing office has employment for some twenty or more students; we have students at carpenter-work, stone-cutting, mason-work, printing, etc.; but all this is not sufficient for all who apply for work. Our machine shop is more devoted to the labor of an educational character."

Cheap Decorations.

M. Thiers seems determined to make the legion of honor the laughing stock of Europe by distributing cart-loads of its ribbons and crosses and grand crosses among the military heroes who were routed by the Germans, or who signalized themselves by special ferocity against the unfortunate Communists of Paris. He has within two years created 232 commanders, 1,700 officers, and a multitudinous host of members of the legion. He has thus burlesqued the ancient military ideas of glory and honor and courage, and his decorations must furnish tempting material for the pungent wits and caricaturists of Paris.

At the Troy Conference session at Saratoga, Rev. Dr. Wentworth, now editor of the Ladies' Repository, gave a reason why the Baptist Church is like a beaver's hut: "There is only one entrance to it, and that is under water!"

Serio-Comic Itemizing.

What a relief it is to gain information of a serious accident without any of the horrible details that shock the senses and curdle one's blood. What can be more vivid than the following, and yet we smile rather than shudder in thoughts of the mistaken interloper who gets cut up:

"The gentleman who recently proceeded to 'clean out' the editor of the Sioux City Times has consented to postpone operations until the doctors have fixed half a dozen broken bones for him, and extracted three or four bullets."

Is not the following brief, comprehensive, and to the point:

"Mrs. Swan, of Cochrane, N. Y., lighted her fire with kerosene on Monday, leaving a husband and one child."

Of horrible accidents how pleasant it is to read and be left to imagine as much, or as little, horror as you please. Here is the whole story in a nutshell, and a full column of gostly particulars would not add to it:

"A Pennsylvanian, after lighting a match, threw it into a powder keg. The Coroners of three counties are collecting the shreds."

Here we have a conflagration done up in style:

"John Baldwin, of Grundy county, Iowa, owned a defective flue. He doesn't own it now. Loss, $600."

And here is another:

"A Kansas farmer fired at some rats under the barn and killed several. Loss, $3,000; uninsured."

Witness the following physiologial item. No exhaustive medical treatise could express more:

"A man in Galvaston, the other day, who complained of being over-heated, effected a permanent cure by drinking six glasses of ice-water, without the aid of a physician. He was cool when the Coroner came."

The following precautionary item tells a sad story of experience, and we may take the lesson without a shudder:

"An agricultural gentleman of Denver, Col., who, despite his wife's warning, persisted in smoking on a load of hay the other morning, returned home shortly afterward with his hair and eyebrows singed, and the iron work of his wagon in a potato sack."

Here is another equally good:

"Mr. Collins, of Hartford, bought a ferocious watch-dog. Mr. Collins came home late that night. His wife says that his trowsers can't be mended. The dog's skin is for sale cheap. Mr. Collins hopes to be able to sit down in a few weeks."

And here is a chapter of agricultural information, clear and concise, in five lines:

"A gentleman of Winooski, Vt., who recently tried a solution of lye as an antidote to cabbage worms, will not do so again, at least not with the several acres of cabbage plants that he experimented on the other day."

If we must have items of scandal published, commend us to the man who can satisfy himself with elucidating as follows:

"A lady in Atlanta tied her husband's hands and feet the other day, just for fun, and then went through his pockets for a certain billet doux, and found it. His physician tells him that his face won't be badly scarred, though he may remain permanently bald."

What a chapter of domestic unrest is brought to a climax in this bit of romance:

"A mother-in-law in Lansingburg, New York, is trying to rid her eyes of a quantity of red pepper which, in some strange way or other, came through the key-hole of her daughter-in-law's room."

Thus we see how the most serious and painful events may be made to present a surface of comicality, and if the lesson is conveyed all is gained. The man who invented a sugar-coating for nauseous pills did a humane thing.

A Real Fire Scene.

There is a great deal of inflammable material in a spectacular piece, and the only wonder is that theaters where these things are produced do not take fire every week or two. Every precaution is taken against fire at Niblo's, and during the transformation scene, and in fact during all the scenes, the firemen stand ready to save the house and its contents from destruction. The Black Crook was fortunate; it was never on fire but once, and then there was no serious damage. I can tell the story best in the language of one of the attaches, who narrated it to me:

"The house was full, and the curtain had risen on the transformation scene. The thing was unfolding slowly, the girls were all in their places—some up in the air, some at the fountain, some here and some there, where they belonged—and everything was going on all right, when some of the stuff at the wings took fire and was blazing in a second. Palmer, Jarrett, Zimmerman and the rest of us were behind the scenes looking on. Some of the girls in the scene saw the fire, and were ready to drop out of their places. Jarrett picked up a hammer and swung it as near to one of the girls as he could without being seen by the audience. 'If you move a muscle I'll break your head in,' he said, and he shook the hammer, and evidently meant every word of it. One of the girls near me began to look pale, and I grabbed a wrench and threatened to knock her down if she stirred. I kept shaking it over her, and all the time looked out of one corner of my eye to see how the fire was getting along. There were Palmer and Zimmerman, and three or four others, each with a club, or hammer, or something of the sort, threatening to pound the life out of the girls if they moved a hair's breadth. Vincent, the stage manager, gave a signal to the leader of the orchestra to stop the music. He did so; and then the curtain came down as slowly as if nothing was the matter. The firemen had the water on the fire and put it out. The blaze was pretty high before the curtain came down, but it was stopped in a minute or two. The audience never knew anything about it, but supposed the blaze was part of the performance. As soon as the curtain dropped the girls began to faint, and we had to sprinkle about a ton of them with water and carry them to their dressing-rooms."—New York Letter.

FROM a census recently taken in Paris it appears that there are in that city 1,732,529 Catholics, 30,421 Jews, 17,281 Calvinists, 14,940 Lutherans, 9,482 Anglicans, Methodists and Quakers, 422 Mohammedans, Buddhists and Brahmins, and 2,500 who belong to no religious sect. The population is nearly 50,000 less than it was in 1866.

A CONGRESS of Dutch dancing masters lately assembled at Amsterdam. A great many questions were discussed at the meeting, and it was decided to establish an association of dancing masters, with a view of elevating the art to a height it has never yet attained.

TAKING it for granted that it is allowable to gossip about royalty, we pass this latest interesting bit on. The Princess Beatrice does not always fall in with family decisions and plans, and her proposed marriage to the Marquis of Stafford is a very improbable affair. She was very much opposed to her sister marrying the Marquis of Lorne, saying she supposed when her time came she would be offered a dry goods clerk. Germany, that inexhaustible field of royal Protestant husbands, she has refused to contemplate, as she "hates Germans," and even a Marquis may seem preferable to her by comparison.

Election Bets—A Sporting Man's Opinion.

The death of Mr. Greeley gives rise to a question of the liability of his backers for their bets on the election. A rule of the turf is, where there is no chance to win there can be no loss. Bets on Mr. Greeley are in that category. The different States have cast a vote for an electoral college. These electors meet in the capitals of the respective States on the first Wednesday of December following the general election and cast their votes in conformity to their idea of the wishes of the constituency electing them. An observance of the will of the constituency is not a legal obligation, but is complied with as a moral duty. Now Mr. Greeley being dead, he cannot be voted for, and his backers would have no chance to win, and technically, bets on him are considered as off, though the moral obligation to pay still holds. If the regulation holds good in the betting circle this will prove a nut for them to crack. One gentleman who has just paid $17,000 in bets on the election, said this morning that he would telegraph George Wilkes (in Europe) immediately on the subject.—Cor. New York Herald.

Fill Your Lamps in the Morning.

Scarcely a week passes but we read accounts of frightful accidents from kerosene lamps exploding and killing or scarring for life men, women and children. A simple knowledge of the inflammable nature of the liquid will probably put a stop to nearly all the accidents. As the oil burns down in the lamp, highly inflammable gas gathers over its surface, and as the oil decreases. When the oil is nearly consumed, a slight jar will inflame the gas, and an explosion is sure to follow—death and destruction. A bomb shell is no more to be dreaded. Now if the lamp is not allowed to burn more than half way down, such accidents are almost impossible. Always fill your lamps every morning, and then you need never fear an explosion.

THE Greeley family-lot in Greenwood Cemetery rests upon the crown of Locust Hill, and is one of the most commanding sites in the cemetery. There is no stone or monument to mark the spot—nothing but stakes driven into the ground to mark its boundaries. The resting-place of the dead is an under-ground vault; within the tomb repose the wife and children of Horace Greeley. The following inscriptions are on tablets within the vault: "Mary J. Greeley, May 8, 1847, aged 6 months and 7 days." "Arthur T. Greeley, July 13, 1849, aged 5 years, 3 months, and 21 days." "Ralph W. Greeley, Feb. 23, 1857, aged 6 years and 12 days." "Mary C. Greeley, Oct. 10, 1872, aged 58 years and 6 months."

COL. FORNEY discourses in his anecdotes for this week on "Washington as a Newspaper Sepulcher." In the old era of journalism at the Capital, he says: "Our editorials were all about the party; our news was heavy and our ways were the ways of leisure. The world moved slow and the newspapers were slow. We generally went to press about 10 p. m., and our matter was always early in hand. Organship died with the rebellion. The public printing wholly ceased to be a job under Mr. Lincoln, and those who came to make newspapers in Washington have had to do it by hard work, by heavy outlays for news and telegrams, and by a constant hand-to-hand struggle with a busy competition."

A SUBSTANCE called "naphaline" occurs in large quantities in the waste of gas works, and has always been rejected as worthless. Professor Asa Gray has discovered that it is an admirable substitute for camphor, as a protection against moths and other insects.

The Lafayette Journal says:

We are informed, upon what is deemed relioble authority, that the cattle in various parts of the country are becoming afflicted with a disease exactly similar to epizootic in horses. Says the Cincinnati Enquirer, the papers are generally making record, that Greeley carried but six States.—He carried seven, viz, Maryland, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas. Tennessee, Kentucky, and Missouri. In Louisiana his majority was 9,157. The people in seven States voted for him. This, the truth of history, requires us to state it, and it will be so writen.

HOW TO GO WEST

This is an inquiry which everyone should have satisfactorily answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c. this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

HOW TO GO WEST

This is an inquiry which everyone should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey and a little care taken in examination of routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading passenger routes to the west. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories and passenger starting from DeKalb county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington route.

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B & M. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

It is stated that Congressman Cox is going on a long voyage next summer. He expects to travel through Norway, and Iceland, and as near to the North Pole as he can get. Two years ago, his search was for winter sunbeams; next year it will be for summer iceburgs.

The president has decided to pardon nearly all of the KuKlux prisoners now confined in Northern penitentiaries.—Better late than never, but without doubt, nearly all these victims should have been pardoned long before this time.

A Frenchman recently who saw the corpse of a young and beautiful girl in the Paris Morgue, conceived a violent attachment for it, and as he deemed it the hight of absurdity that he should be alive when such a beautiful creature was dead, he went off and drowned himself.

Garroters may be made useful members of society. It has been discovered by the medical officials of Gray's Hospital London that a judicious choking is of great benefit towards curing historical patients. The discovery conveys the valuable hint that a little judicious strangulation would do much to eradicate the hysteria that results in murder.

Louisville has a school-marm who whacks her pupils over the head with an instrument cunningly devised of leather with a forked end [illegible] es down into the face, drawing the blood at every lick. In extreme cases she lifts the child from the floor by the ear, and in one case recently the ear gave way, and the rascally juvenile fell to the floor.

The following is to be found on a gravestone in a graveyard at Shrewsburg. New Jersey. It was furnished us by Mr. E. L. Billings, who saw it.

'Here lieth, in the hopes of a joyful resurrection, the body of Samuel Dennis, who came from Great Britain to this place A. D. 1675, and lived here to the day of his death, which was the 7th day of June, 1723, aged 72 years, and 6 months; leaving issue 2 sons, and 3 daughters, by his only wife Increase, who departed this life 28 years before him.'

When three Irishmen dug a ditch for which they were to receive four dollars. The trouble was to divide four among three and have it apual.—One of them remained quiet, and the other two at last deferred to his judgement as he had been to school, and knew enough arithmetic to make the division. He did it at once saying. 'It's aisy enough! Shure there's two for yot two, and two for me too. 'Begora,' said one of his co-laberers 'what a great thing it is to have learning!' 'And,' said the other, as he pocketed his single dollar, 'to know 'rithmenic, too! The likes of us two'd never divided them four dollars aqually.'

The Santo Domingo project which many Radical gudgeons have supposed was too dead to ever kick again is still vigorous, and is about to turn up in a new garb, but with practically the same old hideously deformed anatomy. This time in comes in the form of a scheme of several New York speculators, who report that they have purchased, of the mongrel saddled colored Baez, certain territory, including Samana bay. Possibly this may all be true, and it may be well enough, for we suppose that any American has an undoubted right to purchase property wheresoever out it looks like a nice little trap, to involve the United States in a war for the protection of speculative citizens, and then the upshot would be the annexion of the island, as a compensation of indemnity. This plan might work admirably, and the poor party dupes would never see to what base uses they had so unconciously lent their aid.

A boarder remarked that he had always heard that the ground-hog didnot make its apearance until the second day of February; but that his landlady had been feeding him ground hog for breakfast, dinner, and supper, for some time. On being asked if he was sure it was hog he ceased to converse.

Bill Giving 160 Acres of Land to all Soldiers of the Late War—Passed the House.

The following bill passed the House of Representatives on Thursday:

Section I. That every private soldier, musician, and officer, who served in the army of the United States, during the late war, for ninety days, and was honorably discharged, including troops mustered into the service of the United States, by virtue of the third section of an act entitled, "An act mading appropriations for the defense of Washington and for other purposes," approved Febuary 13, 1862 and every seaman, marine and officer, or other who served in the navy of the United States, or in the marine corps, during the late war for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged, and the widow of any such soldier, musician, seaman or officer, or if there be no such widow, his orphan children, under 21 years of age, shall be entitled to enter a quantity of public lands, not mineral not exceeding 160 acres, which shall be composed of continuous tracts, according to legal subdivisions, including alternate reserved sections, if public lands along the line of any railroad or any other public work, or other land subjects to enter, under the homestead laws of the United States, and receive a certificate of such entry without the payment of any Government fees.

Sec 2. That such entry shall be made in the name of the person entitled, as above, to make the same in person or by agent, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior, shall prescribe, and the patent of the lands so entered shall be issued to such soldiers, seamen, musician, or officer, or to his widow or orphan children, provided for in the first section of this act, but no sale in such land, or any interest therein, or the power of Attorney authorizing such sale, or other contract of agreement in anywise affecting or concerning any such land, made, executed, or entered into prior to the issuing of the patent thereof, and the actual delivery of the same, to the person to whom issued, shall be of no effect whatever, but shall be null and void.

Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior, shall prescribe rules, and regulations, to carry the provisions of the act into effect.

A Cruel Sell.

Tom Hardin is a Cincinnati drummer He is an eccentric fellow, and something of a practical joker. Time hung heavy on Thomas' shoulders when he was here two or three weeks ago, and to beguile the tedium, he sauntered into a tailoring establishment, where they take great pride in the genious of their "cutter." Now instead of entering with his customary erect bearing, and as people usually walk, this facetous drummer elevated one shoulder, and depressed the other, until he was a most pitiful specimen of human deformity. He informed the proprietor that he wanted a coat made but owing to his unfortunate shape, he almost feared to trust a strange tailor to make it for him. He was assured that with such a cutter as that establishment had there was no occasion to fear a poor fit. He could fit any body. After much persuasion, to give this extraorpinary, and altogether infallible artist a trial, Thomas selected his goods, was measured, and assured that the coat would be ready in time, he ambled away, leaving the smiling proprietor happy over his prospective profits. Yesterday, he called for the coat, but this time for the sake of variety, he elevated the other shoulder, and drew down the one that had before been exalted. "Well got my coat done I suppose?" he remarked pleasantly. "Yes," stammered the proprietor, and he stared at Mr. Hardin and rubbed his eyes. 'Nothing wrong about it is there? you look as if you thought it wouldn't fit." Then the cutter came up, and there was some very loud and profane swearing for that coat was made high in the wrong shoulder, and couldn't be altered, and Mr. Hardin couldn't think of trusting them again. A cheap boy now stands in front of that store and he is looking for a man with a high shoulder.—When found, that man can get a coat cheap.—Terre Haute Express.

"Many hands make light work," is an old maxim, So if you want to see your local paper flourish, let every business man farmer, mechanic and laborer, do their duty towards subscribing and extending all the patronage in their power. By such a course, failure is impossible, and a great improvement would become pleasantly apparent.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced: Lowe, to extend the time for entries on Osage lands in Kansas; Shanks, to secure a more efficient administration of Indian affairs; Porter, to amend the Constitution so as to elect the President, Vice-President and Senators by direct vote of the people......A call of the House showed less than a quorum present, whereupon an adjournment to Jan. 6 was voted.

A Good Word for the Country Publisher.

Mr. Josiah A. Noonan, a well-known paper manufacturer of Milwaukee, has recently gone into voluntary bankruptcy. In answer to a friendly reference in a Milwaukee paper to his misfortune, Mr. N. has published a card explanatory of his affairs, in which he utters some very wholesome truths.

Among the consequences of his bankruptcy he regrets the temporary interruption of his business relations with the publishers of Wisconsin, Northern Iowa, Minnesota, and Western Michigan, with whom he has had constant relations for twenty-two years. In his business with them, mostly on credit, and amounting to millions of dollars, and extending over nearly a quarter of a century, he states his entire loss by bad debts was less than $10,000. He questions whether a like showing could be made of the same amount of dealing with men in any other business or profession. Upon this point he says:

"I have many times felt my blood stir faster when I have presented the note of a customer-publisher to a bank to be cashed—outside of my place of business—to have some pinched-up squirt of a teller, cashier or President look up with that peculiarly sinister and supercilious smirk, known only to those of that calling, and inquire, "Is the maker of that paper an editor?" When told he was, then to hear him say, "We don't like those country printers' notes; they are not generally paid." The poor devil, in all probability, was, at the time of the dialogue, shinning around to raise means to cover up some of his own wheat or stock gambling losses. There were more brains, business integrity and tact in the northeast corner of the country editor's head who made the note than there ever was under the skulls of any three generations of the self-sufficient and narrow-gauged whelps who put the question."

The Night After Christmas.

ILLUSTRATED BY [illegible].

'Twas the night after Christmas, when all through the house
Every soul was abed, and still as a mouse;

Those stockings so laid in St. Nicholas' care
Were empty of all that was eatable there.

The darlings had duly been tucked in their beds,
With very full stomachs, and pains in their heads.

I was dozing away in my new cotton cap,
And Nancy was rather far gone in a nap,

When out in the nursery rose such a clatter,
I sprang from my sleep, crying, "What is the matter?"

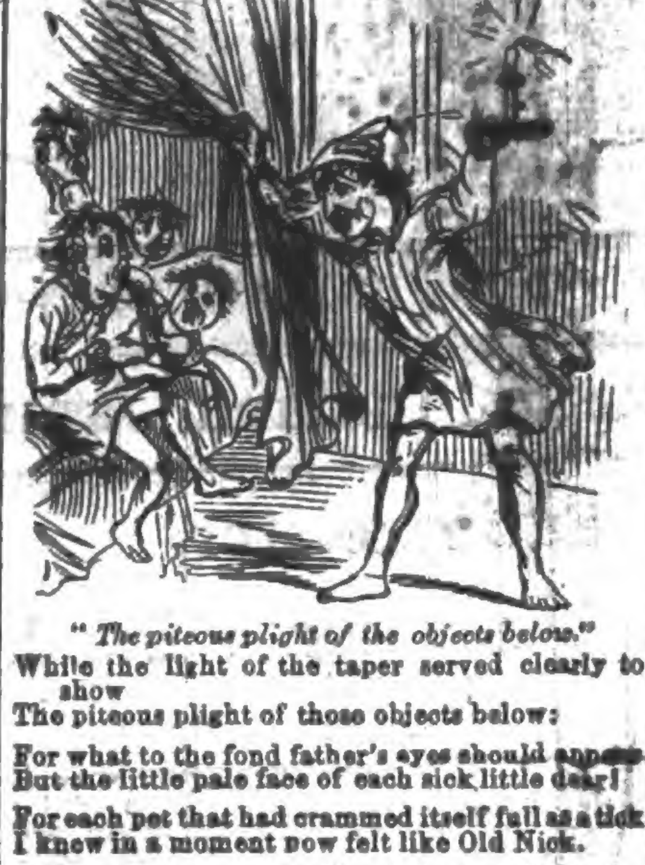
I flew to each bedside—still half in a doze—
Tore open the curtains, and threw off the clothes;



"The piteous plight of the objects below."

While the light of the taper served clearly to show
The piteous plight of those objects below:

For what to the fond father's eyes should appear
But the little pale face of each sick little dear!

For each pet that had crammed itself full as a tick
I knew in a moment now felt like Old Nick.

Their pulses were rapid, their breathing the same;
What their stomachs ejected I'll mention by name;

Now turkey, now stuffing, plum-pudding, of
course,
And custards, and crullers, and cranberry sauce;

Before outraged nature all went to the wall,
Yes, lollypops, flapdeodle, dinner and all.

Like pellets which urchins from popguns let fly,
Went figs, nuts, and raisins, jam, jelly, and pie;

Till each error of diet was brought to my view,
To the shame of mamma and of Santa Claus, too.

I turned from the sight, to my bedroom stepped back,
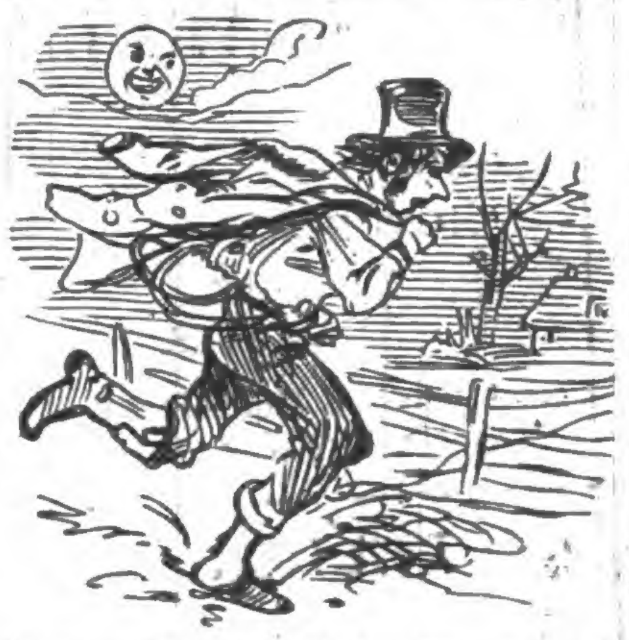
And brought out a vial marked "Pulv. Ipecac.;"



"Don't you think you had better, love, run for the Doctor?"

When my Nancy exclaimed, for their sufferings
shocked her,
"Don't you think you had better, love, run for a doctor?"

I ran; and was scarcely back under my roof
When I heard the sharp clatter of old Jalap's
hoof;

I might say that I had scarcely turned myself
round
When the doctor came into the room with a bound.

He was covered with mud from his head to his foot,
And the suit he had on was his very worst suit;

He hardly had time to put that on his back,
And he looked like a Falstaff half fuddled with sack;

His eyes, how they twinkled! Had the doctor
got merry?
His lips looked like port, and his breath smelt
like sherry.

He hadn't been shaved for a fortnight or so,
And the beard on his chin wasn't white as the snow.

"But inspecting their tongues in spite of their teeth."

But, inspecting their tongues, in spite of their teeth,
And drawing his watch from his waistcoat beneath,

He felt of each pulse, saying, "Each little belly
Must get rid"—here he laughed—"of the rest of that jelly."

I gazed on each chubby, plump, sick little elf,
And groaned when he said so, in spite of myself;

But a wink of his eye, when he physicked our
Fred,
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread.

He didn't prescribe; but went straightway to work,
And dosed all the rest—gave his trowsers a jerk—

And, adding directions while blowing his nose,
He buttoned his coat, from his chair he arose,

Then jumped in his gig, gave old Jalap a whistle,
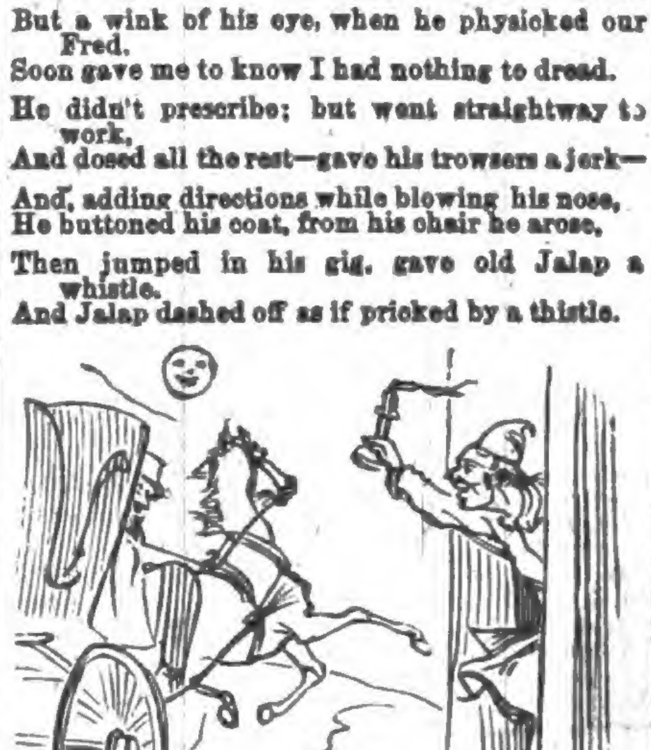
And Jalap dashed off as if pricked by a thistle.



"The doctor exclaimed ere he drove out of sight."

But the doctor exclaimed, ere he drove out of sight,
"They'll be well by to-morrow; good-night,
Jones, good-night."

WHEN Mrs. Stanton was delivering her lecture on the Coming Girl, in Green Bay, she told how her father, when they were going over the highlands of Scotland together, had a pair of boots made for her, and how she walked therein just as many miles as he, and just as well. After the lecture, a bronze-faced, furzy individual stepped around to the green room, and putting forth a knotted palm, said: "An' wi' ye shek haan's wi' the maan wha made the booties for ye?" and there he was. She did.

Dunning.

[We dislike dunning; we dislike to be dunned; we dislike to dun anybody; hence our debtors must not imagine that we take a delight in producing in our columns the following "parody" from an irate quill-driver of a passage in Longfellow's "Hiawatha:"]

Should you ask us why this dunning,
Why these sad complaints and murmurs,
Murmurs loud about delinquents
Who have read the paper weekly,
Read what they have never paid for,
Read with pleasure and with profit,
Read of church affairs and prospects,
Read of news both home and foreign
Read the essays and the poems,
Full of wisdom and instructions;
Read the table and the markets,
Carefully corrected weekly—
Should you ask us why this dunning,
We should answer, we should tell you.

From the printer, from the mailer,
From the kind old paper maker,
From the landlord, from the carrier,
From the man who takes letters
With a stamp from Uncle Samuel—
Uncle Sam the rowdies call him;
From them all there comes a message,
Message kind, but firmly spoken,
"Please to pay us what you owe us."

Would you lift a burden from us?
Would you drive a specter from you?
Would you taste a pleasant slumber?
Would you have a quiet conscience?
Would you read a paper paid for?
Send us money—send us money,
Send the money that you owe us!

THE WORLD OF NUMBERS.

If a bad boy could have been a possibility in such a model village as Haylington, Tommy Spratt would have been that boy; but, as it was, overawed by the vicar, the vicar's wife, the vicar's three strong-minded daughters, the schoolmaster, the schoolmistress, and the six pupil teachers, the natural wickedness of his disposition only displayed itself in an intense hatred of study, especially of that division of the "three R's" known as arithmetic.

"I hate figgers, I do; I wish they was blowed," soliloquized that hardened youth of ten as one arithmetic afternoon he set off for school. As support for the outer man during the fatiguing journey he carried in his right hand a sodden piece of gingerbread, while with the other he restrained by a string a half-penny air-ball, colored orange, destined to beguile the tedious hours.

Tommy Spratt left his home with no other intention than that of going straight to school; but Tommy Spratt was mortal, and one hot, dusty lane led to the school-room, where a grimy slate and scrapy pencil awaited him, while the other meandered through green fields, he did not even hesitate, but turned at once into the shady paths of temptation.

He cast himself on the grass and prepared to take an invigorating taste of the delicious though crumbly refreshment he had provided, having first carefully secured his air-ball to the leathern belt, which, fastened by a brazen buckle in the shape of an uncoiled dragon, gathered his Holland blouse into graceful folds. Now, whether Master Tommy's dereliction from the paths of virtue rendered him no longer amenable to the laws of gravity, or whether the air-ball was endowed with supernatural powers, it is impossible to say; all that this veracious chronicle can tell is, that instead of Tommy keeping the miniature balloon down on earth, it, like Mr. Dryden's Timotheus,

"Raised a mortal to the skies."

"Hullo!" he cried in alarm; "I don't like this. Let me go."

But by degrees he grew accustomed to the sensation, and rather enjoyed it than otherwise; it was so pleasant it soothed him to slumber—a slumber from which he was aroused by a violent concussion of his head against a corner curbstone.

How long he lay in a state of semi-insensibility he never knew; but at last he struggled and sat upright, finding himself, the air-ball still attached to his belt, in a crowd of odd-looking creatures. They all of them varied in size, but they were as a rule below the stature of human beings, the most remarkable thing about them being that every one, like the sandwich men of London, carried a board on which was inscribed every description of number.

When they saw Tom open his eyes, there was one universal question: "Who divides him?"

"Oh! please don't," said Tommy, in mortal dread. "I ain't at all good to eat, but this here is," tendering them the remains of the gingerbread, which had been reduced, to a shapeless mass during the perils of his journey.

No one seemed to take any notice of Master Spratt's suggestion, but one stout old man, bearing the number 441, asked with dignity:

"Are you even or uneven?"

Tom scratched his head, unable to reply, and a second broke in with:

"What's your number?"

"16," replied Tom, readily, that being the number in Balaclava cottages, Victoria row, where Mrs. Spratt had lately taken up her humble abode.

"That you ain't," cried an indignant voice; and a short, fussy gentleman burst from the crowd, and pointed to the legend 16 inscribed upon his board. "Here, 2, 4, 8!"

In obedience to his call, three numbers bowed humbly before him.

"Chastise that fellow!"

"That's mean," blubbered Tom. "Three upon one! Yer ought to be ashamed of yerselves, yer ought. Give me a hand up, one of yer."

The cry again arose: "Who divides you?" and the first stout man added, with some contempt:

"I must. 2, run and fetch 1."

"Fetch him yourself," retorted 2. "I don't divide you."

441 cast an anxious glance around; then, catching sight of 3, he began promptly: "3, depart and seek for 1," when the hurried entrance of a new comer rendered the dispatch of the messenger unnecessary.

He was a jaded, harassed boy, whose countenance might have been pretty but for a certain strained look of attention. His whole body appeared worn out with fatigue as he feebly gasped.

"Where's 5? I've been all over the town looking for you, 5," he added, reproachfully, as the other drew near. "The army want you to black their boots."

5 immediately started off at a rapid pace, while 16 said:

"Come, look alive! help that youngster out of the gutter."

1 meekly obeyed; but when he caught a better view of Tom's figure, he answered, indignantly:

"He hasn't got a number. I don't see why I should wait on him any more than the others."

"But, my dear 1," murmured 3, in a tone of cutting contempt, "you know you divide everything."

And so saying the crowd moved on, 16 having first ordered 2, 4 and 8 to cut away the air-ball from Tommy's waist.

At any other time Master Spratt would have bewailed the loss, but that moment it passed unnoticed, as he was intent upon his new companion, who inquired of 8 what he was to do with this unnumbered boy, the adjective being uttered with as much contempt as an inhabitant of this world would throw into the term unlettered.

"Take him to the king to be registered," retorted 8, and flew off to answer a hasty summons from 24.

"What place is this?" asked Tommy, meekly.

"Multiplication lane, and that's Rule-of-Three market," returned his companion. "But come, now, what is your number?"

Tommy felt ashamed to confess he didn't know; he thought he'd like to be No. 1.

"Don't you!" replied the other, misanthropically. "I'm 1."

"Can't there be another 1?"

"I wish there could," retorted his friend.

Tommy ventured to ask, "Why?"

"Because it'd divide the work, but nothing can't divide 1."

"But what is all this about division?" inquired Tom, whose escape from the afternoon lesson had led him into a far wider field of figures.

"Why, don't you know that every figure may order about those that divide it? They're his slaves. 2, 4, and 8 have to wait on 16, and 16 has to wait on 32, and they all have to wait on 64. Some of them may have many servants, some have but few, but they all have me."

There was a world of pathos in his tone.

"Of course," said Tom, "1 divides everything."

"Yes, everything, even 2 and 3; and they're the hardest masters of all; they've a deal of waiting to do; but they shift most of it on to me. But here we are at arithmetical progression."

"What's that?" asked Master Spratt.

"The king's palace, of course. Stop a moment, though." And 1 drew respectfully back, as an elderly gentleman with a large board, on which was inscribed 482964, stopped up the doorway.

"Where are you going, 1, the indivisible?"

1 grew red at the taunt; his weak point was his indivisibility.

"I am going, O many-figured 482964, to the king, and bear with me the unnumbered boy."

482964 drew back his skirts to let them pass, and the boys hurried on through a long line of soldiers who, Tommy observed, were all uneven multiples of 5. On his requesting an explanation of this, 1 said:

"They're the army; all the 5's are soldiers, and all the 7's are sailors, and where the two meet, as in 34 or 105, they serve as marines on alternate days."

"Oh!" said Tommy, and the matter dropped.

They passed on through the outer courts into an inner chamber, where a large and merry party were assembled. In one corner a group of princesses, the very lowest of whom was at least a million, were playing at "buzz," with such rapidity and precision that Tommy's head swam with the effort of following them. In another portion of the room a little princess (whose number terminated in five noughts, such being the royal prerogative) was doing her sums by means of her father's subjects, who stood on one another's heads, and whirled in and out in a manner incomprehensible to ordinary mortals, accustomed to the comparatively tame use of slate and pencil.

The king reclined upon a couch, dedicating a new novel, entitled "Comic Sections," to four secretaries at once.

"Whence comes this numberless creature? And 1, too! 1, how darest thou intrude within the groves of arithmetical progression?"

"O thou of many numbers!" answered 1, prostrating himself, "I have brought hither this boy, who has descended on this earth by a strange conveyance, hitherto unknown, in order that thou, O most divisible, shouldst bestow on him a number and a place in the royal register."

The king frowned, the secretaries followed suit, and the unhappy 1 sank beneath the glowing storm of their eyes.

"What number shall we give him?" said the king, pensively. "Fetch hither the register."

A small detachment of subjects carried in with difficulty 8,900 volumes, and the four secretaries set to work with a will.

After looking for some hours, one of the secretaries, with a low bow, announced all were occupied—that the last number used was 89,999,999, and that therefore the new-comer must be 90,000,000.

The king for one moment foamed at the mouth; then, recovering his speech, flew at the secretary (71032), and, tearing off his number, cried:

"The traitor has dared to propose that this stranger, this indivisible boy, shall henceforth become one of the royal family—one of the nearest to our own person!"

Every one hooted 71032, who hid behind his fellow secretaries to escape the popular storm.

"No," continued the prince, "some other plan must be thought of. Whoever brings, before to-morrow at noon, an unoccupied number, not over 89,999,999, for this boy, shall have a nought added to his name."

The people shouted and withdrew; but Tommy, who had never before looked on royalty, lingered behind to stare open-mouthed at the gorgeous rooms and grand company.

The king continued his dictation, never observing the absence of 72032; so every 4th chapter of the novel was missing; but this, of course, only made it the more interesting.

Tommy's curiosity soon got the better of his manners, and he interrupted them with,

"What did you have for dinner? what's your name? and how old are you?"

"Boy," said the prince, "you are as yet unnumbered."

"Well, come now, that ain't my fault, you know," argued Tommy.

The king had never seen it in this light before, and his face grew milder and more gentle, so Tommy dared to add,

"What's your name, or number?"

"I," said the king, with pride, "I am the Innumerable Nought."

"Whatever is that?" thought Tommy; but he didn't ask, only went on to himself, "Nought into nought, nought remains; multiply by nought, and then divide by nought, and the answer is nought." But he soon became confused and gave it up.

"You do not seem to understand."

And so saying, the king unwound from his waist a white satin scarf of prodigious length, on which was embroidered in gold thread an endless succession of noughts—thus, 00000000, etc. Tom looked at him with awe.

"What divides you?" he asked, repeating the current phrase, and acting up to the spirit of that proverb which advises you what course to pursue when you find yourself in the city of the seven hills.

"Everyt'ing!" was the proud reply; on which Tommy resumed his former calculations, and relapsed into a temporary state of hopeless imbecility.

* * * * * * *

No. 1, and Tommy both passed a restless and feverish night; but ere they left for Arithmetical Progression in the morning, the mind of No. 1 was made up. He would gain the promised nought; and being thus promoted to 10 (while the original of that number was degraded to his humble position), he would have no less than three servants.

"And which of you," asked the Innumerable Nought, "has thought of a number to bestow on this waif of the skies?"

His majesty piqued himself on the poetical turn of his sentence.

"Please sir, I have." And I stepped forward with a little bow and flourish.

"Well," said 0, eyeing him scornfully, "proceed."

"O, 0 the infinate, what if he should be a fraction?"

"A what?" asked a chorus of voices. "What in the world of numbers do you mean?"

"May I never be divided," said the king, "if I can understand you!"

No. 1 began to explain what a fraction was, and suggested that Tommy should be ½.

"And 1 should not have dared to propose this if it had not been that the wretched boy had hitherto been numberless, and therefore half a loaf would be better than no bread."

The king, ever ready to encourage talent, by his example, and to reward it lavishly with smiles, held out his hand to No. 1, who knelt and humbly kissed it.

"Your ingenuity is—as virtue ever is—its own reward. You are no longer the lowest in the kingdom; for Tommy Spratt—" (that young gentleman had been careful, in the absence of any number to which he could lay claim, to inform them of his name), "for Tommy Spratt takes his place as the slave of slaves and divisor of 1.

Tommy was about to weep—he had actually gone so far as to lift his cuff for the purpose of drying his eyes, when a thought struck him.

"And where's ¼ then? He'd divide me, and ⅛, and 1-16, and 1-32, and 1-64?" he went on, taking a spiteful delight in seeing the grand blank of incomprehension which overspread the features of his listeners. "And I dare say, if the truth was known, you're some of your fractions yourselves!"

"Youth," said the king, in a tone of the utmost severity, "be silent!"

"And I have heard," continued Tommy, whose hitherto despised and hated arithmetic began to stand him in good stead, "and I have heard tell of decimals, and if you are innumerable, I believe you're neither more nor less than a circulating decimal yourself!"

For one moment only the king was stunned by Tommy's unexplained audacity; then his great mind rose to the occasion.

"He is convicted by his own mouth of treason," for though 0 was ignorant of the meaning of the word, he guessed no compliment was intended by the term. "Take him and one to the battlements, and cast them into the moat."

Once more Tommy found himself the center of a crowd of numbers, who, seizing on him and the hapless 1, bound them together hand and foot, and bore them in triumph to the battlements. They only met with one slight interruption, when a wrathful number, with a cruel laugh, fastened to them the air-ball, the faithful companion of Tom's perilous voyage to that inhospitable world.

Thus they proceeded in a procession to the ramparts, when a large crowd was assembled to witness their execution. With many a taunt and jeer they tossed them over, but, to the astonishment of the multitude, after sinking slowly for some seconds, the air-ball began to take effect, and, impelled by a favoring breeze, they arose out of reach of their tormenters.

Ere he could utter a word of thankfulness of joy at this unexpected deliverance, Tommy Spratt found himself lying in the grass under the shady tree, the gingerbread crumbled to nothing in his hand, and the air-ball floating serenely above him.

From that day Tommy Spratt became a changed boy, remarkable especially for two good qualities—his persevering attention to arithmetic, and his unremitting and tender care of No. 1.—Hood's London Comic Annual.

A New Chill Cure.

A writer in the Terre Haute (Ind.) Journal has discovered a new cure for the ague. He says to those afflicted with this provoking malady, crawl down stairs head foremost. Laugh at the idea if you please, but do your crawling first; you can then afford to laugh. Just as the chill is coming on, start at the top of a long flight of stairs, and crawl down on your hands and feet, head foremost. You never did harder work in your life, and when you arrive at the bottom, instead of shaking, you will find yourself puffing, red in the face, and perspiring freely, from the strong exertions made in the effort to support yourself. Try it. It won't cost you near as much as quinine or patent medicines, and if it fails it will only do what they do every day.

A Good Word for the Country Publisher.

Mr. Josiah A. Noonan, a well-known paper manufacturer of Milwaukee, has recently gone into voluntary bankruptcy. In answer to a friendly reference in a Milwaukee paper to his misfortune, Mr. N. has published a card explanatory of his affairs, in which he utters some very wholesome truths.

Among the consequences of his bankruptcy he regrets the temporary interruption of his business relations with the publishers of Wisconsin, Northern Iowa, Minnesota, and Western Michigan, with whom he has had constant relations for twenty-two years. In his business with them, mostly on credit, and amounting to millions of dollars, and extending over nearly a quarter of a century, he states his entire loss by bad debts was less than $10,000. He questions whether a like showing could be made of the same amount of dealing with men in any other business or profession. Upon this point he says:

"I have many times felt my blood stir faster when I have presented the note of a customer-publisher to a bank to be cashed—outside of my place of business—to have some pinched-up squirt of a teller, cashier or President look up with that peculiarly sinister and supercilious smirk, known only to those of that calling, and inquire, "Is the maker of that paper an editor?" When told he was, then to hear him say, "We don't like those country printers' notes; they are not generally paid." The poor devil, in all probability, was, at the time of the dialogue, shinning around to raise means to cover up some of his own wheat or stock gambling losses. There were more brains, business integrity and tact in the northeast corner of the country editor's head who made the note than there ever was under the skulls of any three generations of the self-sufficient and narrow-gauged whelps who put the question."

The Night After Christmas.

ILLUSTRATED BY [illegible].

'Twas the night after Christmas, when all
through the house
Every soul was abed, and still as a mouse;

Those stockings so lately St. Nicholas' care
Were empty of all that was eatable there.

The darlings had duly been tucked in their beds,
With very full stomachs, and pains in their heads.

I was dozing away in my new cotton cap,
And Nancy was rather far gone in a nap,

When out in the nursery rose such a clatter,
I sprang from my sleep, crying, "What is the matter?"

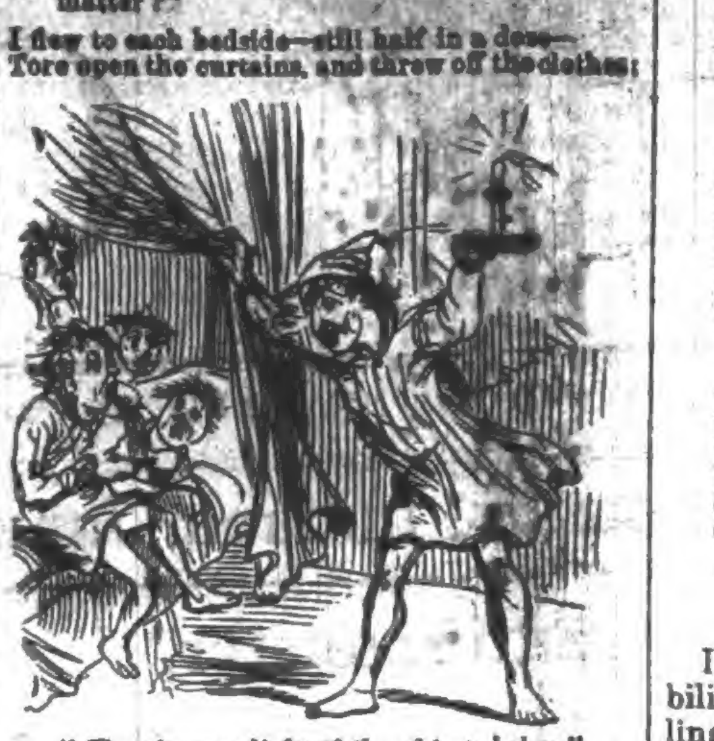
I flew to each bedside—still half in a doze—
Tore open the curtains, and threw off the clothes;



"The piteous plight of the objects below."

While the light of the taper served clearly to show
The piteous plight of those objects below;

For what to the fond father's eyes should appear
But the little pale face of each sick little dear!

For each pet that had crammed itself full as a tick
I knew in a moment now felt like Old Nick.

Their pulses were rapid, their breathing the
same;
What their stomachs ejected I'll mention by
name;

Now turkey, now stuffing, plum-pudding, of
course,
And custards, and crullers, and cranberry sauce;

Before outraged nature all went to the wall,
Yes, lollypops, flapdoodle, dinner and all.

Like pellets which urchins from popguns let fly,
Went figs, nuts, and raisins, jam, jelly, and pie;

Till each error of diet was brought to my view,
To the shame of mamma and of Santa Claus, too.

I turned from the sight, to my bedroom stepped back,
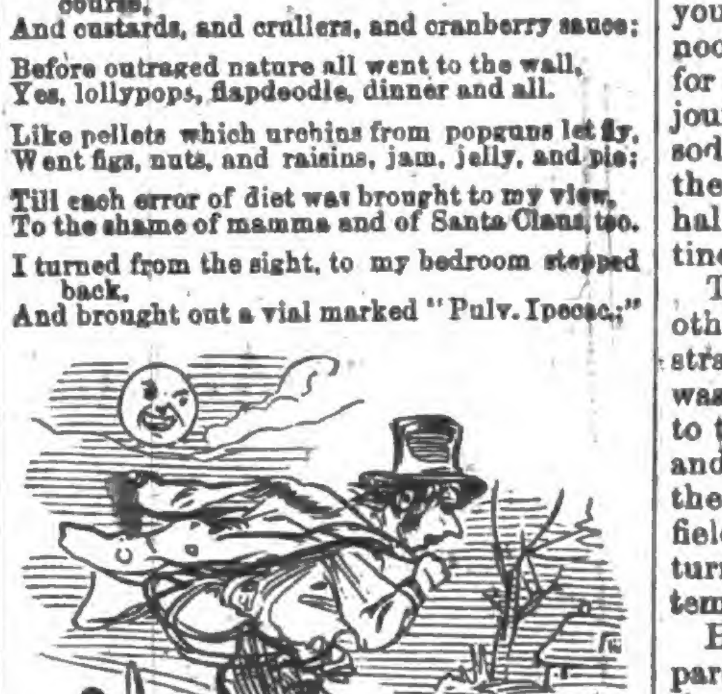
And brought out a vial marked "Pulv. Ipecac."



"Don't you think you had better, love, run for the Doctor?"

When my Nancy exclaimed, for their sufferings
shocked her,
"Don't you think you had better, love, run for a doctor?"

I ran; and was scarcely back under my roof
When I heard the sharp clatter of old Jalap's
hoof;

I might say that I had scarcely turned myself
round
When the doctor came into the room with a bound.

He was covered with mud from his head to his foot,
And the suit he had on was his very worst suit;

He hardly had time to put that on his back,
And he looked like a Falstaff half fuddied with sack;

His eyes, how they twinkled! Had the doctor
got merry?
His lips looked like port, and his breath smelt
like sherry.

He hadn't been shaved for a fortnight or so,
And the beard on his chin wasn't white as the snow.

"But inspecting their tongues in spite of their teeth."

But, inspecting their tongues, in spite of their teeth,
And drawing his watch from his waistcoat beneath,

He felt of each pulse, saying, "Each little belly
Must get rid"—here he laughed—"of the rest of that jelly."

I gazed on each chubby, plump, sick little elf,
And groaned when he said so, in spite of myself;

But a wink of his eye, when he physicked our
Fred,
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread.

He didn't prescribe; but went straightway to work,
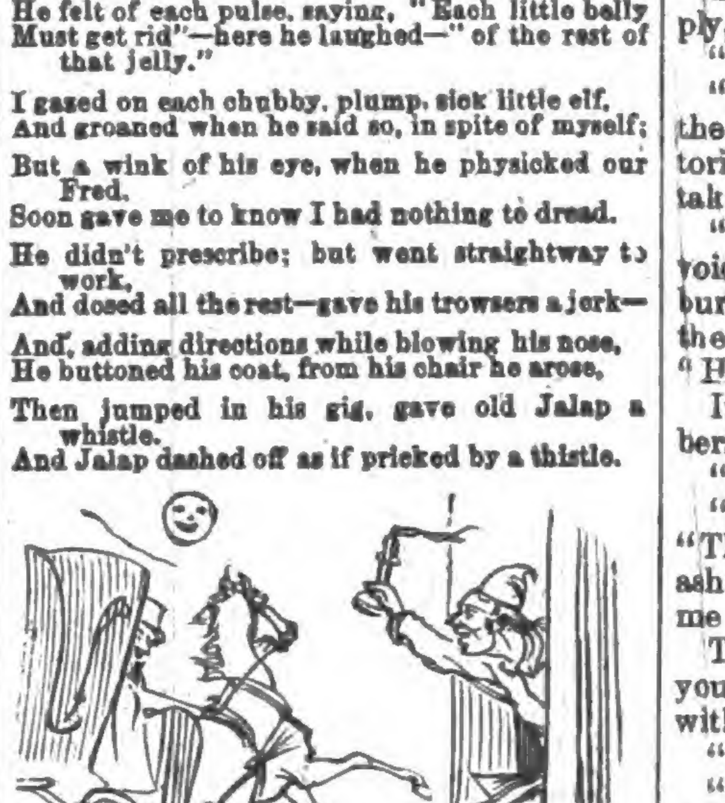
And dosed all the rest—gave his trowsers a jerk—

And, adding directions while blowing his nose,
He buttoned his coat, from his chair he arose,

Then jumped in his gig, gave old Jalap a
whistle,
And Jalap dashed off as if pricked by a thistle.



"The doctor exclaimed ere he drove out of sight."

But the doctor exclaimed, ere he drove out of sight,
"They'll be well by to-morrow; good-night,
Jones, good-night."

WHEN Mrs. Stanton was delivering her lecture on the Coming Girl, in Green Bay, she told how her father, when they were going over the highlands of Scotland together, had a pair of boots made for her, and how she walked therein just as many miles as he, and just as well. After the lecture, a bronze-faced, furzy individual stepped around to the green room, and putting forth a knotted palm, said: "An' wi' ye shek haan's wi' the maan wha made the booties for ye?" and there he was. She did.

Dunning.

[We dislike dunning; we dislike to be dunned; we dislike to dun anybody; hence our debtors must not imagine that we take a delight in producing in our columns the following "parody" from an irate quill-driver on a passage in Longfellow's "Hiawatha:"]

Should you ask us why this dunning,
Why these sad complaints and murmurs,
Murmurs loud about delinquents
Who have read the paper weekly,
Read what they have never paid for,
Read with pleasure and with profit,
Read of church affairs and prospects,
Read of news both home and foreign
Read the essays and the poems,
Full of wisdom and instructions;
Read the table and the markets,
Carefully corrected weekly—
Should you ask us why this dunning,
We should answer, we should tell you.

From the printer, from the mailer,
From the kind old paper maker,
From the landlord, from the carrier,
From the man who takes letters
With a stamp from Uncle Samuel—
Uncle Sam the rowdies call him;
From them all there comes a message,
Message kind, but firmly spoken,
"Please to pay us what you owe us."

Would you lift a burden from us?
Would you drive a specter from you?
Would you taste a pleasant slumber?
Would you have a quiet conscience?
Would you read a paper paid for?
Send us money—send us money,
Send the money that you owe us!

THE WORLD OF NUMBERS.

If a bad boy could have been a possibility in such a model village as Haylington, Tommy Spratt would have been that boy; but, as it was, overawed by the vicar, the vicar's wife, the vicar's three strong-minded daughters, the schoolmaster, the schoolmistress, and the six pupil teachers, the natural wickedness of his disposition only displayed itself in an intense hatred of study, especially of that division of the "three R's" known as arithmetic.

"I hate figgers, I do; I wish they was blowed," soliloquized that hardened youth of ten as one arithmetic afternoon he set off for school. As support for the outer man during the fatiguing journey he carried in his right hand a sodden piece of gingerbread, while with the other he restrained by a string a half-penny air-ball, colored orange, destined to beguile the tedious hours.

Tommy Spratt left his home with no other intention than that of going straight to school; but Tommy Spratt was mortal, and one hot, dusty lane led to the school-room, where a grimy slate and scrapy pencil awaited him, while the other meandered through green fields, he did not even hesitate, but turned at once into the shady paths of temptation.

He cast himself on the grass and prepared to take an invigorating taste of the delicious though crumbly refreshment he had provided, having first carefully secured his air-ball to the leathern belt, which, fastened by a brazen buckle in the shape of an uncoiled dragon, gathered his Holland blouse into graceful folds. Now, whether Master Tommy's dereliction from the paths of virtue rendered him no longer amenable to the laws of gravity, or whether the air-ball was endowed with supernatural powers, it is impossible to say; all that this veracious chronicle can tell is, that instead of Tommy keeping the miniature balloon down on earth, it, like Mr. Dryden's Timotheus,

> "Raised a mortal to the skies."

"Hullo!" he cried in alarm; "I don't like this. Let me go."

But by degrees he grew accustomed to the sensation, and rather enjoyed it than otherwise; it was so pleasant it soothed him to slumber—a slumber from which he was aroused by a violent concussion of his head against a corner curbstone.

How long he lay in a state of semi-insensibility he never knew; but at last he struggled and sat upright, finding himself, the air-ball still attached to his belt, in a crowd of odd-looking creatures. They all of them varied in size, but they were as a rule below the stature of human beings, the most remarkable thing about them being that every one, like the sandwich men of London, carried a board on which was inscribed every description of number.

When they saw Tom open his eyes, there was one universal question: "Who divides him?"

"Oh! please don't," said Tommy, in mortal dread. "I ain't at all good to eat, but this here is," tendering them the remains of the gingerbread, which had been reduced to a shapeless mass during the perils of his journey.

No one seemed to take any notice of Master Spratt's suggestion, but one stout old man, bearing the number 441, asked with dignity:

"Are you even or uneven?"

Tom scratched his head, unable to reply, and a second broke in with:

"What's your number?"

"16," replied Tom, readily, that being the number in Balaclava cottages, Victoria row, where Mrs. Spratt had lately taken up her humble abode.

"That you ain't," cried an indignant voice; and a short, fussy gentleman burst from the crowd, and pointed to the legend 16 inscribed upon his board. "Here, 2, 4, 8!"

In obedience to his call, three numbers bowed humbly before him.

"Chastise that fellow!"

"That's mean," blubbered Tom. "Three upon one! Yer ought to be ashamed of yerselves, yer ought. Give me a hand up, one of yer."

The cry again arose: "Who divides you?" and the first stout man added, with some contempt:

"I must. 2, run and fetch 1."

"Fetch him yourself," retorted 2. "I don't divide you."

441 cast an anxious glance around; then, catching sight of 3, he began promptly: "3, depart and seek for 1," when the hurried entrance of a new comer rendered the dispatch of the messenger unnecessary.

He was a jaded, harassed boy, whose countenance might have been pretty but for a certain strained look of attention. His whole body appeared worn out with fatigue as he feebly gasped.

"Where's 5? I've been all over the town looking for you, 5," he added, reproachfully, as the other drew near. "The army want you to black their boots."

5 immediately started off at a rapid pace, while 16 said:

"Come, look alive! help that youngster out of the gutter."

1 meekly obeyed; but when he caught a better view of Tom's figure, he answered, indignantly:

"He hasn't got a number. I don't see why I should wait on him any more than the others."

"But, my dear 1," murmured 3, in a tone of cutting contempt, "you know you divide everything."

And so saying the crowd moved on, 16 having first ordered 2, 4 and 8 to cut away the air-ball from Tommy's waist.

At any other time Master Spratt would have bewailed the loss, but that moment it passed unnoticed, as he was intent upon his new companion, who inquired of 8 what he was to do with this unnumbered boy, the adjective being uttered with as much contempt as an inhabitant of this world would throw into the term unlettered.

"Take him to the king to be registered," retorted 8, and flew off to answer a hasty summons from 24.

"What place is this?" asked Tommy, meekly.

"Multiplication lane, and that's Rule-of-Three market," returned his companion. "But come, now, what is your number?"

Tommy felt ashamed to confess he didn't know; he thought he'd like to be No. 1.

"Don't you!" replied the other, misanthropically. "I'm 1."

"Can't there be another 1?"

"I wish there could," retorted his friend.

Tommy ventured to ask, "Why?"

"Because it'd divide the work, but nothing can't divide 1."

"But what is all this about division?" inquired Tom, whose escape from the afternoon lesson had led him into a far wider field of figures.

"Why, don't you know that every figure may order about those that divide it? They're his slaves. 2, 4, and 8 have to wait on 16, and 16 has to wait on 32, and they all have to wait on 64. Some of them may have many servants, some have but few, but they all have me."

There was a world of pathos in his tone.

"Of course," said Tom, "1 divides everything."

"Yes, everything, even 2 and 3; and they're the hardest masters of all; they've a deal of waiting to do; but they shift most of it on to me. But here we are at arithmetical progression."

"What's that?" asked Master Spratt.

"The king's palace, of course. Stop a moment, though." And 1 drew respectfully back, as an elderly gentleman with a large board, on which was inscribed 482964, stopped up the doorway.

"Where are you going, 1, the indivisible?"

1 grew red at the taunt; his weak point was his indivisibility.

"I am going, O many-figured 482964, to the king, and bear with me the unnumbered boy."

482964 drew back his skirts to let them pass, and the boys hurried on through a long line of soldiers who, Tommy observed, were all uneven multiples of 5. On his requesting an explanation of this, 1 said:

"They're the army; all the 5's are soldiers, and all the 7's are sailors, and where the two meet, as in 34 or 105, they serve as marines on alternate days."

"Oh!" said Tommy, and the matter dropped.

They passed on through the outer courts into an inner chamber, where a large and merry party were assembled. In one corner a group of princesses, the very lowest of whom was at least a million, were playing at "buzz," with such rapidity and precision that Tommy's head swam with the effort of following them. In another portion of the room a little princess (whose number terminated in five noughts, such being the royal prerogative) was doing her sums by means of her father's subjects, who stood on one another's heads, and whirled in and out in a manner incomprehensible to ordinary mortals, accustomed to the comparatively tame use of slate and pencil.

The king reclined upon a couch, dedicating a new novel, entitled "Comic Sections," to four secretaries at once.

"Whence comes this numberless creature? And 1, too! 1, how darest thou intrude within the groves of arithmetical progression?"

"O thou of many numbers!" answered 1, prostrating himself, "I have brought hither this boy, who has descended on this earth by a strange conveyance, hitherto unknown, in order that thou, O most divisible, shouldst bestow on him a number and a place in the royal register."

The king frowned, the secretaries followed suit, and the unhappy 1 sank beneath the glowing storm of their eyes.

"What number shall we give him?" said the king, pensively. "Fetch hither the register."

A small detachment of subjects carried in with difficulty 8,900 volumes, and the four secretaries set to work with a will.

After looking for some hours, one of the secretaries, with a low bow, announced all were occupied—that the last number used was 89,999,999, and that therefore the new-comer must be 90,000,000.

The king for one moment foamed at the mouth; then, recovering his speech, flew at the secretary (71032), and, tearing off his number, cried:

"The traitor has dared to propose that this stranger, this indivisible boy, shall henceforth become one of the royal family—one of the nearest to our own person!"

Every one hooted 71032, who hid behind his fellow secretaries to escape the popular storm.

"No," continued the prince, "some other plan must be thought of. Whoever brings, before to-morrow at noon, an unoccupied number, not over 89,999,999, for this boy, shall have a nought added to his name."

The people shouted and withdrew; but Tommy, who had never before looked on royalty, lingered behind to stare open-mouthed at the gorgeous rooms and grand company.

The king continued his dictation, never observing the absence of 72032; so every 4th chapter of the novel was missing; but this, of course, only made it the more interesting.

Tommy's curiosity soon got the better of his manners, and he interrupted them with,

"What did you have for dinner? what's your name? and how old are you?"

"Boy," said the prince, "you are as yet unnumbered."

"Well, come now, that ain't my fault, you know," argued Tommy.

The king had never seen it in this light before, and his face grew milder and more gentle, so Tommy dared to add,

"What's your name, or number?"

"I," said the king, with pride, "I am the Innumerable Nought."

"Whatever is that?" thought Tommy; but he didn't ask, only went on to himself, "Nought into nought, nought remains; multiply by nought, and then divide by nought, and the answer is nought." But he soon became confused and gave it up.

"You do not seem to understand."

And so saying, the king unwound from his waist a white satin scarf of prodigious length, on which was embroidered in gold thread an endless succession of noughts—thus, 00000000, etc. Tom looked at him with awe.

"What divides you?" he asked, repeating the current phrase, and acting up to the spirit of that proverb which advises you what course to pursue when you find yourself in the city of the seven hills.

"Everything!" was the proud reply; on which Tommy resumed his former calculations, and relapsed into a temporary state of hopeless imbecility.

* * * * * * * * * *

No. 1, and Tommy both passed a restless and feverish night; but ere they left for Arithmetical Progression in the morning, the mind of No. 1 was made up. He would gain the promised nought; and being thus promoted to 10 (while the original of that number was degraded to his humble position), he would have no less than three servants.

"And which of you," asked the Innumerable Nought, "has thought of a number to bestow on this waif of the skies?"

His majesty piqued himself on the poetical turn of his sentence.

"Please sir, I have." And 1 stepped forward with a little bow and flourish.

"Well," said 0, eyeing him scornfully, "proceed."

"O, 0 the infinite, what if he should be a fraction?"

"A what?" asked a chorus of voices. "What in the world of numbers do you mean?"

"May I never be divided," said the king, "if I can understand you!"

No. 1 began to explain what a fraction was, and suggested that Tommy should be ½.

"And 1 should not have dared to propose this if it had not been that the wretched boy had hitherto been numberless, and therefore half a loaf would be better than no bread."

The king, ever ready to encourage talent, by his example, and to reward it lavishly with smiles, held out his hand to No. 1, who knelt and humbly kissed it.

"Your ingenuity is—as virtue ever is—its own reward. You are no longer the lowest in the kingdom; for Tommy Spratt—" (that young gentleman had been careful, in the absence of any number to which he could lay claim, to inform them of his name), "for Tommy Spratt takes his place as the slave of slaves and divisor of 1.

Tommy was about to weep—he had actually gone so far as to lift his cuff for the purpose of drying his eyes, when a thought struck him.

"And where's ¼ then? He'd divide me, and ⅛, and 1-16, and 1-32, and 1-64?" he went on, taking a spiteful delight in seeing the grand blank of incomprehension which overspread the features of his listeners. "And I dare say, if the truth was known, you're some of your fractions yourselves."

"Youth," said the king, in a tone of the utmost severity, "be silent!"

"And I have heard," continued Tommy, whose hitherto-despised and hated arithmetic began to stand him in good stead, "and I have heard tell of decimals, and if you are innumerable, I believe you're neither more nor less than a circulating decimal yourself!"

For one moment only the king was stunned by Tommy's unexplained audacity; then his great mind rose to the occasion.

"He is convicted by his own mouth of treason," for though 0 was ignorant of the meaning of the word, he guessed no compliment was intended by the term. "Take him and one to the battlements, and cast them into the moat."

Once more Tommy found himself the center of a crowd of numbers, who, seizing on him and the hapless 1, bound them together hand and foot, and bore them in triumph to the battlements. They only met with one slight interruption, when a wrathful number, with a cruel laugh, fastened to them the air-ball, the faithful companion of Tom's perilous voyage to that inhospitable world.

Thus they proceeded in a procession to the ramparts, when a large crowd was assembled to witness their execution. With many a taunt and jeer they tossed them over, but, to the astonishment of the multitude, after sinking slowly for some seconds, the air-ball began to take effect, and, impelled by a favoring breeze, they arose out of reach of their tormenters.

Ere he could utter a word of thankfulness of joy at this unexpected deliverance, Tommy Spratt found himself lying in the grass under the shady tree, the gingerbread crumbled to nothing in his hand, and the air-ball floating serenely above him.

From that day Tommy Spratt became a changed boy, remarkable especially for two good qualities—his persevering attention to arithmetic, and his unremitting and tender care of No. 1.—Hood's London Comic Annual.

A New Chill Cure.

A writer in the Terre Haute (Ind.) Journal has discovered a new cure for the ague. He says to those afflicted with this provoking malady, crawl down stairs head foremost. Laugh at the idea if you please, but do your crawling first; you can then afford to laugh. Just as the chill is coming on, start at the top of a long flight of stairs, and crawl down on your hands and feet, head foremost. You never did harder work in your life, and when you arrive at the bottom, instead of shaking, you will find yourself puffing, red in the face, and perspiring freely, from the strong exertions made in the effort to support yourself. Try it. It won't cost you near as much as quinine or patent medicines, and if it fails it will only do what they do every day.

Heaven's Fallen Sister.

[In the appended pleasant sketch of the country juryman felicitating himself upon his liberation from jury duty and prospect of soon being upon the old farm again, the reader will recognize the peculiar genius of a writer whose previous "Farm Ballads" are worth this addition. The lines are from the Detroit Tribune, and express with appropriate simplicity the yearning and excellent feeling which must always come over good hearts abroad at thought of returning to what Dickens so beautifully calls "Heaven's Fallen Sister—Home:"]

GOIN' HOME TO-DAY.

My business on the jury's done—the quibblin' all is through—
I've watched the lawyers, right and left, and give my verdict true;
I stuck so long unto my chair, I thought I would grow in;
And if I do not know myself, they'll get me there ag'in.
But now the court's adjourned for good, and I have got my pay;
I'm loose at last, and, thank the Lord, I'm goin' home to-day.

I've somehow felt uneasy, like, since first day I come down;
It is an awkward game to play the gentleman in town;
And this 'ere Sunday suit of mine, on Sunday rightly sets,
But when I wear the stuff a week, it somehow galls and frets;
I'd rather wear my homespun rig of pepper, salt, and gray—
I'll have it on in half a jiff, when I get home to-day.

I have no doubt my wife looked out, as well as any one—
As well as any woman could—to see that things was done;
For though Melinda, when I'm there, won't set her foot out doors,
She's very careful, when I'm gone, to tend to all the chores.
But nothing prospers half so well when I go on to stay,
And I will put things into shape when I get home to-day.

The morning that I came away we had a little bout;
I coolly took my hat and left, before the show was out,
For what I said was naught whereat she ought to take offense;
And she was always quick at words, and ready to commence.
But then she's first one to give up when she has had her say,
And she will meet me with a kiss when I go home to-day.

My little boy—I'll give 'em leave to match him if they can;
It's fun to see him strut about, and try to be a man!
The gamest, cheeriest little chap you'd ever want to see!
And then they laugh because I think the child resembles me.
The little rogue! he goes for me like robbers for their prey;
He'll turn my pockets inside out when I get home to-day.

My little girl—I can't contrive how it should happen thus—
That God could pick that sweet bouquet and fling it down to us!
My wife, she says that han'some face will some day make a stir;
And then I laugh, because she thinks the child resembles her.
She'll meet me half way down the hill, and kiss me, any way,
And light my heart up with her smiles when I go home to-day!

If there's a heaven upon the earth, a fellow knows it when
He's been away from home a week, and then gets back again.
If there's a heaven above the earth, there often, I'll be bound,
Some homesick fellow meets his folks and hugs 'em all around.
But let my creed be right or wrong, or be it as it may,
My heaven is just ahead of me—I'm goin' home to-day!

The performances at which Miss Kellogg was the attraction gave a return of $21,620, and Lucca was worth $128,793, making the gross receipts $150,413. This exceeds by nearly $30,000 the sum that Nilsson brought to the treasury last year.

The great English chancery suit of Tomley vs. Chase heirs, involving an estate of £50,000,060 sterling, or about $260,000,000, which has been in the London courts for the last thirty years, has been decided in favor of the Chase heirs, who number about 100. Mr. B. F. Chase, of Louisville, received intelligence of his good fortune while watching the turning of the wheel in the late Louisville lottery.

How to Pickle Pork.

The first essential is a good, sweet barrel—not a molasses barrel, but a new barrel, made from well seasoned white oak staves, without any sap in them. If there is any sap in the staves the brine will leak through, and the pork will be spoiled with rust. Good salt is another requisite for pickling pork. Salt known in the West as "ground alum," or the salt made at Syracuse, N. Y., is good. When the hogs are killed and the flesh perfectly cold (not frozen), lay the hog on his side and cut straight down the center of the back until the knife strikes the bone. Then turn him on his back, and cut through the ribs close to the backbone, so as to meet the cut made from the other side. Cut off the head, and your pig will be in halves; cut the leaf lard from the ribs; cut off the shoulder and ham; cut out all the lean meat from the side; then cut the sides in strips about three inches wide, cutting across from the back to the belly. When you have your sides all cut in this way, take your barrel and cover the bottom three-fourths of an inch deep with salt; then take your pieces of pork and set them on edge, the skin next to the barrel, and bind them around in the barrel, making the circle smaller and smaller, until you have a perfect layer, and as close together as you can well press the pieces with the hand; then fill all open spaces with salt. Then, with a square ended stick or maul pound the pork down until it is smooth on the top. Then cover with salt about five-eighths of an inch deep. Then proceed with another layer, as before, and so on till the barrel is filled to within three or four inches of the top. Then make a brine as strong as can be made with salt and boiling soft water; skim the brine and let it cool. When cold, pour it on the meat until the barrel is filled within two inches of the top. Put a board, cut to fit the inside of the barrel, on top of the pork, and lay upon it a "nigger head" rock weighing about forty pounds. Keep the barrel in a cool place, if you have one; if not, keep it almost anywhere out of the sun, and you will have good pickled pork as long as you keep it completely covered with brine. I have never lost any pork put up in this way, and I have kept it in cellars, on the first floor, and in garrets.—Cor. Rural New Yorker.

Charcoal for Sick Animals.

When one of our animals becomes sick, our rule has always been to give nothing unless we knew exactly what to do; and in the meantime attended to every exterior comfort practicable. If the weather is cold, place it in warm quarters, avoid all exposure, and attend to pure air and strict cleanliness. But there is one medicine that can never do harm, and is commonly beneficial. This is pulverized charcoal. Nearly all sick animals become so by improper eating in the first place. Nine cases out of ten the digestion is wrong. Charcoal is the most efficient and rapid corrective. It will cure, in a majority of cases, if properly administered. An example of its use: The hired man came in with the intelligence that one of the finest cows was very sick, and a kind neighbor proposed the usual drugs and poisons. The owner being ill, and unable to examine the cow, concluded that the trouble came from some over-eating, and ordered a teacupful of pulverized charcoal given in water. It was mixed, placed in a junk bottle, the head held upward, and the water with its charcoal poured downward. In five minutes improvement was visible, and in a few hours the animal was in the pasture quietly eating grass. Another instance of equal success occurred with a young heifer which became badly bloated by eating green apples after a hard wind. The bloat was so severe that the sides were almost as hard as a barrel. The old remedy, saleratus, was tried for the purpose of correcting the acidity. But the attempt to put it down always caused coughing, and it did little good. Half a teacupful of fresh powdered charcoal was next given. In six hours all appearances of bloat had gone, and the heifer was well.—Cor. American Stock Journal.

Cause of Potato Disease.

I have been watching the potato disease with interest for years. I am satisfied that the potato rot in this locality is caused by a small white insect eating through the skin of the potato during the growing season; it is too small to be seen by the naked eye. I have noticed where the rot is worst the potatoes are covered with little white specks; applying the microscope to these, they looked as if they were cut and chewed potato and pushed out in order to make an entrance for the little intruder. I took my knife and gently pared the skin away, watching all the time with the glass; my expectations were realized. I saw a small grub come out backward; with my knife I moved him on a piece of glass which I had ready to examine him; he never ceased kicking and flouncing till he died. I repeated it several times with the same result, concluding that the light caused almost instant death.—Rural New Yorker.

Lice on Cattle and Colts.

A correspondent from Nashwaaksis hands the Colonist Farmer, Canada, a simple method, long used in that locality, for killing lice on cattle: Make a strong brine with common salt, and apply it two or three times, rubbing in well with a brush. This never fails to remove the vermin. Scurvy on cattle can be successfully treated by the application of fresh hog's lard to the affected parts, previously washed clean with soap and water.

Helpful Hints for Housewives.

To Cook Apples and Rice.—Core and pare as many apples as will fill a pudding-dish; stew them so that they are nearly soft. Boil half a teacup of rice; when nearly soft, add sugar, salt and a pint of milk. Place the apples in the pudding-dish, turn the rice over them, filling up the core of each apple with sugar before putting in the rice. Bake until it is a nice brown. Serve with cream, or without any sauce.

Calicoes often fade simply because they are improperly washed. To insure their not fading, infuse three gills of salt into four quarts of water; put the calico in while it is hot, and let it remain there until cold. By this means the colors of the goods are made permanent, and will not fade with subsequent washings.

Meat is much better for family use when at least one week old, in cold weather. The English method for keeping meat for some time has great merit. Experts say, hang up a quarter of meat with the cut end up, being the reverse of the usual way, by the leg, and the juice will remain in the meat and not run down to the cut and dry up the evaporation. It is worth a trial, and when made will be continued.

Preserving Meat and Fish by Sugar.—To preserve fish by sugar, open them and rub the sugar in, the same manner as salt, leaving it there for a few days. If the fish be intended for long keeping, keep dry after this, taking care to expose new surface to the air frequently. Fish preserved in this manner will be found, when dressed, much superior to what has been cured by salt or smoke. For salmon of six pounds weight, a tablespoonful of brown sugar is sufficient.

Eggs in Case of Trouble.—The white of an egg is said to be a specific for fish bones sticking in the throat. It is to be swallowed raw, and will carry down a bone easily and certainly. There is another fact touching eggs, which it will be well to remember. When, as sometimes by accident, corrosive sublimate is swallowed, the white of one or two eggs taken will neutralize the poison, and change the effect to that of a dose of calomel.

Apple Tapioca Pudding.—One coffee-cup of tapioca, covered with three pints of cold water, and soaked over night. In the morning set it on the side of range, or stove, stirring it often, till it becomes transparent. If too thick, add more water, till it is as thin as good clear starch. Stir in a small teaspoonful of salt. Pare and core, without breaking, as many good apples as will set close on the bottom of a medium-sized pudding-dish. Fill the holes full of sugar, and a very little nutmeg and cinnamon; then pour over the tapioca, and bake slowly till the apples are soft and well done. To be eaten with hard sauce, which is made as follows: One cup of sugar, two-thirds of a cup of butter, beaten together until perfectly smooth and white.

Dat Grubbing Hoe.

Many years ago, there lived in a beautiful little country town in North Alabama a genial, warm-hearted old gentleman, Judge H——, well known throughout the State as well for his marked generosity as his congeniality. Among his chattel possessions—for the time we are speaking of was long before the war—was an old negro named Jake, or, as he was more familiarly called, Uncle Jake, and there never lived a more provoking old darkey; for Uncle Jake, although a favorite, had many weaknesses, and among others he was particularly regardless of truth, to such an extent, in fact, that occasionally the good old Judge found it necessary to punish him. It was the custom in these days for the town constable to administer a flogging, for a consideration, whenever the master was disinclined to officiate, and the constable of this particular town had a severe reputation for proficiency among the darkies who had now and then been so unfortunate as to come under his hands. Jake, although he had never been there, was well posted, and had a great repugnance to Massa G——, who was the incumbent at that time. On one occasion, during the Christmas days, while the old Judge was quite severely indisposed, Uncle Jake had been guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishment was deemed necessary, so the Judge wrote as follows:

Mr. G——: Please give the bearer thirty-nine lashes and charge to me.

Judge H.

Calling up Uncle Jake, the Judge ordered him to carry the note to G——, who would give him a grubbing hoe!

Jake started off up town, but his suspicions were aroused. He couldn't understand what the Judge wanted with a grubbing hoe at Christmas time, and as his conscience was not as clear as it should have been, the result of his suspicion was that the truth suddenly flashed upon him—he was to be whipped. Seeing a boy approaching, he took out the note and said:

"Massa Bob, what's in dis note; got so many dis morning I got em mixed."

The boy read the note and explained its contents to Jake, who whistled and laughed to himself as a bright idea struck him. Calling a negro boy who was near, Jake said:

"Boy, does you want to make a quarter?"

"Of course I does."

"Well, take dis down dar, to Massa G——, and get a garden hoe, and I'll wait here till you comes back, and den gives you a quarter."

The boy hurried off to accomplish his errand, and in due course delivered the note to G——, who took him into the yard, locked the gate, and proceeded, despite all the boy's protestations of innocence, to administer the desired flogging, while Jake hurried off home, chuckling over the happy result of what might have been a serious business for him.

That evening the Judge called him up and inquired:

"Jake, did you get that grubbing hoe?"

"No, massa; I give a boy a quarter to fotch dat note to Massa G——, and I spec he got dat hoe."

The Ideal of Christ's Person.

The Christ of painters is blue-eyed and golden-haired, and such a one never existed save in their imaginations. A blonde in the race of Syrian Jews is unknown. He was a brun (since we have no word in our language which describes a man with dark hair and eyes, and olive complexion) of that race. There are pious people who have recourse to a miracle to make him a blonde, with whom it is useless to argue. Generally, the stoutest defenders of his divinity believe that in taking on himself man's nature he subjected himself to the laws which govern it, and that he thus inherited the characteristics of the race from which he sprung. Leonardo, Guido, Raphael, and other masters, created their Christ regardless of historical requirements, and invested him with an ideal character which he never possessed, according to their idea of the beautiful in art. This model, once imposed, has since been perpetrated by all painters, because they think blue eyes more spiritual than dark, and golden hair more godlike than black.

They had an idea, too, that the Jewish type of face was ignoble, which may have had some foundation from the degradation to which the race was forced for so many centuries by persecuting Christians, and they thus had their prejudices against investing the Savior with the traits of a people whom they despised. But the Jew of Syria in the day of Jesus was, before his persecution and consequent debasement, perhaps the equal of the man of any other race in point of natural advantages. There are Syrian Jews now, in isolated habitations in Palestine, who are remarkable for their handsome traits.—Albert Rhodes, in Appletons' Journal.

Moles.

Ladies have a horror of those black eminences on the face called moles. Even homely men dislike them, but there they ordinarily remain as guides in giving a description of an applicant for a passport.

A mole is a thickening of the epidermis, or outer skin, probably induced by an obstruction in the outward ends of a cluster of sudorific ducts or sweat-tubes. To be clear of them readily, run a fine needle through one of them from one side to the other.

Let an assistant take hold of both ends of the needle and pull so as to make a neck of clear skin at the base. It is neither painful, difficult, nor attended with hardly a tinge of blood. Next ligate that neck behind the out-dragged mole with a delicate, strong, waxed silk thread, that cuts off the circulation; clip away the unused thread and await the result. A slight local inflammation ensues, which is the gluing together the new surface of the stretched skin.

In a few days the old offense drops off, deprived of nutrition, leaving no scar. If a little reddish by the remains of a subsiding inflammation, wash the spot occasionally with cold water. Proceed to the next, and the next, seriatim. Before aware of it, any mole disfigured face may become as good as new.

Capt. Burton and the Savages.

During one of Capt. Burton's voyages in the Essex he was becalmed off an island of the Society group, in the South Pacific, and one day a valuable case of surgical instruments was stolen from his cabin. A number of the savages, with the chief of the island at their head, had been on board, and he knew the thief was one of their number. On the following day he pulled ashore with the best part of his crew, and found the chief in company with several of the warriors, sitting before his hut. Burton made known his want through his interpreter, whereupon his sable monarch expressed unbounded surprise. Not only was he sure that none of his people had stolen the articles, but he could assure his milk-skinned brother that his people would not steal under any circumstances.

The captain assumed a confident attitude, and begged to inform his swarthy majesty that he (Burton) knew where the missing property was. He had the power to discover such things. It might save the chief a vast deal of trouble if he would at once produce the lost property.

Upon this the chief declared he would have nothing more to say upon the subject; and to add seeming weight to the assertion, he filled his pipe with tobacco and commenced to strike fire upon a piece of punk-wood with a flint and steel. Capt. Burton said to the interpreter to bid him to stop.

"Tell him," said he, "that I will bring down fire from heaven into his pipe."

The chief received the announcement with a look of incredulity, but nevertheless dropped his flint and steel, and suffered the captain to proceed.

Burton drew from his pocket a small sun-glass or magnifying lens, and concealed it in his hand; he bade the chief to smoke, and at the same time he turned the bowl of the pipe toward the sun, and brought the force point of the rays upon the tobacco. The dusty chieftain puffed out a fragrant cloud, then looked at the bowl of his pipe and then knelt in awe before the pale-faced captain. He would not tempt the wonderful power of the medicine man any further.

Burton obtained his case of instruments from the chief's own hands.

There is living in Birmingham, Eng., a boy with microscopic sight. When he was quite young he suffered from diseased eyes, which were left in this strange state when they were restored. His case is attracting much attention from scientists, who are almost baffled by it. He has a gift for sketching quite remarkable, and as he naturally draws with the minuteness of one studying the subject under a microscope, his sketches are very valuable. He is willing to examine and depict anything his friends bring to him, with the exception of water; but to look into it and magnify all its contents is too frightful to him, and no inducement can make him study it.

A Boston paper says: "J. S. Clarke, comedian, better known as 'Major Wellington De Boots,' was married two or three years ago to one of the prettiest actresses on the London stage." This will very much astonish Mr. Clarke's present wife and family. He has been for a long time married to Asia Booth, sister of Edwin Booth.

Too Much Credit.

Mr. Keene, a shrewd and thrifty farmer of Allenborough, owned a large flock of sheep, and one autumn, when it came housing time, he was greatly annoyed upon missing a number of his finest muttons; among them three or four wethers which he had raised and fattened for his own table. He was sure it was not the work of dogs, and the most he could do was to await further developements.

On the following spring, when his sheep were turned out to pasture, he instituted a careful watch, and ere long he detected Tom Stickney, a neighboring farmer, in the act of pilfering a sheep; but he made no noise about it at the time. Stickney was a man well-to-do, and Keene did not care to expose him.

Autumn came again, and upon counting up his flock, Mr. Keene found eight sheep missing. He made out a bill in due form to Thomas Stickney for the eight sheep, and presented it. Stickney choked and stammered, but did not back down. Like a prudent man he paid the bill and pocketed the receipt.

Another spring-time came, and Mr. Keene's sheep were again turned out. Another autumn came, and the farmer again took an account of his stock, and this time fifteen sheep were missing. As before, he made out the bill to Tom Stickney for the whole number missing; but this time Tom objected.

"It is too much of a good thing," said he. "Fifteen sheep! Why, bless your soul, I hadn't had a fifth part of 'em."

Mr. Keene was inexorable.

"There is the bill," said he, "and I have made it out in good faith. I have made no fuss when my sheep have been missing, because I deemed your credit good and sufficient."

"Well," groaned Tom, with a big gulp. "I suppose I must obey; but," he added, emphatically, "we'll close that account from this time. You have given me too much credit altogether—some other rascal has been stealing on the strength of it."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

A Curious Mania.

The peculiar vagaries into which the lottery mania lead people are often as interesting as they are pitiable for contemplation. The intoxication of drink and of hope are equally fatal to success in life when too much indulged in; one will work nearly as much ruin as the other. A singular instance of the destructive tendency of the "policy" fever, and of its tenacity, too, has lately come to light in Baltimore. A few years ago a grocer died there, leaving his wife the store and property worth about $2,000, on which she managed to live comfortably. One day a customer mentioned to her that a friend had made $200 on a lottery ticket, and this so worked upon her mind that she began investing in that way until in a short time she had expended all she had owned and had received nothing. Since then she has opened a lodging room for men and boys, where a bed can be had for fifteen cents, a bench for ten cents, and an old blanket on the floor for four cents. The room is well filled every night, and as affording shelter, is the means of doing some good; but that is not the motive for which the establishment is opened. The poor woman is as ardent as ever in the belief that she will one day draw a fortune, and she requires of every lodger that he will try to dream of the lucky numbers, and must tell her of them in the morning. Whenever she draws anything on such information she gives a part to the dreamer. In this way she lives along from day to day, putting her few cents of surplus into worthless pasteboard tickets, and receiving her regular dividends of disappointment.

Texan Cattle—An Enormous Interest.

Texas is credited with 3,494,043 of the 23,820,608 cattle in the United States; and these cattle of ours are estimated to be worth $13,584,272, or less than $4 a head. It will readily be admitted, however, that the number of our cattle is much larger than the estimates given in for taxation from which the above figures are taken. Probably, after all the depletion of recent years, it would not be extravagant to set down the number of our cattle at 5,000,000.

The estimate of the value of our cattle at four dollars per head is ridiculously low. At least, in forming a proper idea of the wealth of our State in cattle, it may be justly said that if the improved process of cattle-tending now being introduced should reduce the number of cattle, they will increase the value per head. So that in putting down for Texas 5,000,0000 of cattle now as worth not less than $30,000,000, we are, in our own opinion, below the actual truth at the present time, and far below what will be the value in a very few years to come.

This sum of $30,000,000 is two and a half times more than the officially reported value of all the merchandise in the State, more than twice as much as the value of all the miscellaneous property, two and a half times more than the merchandise and miscellaneous property put together, six times as large as all the reported money on hand or at interest, and larger than all these other sources of wealth put together.—Houston (Texas) Union.

The Erie-Gould Compromise.

The settlement made by Jay Gould with the Directors of the company, which apparently terminates the Erie imbroglio, is perhaps the most remarkable of the eventful occurrences in the history of the Erie road. Gould, contrary to his usual practice of maintaining the contest in court till his opponents were exhausted, has surrendered to the Board $9,600,000 of securities, etc., for which he was sued, estimated at a cash value of between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000, and the proceedings against him have been withdrawn. The Grand Opera House, several tracts of real estate, and 60,000 shares of Erie stock are included in the transfer. The question now discussed in financial circles is for what consideration Gould surrendered this vast amount of property, and speculation is rife as to combinations between him and the directors, by which he receives, directly or indirectly, a full equivalent, and besides acquires a large share in the management of the company. It is also suspected that he has quietly cornered the stock, and that the directors will aid him in squeezing the "shorts."—Inter-Ocean.

The Auburn Courier comes out in an enlarged quarto form. It is an excellent local paper and we rejoice to see friend Mays succeeding, as is shown by this last proof.—Warsaw Indianian.

The Auburd Courier comes to us enlarged and otherwise improved We wish you abundent success. Brother Mays.—Logansport Pharos.

The Auburn Courier is out in a quarto form, much enlarged and otherwise improved, and containing a much larger amount of reading matter, than ever before. We congratulate Tom. Mays, the genial editor, upon this substantial indication of prosperity, and also upon his success in getting up a wide awake reliable paper.—Fort Wayne Gazette.

The Auburn Courier has been enlarged to an 8-page 48 column paper. We are glad to see this indication of prosperity and success on the part of our friend Mays. It shows that the good people of Auburn, and of DeKalb County, generally appreciate a "good thing." and are ready to give enterprise at all times a harty support.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

BULLETIN

Prices for the Holidays!

GREAT REDUCTION ON

Raisins, Currants, Peaches, Prunes, Teas,

Etc. We purchased 1000 boxes No. 1 Layer Raisins before the advance, and now offer them at 12½c per pound, or $2.50 per box of 25 lbs. This is equal to 10c per lb, and the lowest they have ever been in this market.

We also purchased a large lot of Zanta Currants. This fruit is generally considered low at 15c, we now offer the best quality at 10c.

The greatest reduction is on teas—selling 2 and 3 chests a day—no intermediate profits to pay, as we purchase direct of the importers and sell to the customers, thereby saving the profits of the Jobber, speculator and wholesaler. The failure of five of the largest tea importers of N. Y. has broken the tea market. We have taken advahtage of the situation, and purchased large quantities at low rates, and we now offer all grades 15c per pound lower than former prices

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Holidays, farewell.

Sleighing tip top.

Saw logs are sliding in.

Three days last week were stingers.

Get your name on the next "roll of honor."

The dance, Christmas Eve, was largely attended.

Turkey raffles have been frequent of late.

Fresh oysters by the can or dish at the Bakery.

Call in and tell us the news of your locality.

The roads were never in better condition than now.

Not one case of "up-his-snoot-ic" has as yet proved fatal in this place.

The "merry sleigh bells" can yet be heard on our streets.

The delinquent tax list takes the space of reading matter.

If you are a drunkard, stop drinking and you will be a sober man.

We are obliged to some friend at Pleasant Lake for favors.

The ladies are prettier now that cold drecing winds fan their cheeks.

Again on the 22d of next Feburary the light fantastic can trip to its music.

Gust Leas, Esq, of Waterloo, has our thanks for hauling a package to the depot—gratis.

The trial of Stokes, the man who was present at the time Fisk committed suicide, is again being agitated.

The editor has gone to Ohio, this week and our readers will be minus their usual amount of local matter.

The belle of Auburn, "they say," is soon to be laid on the altar—of matrimony.

The good-looking faces of several of our lady friends appeared in the ball room, on Christmas Eve.

The coldest weather we have heard reliably reported, in this vicinity, was 26 degrees below Zero.

Several of our young ladies received rigns as a Christmas present, and their fingers are quite sociable with their mouths.

Some of our boys lost their over-shoes, caps and other articles, at the Christmas dance. Of course, they were taken through a mistake.

Last Monday the new school house at Waterloo took fire in the basement. It was extinguished before much damage was done.

Tuesday night last the school house at Feagler's Corners was entirely destroyed by fire. It is supposed to have caught from the flue.

Are the rights of no one to be respected. A Baltimore minister has been thrown out of the church just for playing whisky poker and pitch, for a few drinks in a lager beer saloon.

The exceeding cold wether, of last week has been great detriment to business, and has been very severe to railroad men. We have heard of no accidents, however, except through the daily papers.

Davenport & Co. have a fine stock of goods and are selling them right. They have the best green tea in town, we have tried it and know whereof we speak—They sell coal oil for 30 cents.

Colfax is not editor of the New York Tribune so much as he was. A recent turn of events has brought Whitelaw Reid to the top and he and the old editorial force will continue the paper in the same course marked out by Mr. Greeley.

A Vincennes man, not far away, chanced to kiss his hired girl in the milch house, while his wife saw the action through a window. It is hoped by great care and attention that his head may get well before the sleighing goes off.

The Christmas tree at the M. E. Church was largely attended, and the little folks seemed to enjoy it very much. Some valuable presents were placed upon the tree Those, of the children, whose parents could not give them a present had one from the good people of the church.

An observant young man, in this place, is constrained to make this observation: "It is disgusting to see young girls parading the streets of a modest and unassuming town like this with a tuckupbehindwiggleddarupbeolitiveness larger than they are."

"This is the place I long have sought and grieved because I found it not"—Davenport & Co.'s Drug Store, where I can get the most and best, and purest drugs for my money than any other place I know of in town.

You may dig potatoes all day, and all night, but you cannot look over the advertising colums of your local paper, without finding the names of the most enterprising men in your place. And you cannot look them over without finding something you want.

The Press is now the only paper published entirely within the county.—Waterloo Press.

We are glad to know that our neighbors have their paper of such a size that it can be published within the county. We are compelled to take in Chicago to enable us to send out the COURIER in its present enlarged form.

Notice is hereby given to the members of Auburn Lodge, No. 116, I. O. O. F. that at the regular meeting Jan 15 '73 there will be elected, three Trustees to serve one year, or until their successors in office are elected and qualified.

By order of the lodge.
F. E. DAVENPORT, Sec'y.

Bleak winter and frosty nights, have bound up the diminutive waters of Cedar Creek, and make a beautiful sheet of ice, over which the juveniles skip from morn 'till night, with almost the swiftness of a swallow in summer air. It is well that there is something to relieve the dreariness of the wild waste, which the piercing frosts have wrought in field and forest; but, the return of the vernal season, will disolve the icy chains of the Cedar, and the boys will have to fish.

MR. EDITOR:—I had the pleasure of giving your school a short visit on last Friday, and I am enabled to say that I found every room in a thriving condition. Mr. McIntosh and his able assistants are laboring hard for a good result, and I expect ere long that Auburn will have the reputation of the best school in the county. It was amusing to hear the juveniles recite their lessons, taught by Miss Anna Rainier, and gratifying to see them so deeply interested in their begining.

The method of teaching indulged in, by the several teachers, is certainly a good one, and cannot help resulting in the prosperity of any school.

At some other time I will give a more lengthy article in this direction, but at present time compels me to be brief.—Wishing to visit your school again at no distant day, I wish you all a happy New Year.
S. O.

We feel like proffering a little well-meant advice, to young ladies and young gentlemen:

"If you experience a desire to write for the public press, do not allow the foolish notion to take possession of your mind, that your first liturary effort must be clothed in rhyme. Nothing can be more fallacious. Comparatively few writers, even those of experience, are capable of producing good poetry. Upon what assumption then, should a wholly inexperienced youth, hope to excel in that particular? Our advice to young people generally, is this: Write prose; take pains to construct your sentences correctly. Undertake but little in the start. A narrative of some local event is the best subject to begin with. Send your production to your home paper, and be sure to read it careful after it has passed through the printer's hands. If the latter be a competent person, he will make all necessary corrections, which will be a guide for future efforts.

IRON FENCE.—The County Commissioners, we understand, are examining iron fences in the vicinity, with the view to the construction of a fence of that character around the county buildings. Not very long ago, a substantial wooden fence was built on these grounds, and it was converted into hitching-posts, and thereby destroyed. Have the County Board any evidence that a more expensive fence will not be treated in the same manner? And had they not better devote a little time to ascertaining whether any considerable portion of the tax-payers desire the erection of so expensive an ornament about the present county buildings?—Press

Another evidence of those finer jealous feelings, so characteristic of the Press. It may think it is fun to be constantly employed in correcting its blundering statements, but it is not very pleasant. We call them to order on the Court Yard Fence. The County did not build a substantial wooden fence 'not very long ago,' but the town of Auburn did, and that is the fence which now graces the capitol of the county. The county moved the front fence some distance east, and put in hitching posts and railing, in front, at its own expense. This is all the County has done One would hardly think it would be necessary for the Commissioners to go over the county and ascertain from each tax-payer whether they are in favor of a new fence or not, especially as the county has been at no expence in the past, in this direction. If, however, the Commissioners think this is their duty, we would suggest that, in order to economize their work, they go immediately to the editors of the Press as we can assure these officers that our neighbors have lip enough for three-fourths of the people of the county, and that, you know, is a majority.

Report of the Oyster Supper.

EDITOR COURIER:—For your last issue I presented for publication a notice for an Oyster Supper, to take place, at Case's Hall, on Christmas Eve, for the benefit of the Auburn Silver Cornet band. Now, in this, allow me to present to the public a report of the result of that effort. In the first place, let me say that only the oysters, tea, coffee, and their trimmings were furnished by the band, for it would be, most decidedly, a very wrong thing for us to take upon ourselves the whole honor of "fussing up," in such a neat tidy manner, all those beautiful cakes, pies, roasted chickens, and a host of other luxuries to compare; no, all the latter were donations from our friends in Auburn and vicinity. Our donations in this line were not only of the first quality, but there was almost a mountain of them, consequently we were enabled to furnish supper two evenings, the result of which I will now show you: Chrismas Eve there was taken in for supper, $92.25; the next evening for supper, cakes and pies sold at auction, $25.34. There were also three or four sums of money donated, which with a small amount resulting from other sales, added, made up about $3. more so that after all of our expenses were defrayed we had left in the hands of our Treasurer $79.13—not a very trifling sum for a dozen "boys" in limited circumstances, to apply on a payment for their new instruments, which cost them $480.59. This result would be much less, were it not for our exceedingly generous editor, who only half charged for his labor, and J. W Case who charged us but $5 for the use of his Hall. We wish to present our kindest regards to him and his family for so much forbearance and generosity, and the extreme kindness with which we were treated.

Since the supper we feel doubly encouraged, for we now see that every body takes an interest in the new band. We noticed several couple, who seldom take an interest in benefits, seated around our table, and to none are we more indebted than to the committee of women, made up of old and young, who labored for a whole week soliciting the donations. And to the committee composed of our leader and others we feel under renewed obligations. At our auction we noticed Dr. Ford paying $1 for a small cake, and other gentlemen 80 cts. for four pies, which showed an interest more than something to eat. To the people generally, we again tender our sincere thanks for the kindness they have have shown in this effort.

By order of the Band.
T. J. SAXTON, Sec'y.

NEWSPAPER MEN.—We regret to see so many of our exchanges grumbling about hard times, and Dame Fortune. No man in the wide world should be so happy as the publisher of a country newspaper—True, he is often out of flour, always out of money, and generally out of meat. He is frequently annoyed with little bills from his grocer hatter, tailor, butcher, druggist physician, woodsawyer, and washerwoman. His office is a place of resort for crack brained men, and sentimental women, He is constantly advised by a score of chronic grumblers, who know just how to conduct a newspaper. He burns a great deal of oil in deciphering a mess of trash from a "constant reader," usually headed "A Poem." and when he consigns it to the waste basket, he may incur the enmity of a man who owes him 75 cents. He sometimes sits for hours in a cold room dimly lighted by a tallow dip scratching his empty head with a curry comb for an "idea," The "world of letters," in which he revels, is found at the post office and they generally come in the shape of bills payable. He wears his honors, as he does his coat until they are both thread bare. His teeth are often wore out in his vain attempts to grow fat by gnawing a soup bone. But these are trifles, and should seriously annoy no one—much less a man who expects to succeed as a newspaper publisher. True, these things are a little inconvenient, but it is from the other side that the publisher draws comfort and consolation. He is never worried about the price of Government bonds. He is not troubled about the financial condition of insurance companies. He cares no more for the price of stocks, than does the king of the Cannibal Islands. The advance of diamonds, and precious stones does not effect him in the least. He is perfectly indifferent about the value of real estate, and don't care a straw for the tax-gatherer. His sleep is not disturbed by the fluctuations of the champagne market and he don't care a fig for the tax on whisky. The drouth takes nothing from his ghost of a pocket book, and the sound of fire bells does not cause a respectable yawn. He is not annoyed by delinquent tenants, and his brain is not wearied by computing interest on mortgages He does not fear the gout, nor has he any interest in the price of furs. Avarice finds no lodging place in his bosom, and the 'cankering care of glittering gold,' does not enslave him. He is perfectly indifferent to the allurements of wealth, and should be supremely happy. Surely newspaper men escape a world of trouble and anxiety.

MARRIED.—At the Weaver House, by Rev. Sandoe, S. S. Robbins and Mrs. Ruhannah Brown.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Common Pleas Court in a cause wherein the Merchants National Bank of Fort Wayne, Indiana, is Plaintiff and Thomas D. Grose and William H. Dills are defendants requiring me to make the sums of one hundred and sixty-three dollars and sixty-three cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits, for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit: Lots No. eight, 8, nine, 9, ten, 10, nineteen, 19, twenty, 20, and twenty-one, 21, in Grose and Dills' addition to the town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, Indiana.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25th, 1873,

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and cost I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

A Representative House.

Among the multitude of different branches of trade in Fort Wayne, none are of more importance than the boot and shoe trade. This branch is well represented; prominent among them all is the shoe house of Markley, Schrader & Co. They came to Fort Wayne in 1866, and by their gentlemanly deportment and close attention to business, they have acquired a trade perhaps not excelled by any house in their line. Not satisfied with bargains given their customers heretofore, they propose to do still better for them in the future. Their stock is very large, being a full line of everything needed for mens, boys and youths, women, Misses and children's wear. They are giving great bargains; one cannot know how cheap they are selling, unless they call. Examine the goods and learn prices, We advise all in want of boots, shoes or rubbers o give them a call. tf.

BROKEN HEARTS.

Mr. [illegible] Scientifically Considered.

The advances of pathology demolish for us some of the most beautiful illusions of ancient times. The heart, for instance, is degraded from its position as the high altar for devotion and affection to a mere hydraulic machine. The liver no longer plays its old role in melancholy to which it gave the name. It makes simply some bile and some sugar. The eye, after all, is only a system of lenses and refracting media of different densities, and [illegible]. But in the course of still further and more extended observation became evident the close connecting links between these organs and the presiding brain, which explains to us the intimate relationship which exists between them; expression then still lingers in the eye; hypochondriasis still has its frequent seat beneath the cartilages of the ribs, and the heart still throbs and palpitates under the various emotions. Bernard has explained to us in detail the full significance of the cold and empty heart, the heart that is light or heavy, the heart that is full to bursting, and last of all the heart that breaks outright. The great batteries of the cerebral mass send special lines of innervation to the heart, and though the communication between the heart and brain is not so swift—being only at the rate of 112 feet per second—as electricity, yet its force and volume are even more intense. The broken heart, then, is no more poetic fiction, and several instances are recorded where rupture of its strained or more especially diseased fibers has taken place under powerful mental emotion.

It was less in the literal than in the metaphorical sense, however, that we have introduced this topic. Death from a "broken heart" is literally only very rarely true. The lesion of disappointment, crushed ambition, or other depressing emotion is far less often cardiac than cerebral. Prof. Tuke has shown, in his widely quoted essays upon the influence of the mind upon the body, how the various emotions act upon the calibre of the blood-vessels to induce inflammatory processes in the different tissues of the body, nowhere more frequently or more calamitously than upon the delicate structure of the brain.

Psychical causes beget insanity in its various forms according to all observation in two-thirds at least of all the cases, and Griesinger makes a special point of the fact that among all the psychical causes it is only those which concern the emotions that terminate in this way. Purely intellectual over-exertion, no matter how exhausting, unless it be connected with affection of the passions or emotions, or with somatic excesses, induces insanity only in the very rarest cases. Of these emotional disturbances, too, it is only those which are of a depressing character that act in this way. It is questionable whether the pleasurable emotions, however great their excess, have ever contributed a case to the insane asylum. Pinel was so well assured of this fact that his first question always was, "Have you suffered vexation, grief or disappointment?" and seldom was this question answered in the negative.

The case of Horace Greeley is a striking example in confirmation of these statements. The purely intellectual exercises of his daily avocation, though often protracted to excess, and sometimes to doubt to temporary exhaustion, left his brain clear and unaffected after a proper period of repose. But he was painfully susceptible to disturbances of his emotional nature. He is said to have become, though usually placid in the extreme, quite violent, even abusive when a wrong page of proof was handed in for correction. We are told of his profound depression and despondency after the battle of Bull Run.

Mr. Greeley had arrived at that period of life, further, at which the blood vessels themselves begin to show pathological changes. The rigidity of the tubes incident to age would favor the development of morbid processes, or, more strictly speaking, would prevent the vessels from counteracting the sudden changes in the heart's action, induced by mental emotional nature in age.

And lastly, the whole career of Horace Greeley was a record of a simple life; simple in the noble sense of a preservation of the child-like spirit. By his own confession he was always the creature of impulse, but by universal concession, never of intrigue. He was vulnerable thus in a double sense, by temperament and by age.

We have the testimony of the most skillful experts in the land—and it is a great satisfaction, always, to know that such service has been secured—that the immediate cause of death was an inflammation of the meninges and the brain. The acute mania hyperæsthesia, photophobia, etc., would clearly indicate such affection. The stupor, stertorous respiration and dilated pupils consecutive, indicated as clearly also that fatal exudation had quickly supervened.—Cincinnati Clinic.

Locusts as Food.

One naturally supposes that considerable courage was possessed by the first person who cooked and ate a locust, hence the theory that famine and starvation, caused by the terrible ravages of armies of locusts, first caused the insect invaders themselves to be eaten. As they were found to be nutritious and not unpalatable, they came in this way to be considered a staple article of diet. The earliest Asiatic or African history informs us of their use as food, and they are thus occasionally mentioned in Grecian annals. The Arabs and Africans now consume them in the greatest quantities. They are gathered from the trees where they alight, are brought down when flying low, by making a dense smoke. They are then roasted with salt in an underground oven, bruised and put away for use. For the table, they are pulverized and made into a pudding, or divested of their heads, wings and legs, are boiled in water or oil. They resemble in consistence and flavor the yolks of hard boiled eggs, and various English travelers agree that they are very good eating.

A PITTSBURGH paper wants a real printer's monument erected to Horace Greeley, to be cast from worn-out type, which newspaper offices from all over the country can contribute, and be mounted on a granite base.

Forrest's "Idiot Boy."

Col. Forney, in his "Reminiscences of Public Men," [illegible] the following interesting sketch of Mr. Forrest:

Edwin Forrest was always one of us whenever he visited Washington, and, as I said in a former number, was the toast and the star of the night. He gave liberally to the Union cause without being a Republican. Though he did not [illegible] with us when we sung "John Brown," none could have been more graceful and ready in contributing to the general pleasure. One dramatic night I shall never forget Forrest was in royal condition. He came early and stayed late. He seemed prepared to make everybody happy. He needed no solicitation to display his varied stores of humor and of information. Sketches of foreign travel, photographs of Southern manners, alike of the master and the slave; his celebrated French criticism of Shakespeare; his imitation of the old clergyman of Charleston, S. C., who, deaf himself, believed everybody else to be so; his thrilling account of his meeting with Edmund Kean, at Albany, when Forrest was a boy; his incidents of Gen. Jackson; his meeting with Lafayette at Richmond, in 1825. Few that heard him can ever forget that night. But nothing that he did will be remembered longer than the manner in which he recited "The Idiot Boy," a production up to that time unknown to everybody in the room except Forrest and myself, and to me only because I heard him repeat it seven years before, when I lived on Eighth street, in the house lately known as the Waverly. These lines are so beautiful and unique that I print them for the benefit of the readers of these hasty sketches:

THE IDIOT BOY.

It has pleased God to form poor Ned
A thing of idiot mind,
Yet, to the poor unreas'ning boy,
God had not been unkind.

Old Sarah loved her helpless child,
Whom helplessness made dear;
And he was everything to her,
Who knew no hope or fear.

She knew his wants, she understood
Each half-articulate call,
For he was everything to her,
And she to him was all.

And so for many a year they lived,
Nor knew a wish beside;
But age at last on Sarah came,
And she fell sick—and died.

He tried in vain to waken her,
He called her o'er and o'er;
They told him she was dead!
The words to him no import bore.

They closed her eyes and shrouded her,
While he stood wond'ring by,
And when they bore her to the grave,
He followed silently.

They [illegible] her in the narrow house,
Th[illegible] the fun'ral stave;
And [illegible] the fun'ral train dispersed
He [illegible] by the grave.

The ra[illegible] boys that used to jeer
Whene'er they saw poor Ned,
Now stood and watched him by the grave,
And not a word they said.

They came and went and came again,
Till night at last came on;
Yet still he lingered by the grave
Till every one had gone.

And when he found himself alone
He swift removed the clay,
Then raised the coffin up in haste,
And bore it swift away.

He bore it to his mother's cot,
And laid it on the floor,
And with the eagerness of joy
He barred the cottage door.

Then out he took his mother's corse,
And placed it in a chair;
And soon he heaped the hearth,
And made the kindling fire with care.

He put his mother in her chair,
And in its wonted place,
And then he blew the fire,
Which shone reflected in her face.

And pausing now, her hand would feel,
And then her face behold:
"Why, mother, do you look so pale,
And why are you so cold?"

It had pleased God from the poor wretch
His only friend to call;
Yet God was kind to him, and soon
In death restored him all.

And when the neighbors on next morn
Had burst the cottage door,
Old Sarah's corpse was in the chair,
And Ned's upon the floor.

Singular and Impressive.

In the Golden Age Theodore Tilton relates the following of his interviews with Horace Greeley:

"About three weeks ago, Mr. Greeley said to us (clasping our hand and holding it for the last time), 'My dear friend, for thirty days and nights I have not slept; I shall never sleep again; I pray for death.' From that touching interview we retired as if stunned by a prescience of the coming calamity; and on narrating the incident to a friend, we remarked, 'It would not be strange if Mr. Greeley did not live three weeks.' The prediction was all too sadly verified; the crumbling column fell within that time.

* * * * * *

"We have no sympathy with fatalism, and yet we are free to say that Mr. Greeley's destiny was on him, and he could not escape it. There were inward causes that gnawed their way outward to this effect. He had premonitions of it, not only a few weeks, but many months ago. During some idle hours in Brooklyn early in the campaign, he said to us, with a voice of sadness and a tone of unwonted pathos, 'I have but one great ambition, and that is not the Presidency, but death.' Later in the summer (or, perhaps, early in the fall) when some friends were talking with him at a merry supper table, and when one of us gaily asked 'how he enjoyed being praised by one political party and damned by the other,' he simply answered 'that 'nothing would gratify him so much as to receive from some celestial messenger an authoritative assurance that he must die the next morning.' About the middle of October, in a Sunday evening conversation with him, the same premonitory meditations on death and immortality broke forth from his lips."

Black Supremacy Imminent in Florida.

Martha Raffle, a negro woman, residing near Jacksonville, according to Napoleon's gauge, is the greatest of women. She has been married three times. Previous to her third marriage, no accurate record has been kept of the extent to which she helped to populate the earth. Ten years ago she started on her third matrimonial career, and since that time she has been blessed with fourteen children, having ushered into the world five pairs of twins, and once, in less than a year, she became the happy mother of four children—two pairs of twins. At this rate, we fear for the ultimate ascendancy of the white population of Florida.—Savannah (Ga.) Republican.

Corks.

Cork is the bark of the evergreen oak known as Quercus suber. It grows plentifully in the south of France, in parts of Italy, in Spain, Portugal, and Algiers. Commerce is indebted to Portugal for its largest supply. There the cork tree, majestic in size and rugged in covering, its branches sweeping gracefully over the flower studded green sward, and its foliage of brightest green, is monarch of the forest. The fawn-color of the lesser limbs and the tawny gray of the body furnish emphatic and pleasing contrasts to the leaves. Cork oaks form the royal parks, and shade the piazzas of palatial mansions. Single trees of gigantic size, sacred as manorial heirlooms or from historical associations, whose branches through centuries have been growing gray with moss, are regarded with almost superstitious veneration.

For constructive purposes the wood of the cork tree is almost valueless. It not only decays rapidly, but its sap, from which no drying ever quite frees it, corrodes nails driven into it. But the value of the bark fully compensates for the inferior quality of the wood; in fact the bark of the cork tree, although like other oaks it bears acorns, may be regarded as its fruit. In its native State, every few years, it sloughs its old covering and takes on a new. This natural yield is not commercially valuable, however, and hence a mechanical yield takes its place. Bark-stripping, done periodically when the material is in its best condition, and not the shedding of its coat from necessity, makes the cork tree one of the most valuable in the vegetable world.

When a healthy cork tree has reached the age of twenty-five years it is subjected to its first shearing. This is not done at a single process, else the life of the tree would be endangered. A circular incision is first made in the bark at or near the ground and another exactly similar to but above the former close by the branches. These cuts are followed by others equally deep, made longitudinally, and dividing the bark into broad planks. The tree is then left. The sap has been stopped from circulation; the bark begins to dry and curl outward, and shortly each strip is peeled off by the hand.

This process is repeated every ten years, and, as the cork tree lives to a great age, there are those now standing that have grown their twentieth crop. But the finest cork comes from the earliest yield. Every crop is less valuable than its predecessor. The best cork is known by its pliancy, elasticity, absence of porosity, and depth of color, and these qualities are gradually lost sight of by successive yields. The Spaniards keep their superior article for manufacture at home. Of late years Algeria is sending exceedingly good cork to market. The estate of M. le Duc de Montebello, presented to him by Louis Napoleon, is covered with cork oak forests, the yield from which is very great, and the quality unsurpassed. About 6,000 tons of the raw material of corks are annually shipped from cork producing countries, and probably an equal quantity is furnished for home consumption. —Appleton's Journal.

Facts in Natural History.

The fecundity of the salmon is very great, the roe of a single one amounting, as I have been informed (says Dr. Halliday) by a person who counted it, to about 600,000. The experiment was made in the usual way, namely, by first weighing and then counting a certain portion, and afterwards weighing the whole mass. Yet this increase bears no sort of proportion to the number of pea in many other fish. The sturgeon produces the greatest number that I ever read of, being no less, according to Leuwenhock, than 150,000 millions—an amount equal to that of all the inhabitants of the earth; the female codfish gives 9,340,000; and the common crab, 4,334,000. The porpoise produces only one, and yet porpoises are more plentiful than sturgeons. There seems to be no positive rule in nature upon this subject; such is the extent and variety of exceptions, that we are forced to the necessity of considering every animal distinctly and individually. What analogy proves to us, that if the claw of a crab be torn off another will supply its place; that the polypus may be cut in pieces, and yet the separated part shall produce a perfect animal; and a thousand other instances of exception operating against the general law of nature? All proves to us that we are to look for certainty to each animal individually, and that we shall seek in vain to elicit it from the similitude that one animal may bear to another.

Importance of Punctuation.

Punctuation not only serves to make an author's meaning plain, but often saves it from being entirely misconceived. There are many cases in which a change of points completely alters the sentiment.

An English statesman once took advantage of this fact, to free himself from an embarrassing position. Having charged an officer of government with dishonesty, he was required by Parliament, under a heavy penalty, publicly to retract the accusation in the House of Commons. At the appointed time he appeared with a written recantation, which he read aloud as follows: "I said he was dishonest, it is true; and I am sorry for it." This was satisfactory; but what was the surprise of Parliament, the following day, to see the retraction printed in the papers thus: "I said he was dishonest; it is true, and I am sorry for it." By a simple transposition of the comma and semicolon, the ingenious slanderer represented himself to the country, not only as having made no recantation, but even as having reiterated the charge in the very face of Parliament.

Sand.

If one should give me a dish of sand and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and how it would draw to itself the most invisible particles by the mere power of attraction. The unthankful heart, like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies! but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find in every hour some heavenly blessing; only the iron in God's sand is gold.—O. W. Holmes.

A Pithy Sermon to Young Men.

You are the architects of your fortunes. Rely upon your own strength of body and soul. Take for your motto, self-reliance, honesty and industry; for your star, faith, perseverance, and pluck, and inscribe on your banner, "Be just and fear not." Don't take too much advice. Keep at the helm and steer your own ship. Strike out. Think well of yourself. Fire above the mark you intend to hit. Assume your position. Don't practice excessive humility, you can't get above your level—water don't run up hill—put potatoes in a cart over a rough road and the small ones will go to the bottom. Energy, invincible determination, with right motives, are the lovers that rule the world. The great art of commanding is to take a fair share of the work. Civility costs nothing and buys everything. Don't swear; don't gamble; don't deceive; don't tattle. Be polite; be generous; be kind. Study hard; play hard. Be in earnest; be self-reliant. Read good books. Love your fellow men as your God; love your country and obey the laws; love virtue; love truth. Always do what your conscience tells you to be a duty, and leave the consequence with God.

The Best Joke of the Season.

New York (Dec. 20) Cor. Chicago Tribune.

A report appeared in a morning paper to the effect that the well-known actors, Sothern and W. J. Florence, were to fight a duel. The rumor has been traced to a gigantic practical joke played on Philip Lee, a newly arrived young Englishman, husband of Miss Neilson, the actress. Lee was invited to dine with Sothern, who promised he should meet a party of characteristic Americans. Lee accepted and sat down to dinner with Sothern and Neil Bryant, Chris. Connor, Billy Birch, Billy Florence, and Nelson Seymour, the last named five being under assumed names. Their costumes were very peculiar. They proceeded to eat with their fingers, tilt their legs on the table, and finally got into a quarrel, in which immense bowie-knives and Colt's navy revolvers were brandished. Sothern gave Florence a mock challenge, upon which Lee fled from the room, though Sothern tried to explain that it was "the custom of the country." One of the party had Sothern and Florence subpenaed to appear at the Tombs, to-day, which they did, explaining their joke to Justice Dowling, and receiving a discharge on their own recognizance.

French Theory of Fatal Maladies.

According to M. Alphonse de Candolle, when a fatal malady has seriously affected the younger portion of a population, the succeeding generation, descended from persons who escaped the disease, or were but little affected by it, will be found less liable to attack, as an ordinary effect of the law of descent, this continuing to be the case from generation to generation. This, therefore, constitutes one cause of the weakening of epidemics, and may serve to explain the reason why a disease is most injurious when it first attacks any people, and why it subsequently becomes rarer or less dangerous, as has frequently been observed. After the lapse of several generations, however, a population moderately affected by disease approaches the condition of one which has never had it, and increased intensity may then ensue.

Shelter for Swine.

For careful observation for several years, we are fully persuaded that the hog cholera was first caused and is still continued by improper feed, bad water, and inadequate shelter.

We are also persuaded that the common practice of keeping young hogs through the winter (especially in large numbers) without sufficient shelter, is a fruitful cause of disease, and although it may not prove fatal immediately, yet it so weakens the constitution, and predisposes the animal to all that swine flesh is heir to, that the coming fall it will require but a few malarious breezes, a few cold, damp, chilly nights, or a little impure water, to so develop the germ of disease already in the system, that no amount of care and drugs at that late day can possibly arrest the disease or save life.

Born with Two Sets of Teeth.

At birth the germs of two complete sets of teeth exist in the jaws of children and carnivorous animals. About the period when the system requires other aliment besides milk, the deciduous or first set are cut. When these are finally shed, the germs of the second, that have been lying quiescently several years in children, are quickened into activity and soon protrude through the gums. These are the permanent set. Nature's plan in this arrangement is to meet the expansion of the bones of the face, there being very many more teeth of the second crop, which are also larger, stronger, and deeper rooted in the sockets. The law of dentition presents a broad field for study.

Good Advice.

Parton, in his Atlantic article on Thomas Jefferson, states that in Mr. J.'s advice to his children and nephews this truth is often repeated: "If ever you find yourself in any difficulty, and doubt how to extricate yourself, do what is right, and you will find it the easiest way of getting out of the difficulty." To his nephew he wrote: "Give up money, give up fame, give up science, give the earth itself and all it contains, rather than do an immoral act. And never suppose that, in any possible situation or any circumstances, it is best for you to do a dishonorable thing."

MR. GREELEY was cut off in his 62d year. His temperate habits and custom of out-door exercise would have led one to expect for him a much longer life. Mr. Sumner is only of Mr. Greeley's age. Mr. Chase is 64; Bennett lived to be 71; Ben Wade is 72; Webster held out to 70, and Clay to 75; while Van Buren, though one of the worst beaten of Presidential candidates, was 80 when he died. Thurlow Weed is living at 75, and Mr. Seward has just died at 71. Mr. Greeley has perhaps worked harder than any one of these, but Lord Brougham worked severely and continually, and lived to 93; and M. Thiers is 75. Mr. Gladstone is 63, and Disraeli 67. Lord Palmerston lived to be 81.

Simplicity of Horace Greeley's Life.

A New York correspondent writes: Mr. Greeley was constitutionally exempt from the common weaknesses of mankind. He knew nothing of the pleasures of the table. He ate the simplest food, and it is probable that, taking his forty years in this city as a whole, it has not cost him more than $200 per year to board and clothe him. His sole idea concerning eating was in order that he might work. In other words, it was only supplying the machine with "wood and water." He never dreamed of sitting down and "enjoying" a dinner with a friend. I once saw him coming out of the Tribune building, when he met a friend to whom he exclaimed: "O, Mr. West, I am so glad to see you. I am going round to get a bit of dinner and you shall sit and talk while I eat." With regard to clothes he considered comfort all that was required, without regard to appearance. He wore a drab coat because he got used to that color, and then the style of goods did protracted service. All that eccentricity of dress which some accounted affectation was a part of his childlike nature. It was just as great an idiosyncracy for him to neglect his wardrobe as it was for Dickens to load himself with jewelry. Mr. Greeley was never known to use tobacco, or ardent spirits. His frame was supported on the simplest diet, yet he was the strongest, in point of muscle, of all the literati of his day. An impressive contrast is afforded between Greeley and Jim Fisk. The latter was the slave of appetite, he reveled in a luxury that had never been known here before. He was all in vice and sensuality that Greeley was not. Both were Yankees, and both have died within a year. But, oh, what difference! If an offer of one million had been made to any one who could prove a single mean act against Greeley, that reward would never be won. For forty years he has walked transparently before the world, and whatever may have been his follies, he never did anything to be ashamed of. Can this be said of any other veteran journalist of this city?

Ants.

In Brazil they have a very disagreeable species of ants. They come in countless numbers, frequently taking possession and overrunning a dwelling, when in their track, driving the inmates therefrom and destroying everything eatable on the premises. When seen approaching, they can only be stopped, or the head of the column turned, by fire; they will succeed in passing every other barrier. A traveler, alluding to them, says: "On ascending the Corcovardo we discovered a colony of them crossing the roadway high up on the mountains. They were coming from above, crossing the road, and descending on the other side. They came in a column three or four inches wide, thick as they could be packed, and rushing along with great rapidity. How long they had been passing before we saw them is of course unknown, but four hours later the stream was unabated and seemingly exhaustless. We found it impossible to break the line without its being immediately reformed. They seemed to know by instinct the direction taken by those passed, and never deviated in the slightest from the proper route. The attempt was also attended with some inconvenience if great care was not taken, for the stream never stopped; it kept pouring down, and in a very short time you found yourself surrounded, and in some danger of being overrun if not captured yourself. It is said they will remove the flesh from the carcass of an ox or horse in a few hours, leaving the bones perfectly polished."

Vitality of the Snake.

The vitality of the rattlesnake is a matter of observatiion with all acquainted with its habits. Some flat-boatmen on one occasion captured a large black snake in the Tallahatchie river, and put it in a cage for the sake of amusing themselves with its struggles to escape. Accidently finding a mole, about the size of a mouse, they put "the groundling" into the snake's cage. The reptile at once gulped it down, but the mole, making no difference between the sides of its prison-house and the solid earth, much to the astonishment of the flat-boatmen, ate its way out of the snake's side; whereupon it was swallowed again, and again gnawed its way into daylight. The snake, getting a dinner under difficulties, once more titillated its throat with the oft-repeated morsel, but with no more success of keeping on the stomach than the Irishman had with the emetic. The fourth time, the snake vainly attempted to engulf its dinner, but was too much exhausted, and gave it up as an impossible job. The mole, so well calculated to make its way through the world, was put on shore as a reward for its bravery; and, if it ever thinks at all, must be very much amused at its adventures with the flat-boatmen on the roaring river of the sunny land of Florida.

Beautiful Allegory.

Mr. Crittenden, of Kentucky, was at one time defending a man who had been indicted for a capital offense. After an elaborate and powerful defense, he closed his effort with the following striking and beautiful allegory:

"When God in his eternal council conceived the thought of man's creation, he called to him the three ministers who constantly wait upon the throne—Justice, Truth and Mercy—and thus addressed them: 'Shall we make man?' Then said Justice, 'Oh, God, make him not, for he will trample upon the laws.' Truth made answer also, 'Oh, God, make him not, for he will pollute the sanctuaries.' But Mercy, dropping upon her knees, and looking up through her tears, exclaimed, 'Oh, God, make him; I will watch over him with care through all the dark paths which he may have to tread.' 'Oh, man, thou art the child of Mercy; go and deal with thy brother."

The jury when he had finished was drowned in tears, and against evidence, and what must have been their own convictions, brought in a verdict of not guilty.

Soap.

Great care should be taken in selecting toilet soap, as diseases of the skin are often brought on by its use. Many kinds of soap are manufactured in a large proportion from bone grease. Such bones as are of little value to the bone-turner or brush-maker are crushed and ground to a coarse powder in the soap factory, and then exposed to the action of boiling water, and subjected at the same time to a strong pressure, and the grease and marrow are in that way extracted from them. The grease is of a dark brown color, and has an abominable smell. It is bleached and deodorized by various processes, and separated into two or three different qualities. The most inferior of these is used for the formation of railway or other machinery grease. The better qualities are made into a hard brown soap, which still retains the unpleasant smell of the grease from which it was made. It is therefore remelted and perfumed. Now, the question is, whether the different processes through which the bone grease has passed have deprived it of the putrescent and morbific properties of which it was originally possessed. Physicians who make diseases of the skin a specialty, when a new patient comes to them, first inquire in regard to the kind of soap he is in the habit of using. If soap is dissolved in alcohol or in water, and then examined under a microscope, fine particles of ground bone may be found in it. If soap containing such particles is rubbed hard against a man's face, his skin is cut and scored by the bony particles, and prepared for absorption. A writer in the London paper called Nature says a cutaneous disease has been, to his positive knowledge, repeatedly produced upon his own face by the use of a particular kind of soap.

Literary "Fat."

One of the ruses of feuilletonists lies in the dialogue. A famous one of Dumas pere led to a revolution in the emoluments of romantic literature. Dumas was paid by the line, and one day he introduced in a romance the following passage:

"My son!
Mother!
Listen to me!
Go on!
Thou seest!
What?
This dagger!
It is steeped?
In blood.
Of whom?
Of thy father!
Ah!!"

After that Dumas was paid by the letter.

THEY have strange chambermaids at Shepherd's Hotel in Cairo (says a lady traveler). The one who waited on our room, and attended to all the various duties of the calling, even to the making of beds, was a Frenchman, dressed as if for a dinner party, white vest and dress coat, and having the air of a refined gentleman. It was really embarassing to accept his services in such a capacity. One of the ladies, on arriving at the hotel, rang for the chambermaid. This gentleman presented himself. Supposing him to be the proprietor or his chief clerk, she expressed her wish to see the chambermaid. He very politely replied, in the best English he could command, "Madame, I am she."

From 1786 to 1865, 205 reached the summit of Mont Blanc and returned safely from their foolhardy expedition. Of that number 187 were Englishmen, 9 Germans, 39 Frenchmen, 21 Americans, and 9 Swiss. The very first ascension was by Dr. Piccard and Jacob Balmat, in 1786. The first female ever so far up in the air on land was Maria Parodis, of Chamouny, in 1809. In 1865, 35 persons made the dangerous ascent, of whom 4 were ladies. The past traveling season of 1872 shows no abatement of furor for being distinguished for having risked life for nothing on that monument of terrestial grandeur. Not one of them have gathered a single fact of importance to science.

A METROPOLITAN hotel telegrah officer, early Monday morning—Young gentleman operator, after repeated calls for youny lady operator in a branch office, at last gets a response, and then, "click, click, click, click" (fortissimo), he telegraphs back to her vehemently, "I have been trying to catch you for the last half hour." In a moment the following spicy reply came tripping back to him over the wires from the telegraphic suburban maiden: "Pooh! That's nothing; there is a young man here who has been trying to do the same thing for the last two years, and he hasn't caught me yet."

A COUPLE of girls put a bullfrog into the hired man's bed to see if they couldn't make him talk. Davie threw it out of the window and never said a single word. Soon after he put a half bushel of chestnut burrs into the girls' bed. About the time he thought they would make the least shadow, Davie went to the door and rattled the latch furiously. Out went the candle and in went the girls; but they did not stick, though the burrs did. Calling on them, he begged them to keep quiet, for he only wanted to know if they had seen anything of that pesky bullfrog. He'd give two dollars to find it.

THE pitiful prices realized at the sale of Mr. Greeley's live stock, agricultural implements and household goods have dissipated much of the sentiment afloat in regard to the Chappaquans and their hearty regard and veneration for the philosopher. It seems like trifling with the memory of the distinguished departed to have the plows that he had handled sold for twenty-five and fifty cents each, and the memorable old Alderney cow that had given milk to his children knocked off at $7.50. Such is fame.

A MARYSVILLE, Cal., paper gives a graphic account of the manner in which emigrants are transported across the continent by the Pacific railroad. One family arrived there that had made the entire trip shut up in a common freight car along with horses, etc., and without a fire or any accommodations for cooking. They passed over the mountains while the thermometer was at zero, and it is a wonder that they were not frozen to death.

The New World's Grand Remedy.—The Old World has played its part in vegetable medication. But the botany of the New World is, as yet, imperfectly explored. One new and most important revelation from that land of wonders—California—has astonished the scientific, and accomplished such cures of diseases of the stomach and bowels, bilious complaints, malarious fevers, nervous affections, and all diseases proceeding from a vitiated condition of the blood, as have never before been witnessed.

Before Walker's California Vinegar Bitters all the alcoholic and mineral medicines are rapidly falling into disuse. They cannot resist the overpowering evidence brought forward every day of the immense superiority of this medicine. Not a drop of any variety of distilled or fermented liquor or mineral poison enters into its composition. It is a gentle aperient, a tonic, derived from entirely new vegetable sources, an unrivaled stomachic, admirable in all pulmonary diseases; and, in fact, as near to universal remedy as botanical discovery and scientific skill can hope to attain. Dr. Walker considers it a cure for all diseases not organic, and really the great variety of diseases in which it is successful seems to warrant the opinion. Every family needs such a remedy. It saves pain, anxiety and doctors' bills. We know what trouble it is to keep the bowels of children in order, and any remedy that will strengthen and regulate their weak and variable digestion must be a domestic blessing.—[Com.

A man in Youngstown, Ohio, bet $30 one bitter cold day last week that he could walk to Warren. He spoiled a $45 suit of clothes, a $14 pair of boots, paid a doctor $10 to thaw out his ears, and was arrested at Warren as a suspicious character and locked up two days in jail. He won his bet.

A Darien man discovered that the fumes of burning brimstone was a preventive of the epizootic, and fired some in his barn, and then went to dinner while it burned. He subsequently admitted to a neighbor that that barn never did suit him where it was, and that Cicero never owned a horse and yet was happy.—Danbury News.

A Manual of Health.

An edition of between nine and ten millions of copies of a very useful work is now ready for gratuitous distribution, and can be had for the asking at any drug store in the United States, the British Colonies, Spanish America or Brazil. The work referred to is Hostetter's Almanac for 1873. The medical portion of it treats of the various ailments to which the human system is subject, and sets forth the peculiar properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters—the purest and best tonic at present known—as a preservative of health and strength, and as a remedy for debility and disease. The Almanac is printed in all the principal languages of the civilized world, and reaches a larger number of families and individuals than any other medical treatise that ever issued from the press. No man or woman who has a due regard for that choicest of heaven's blessings, bodily vigor, should fail to read the plain, simple and convincing articles which this truly practical publication contains. The miscellaneous matter is varied, instructive and amusing, and the calendar department copious and comprehensive. Hostetter's Almanac is, in short, a household convenience, adapted to the use of all classes and callings. The farmer, the planter, the miner, the merchant, the mechanic, the laborer, the professional man, all need it; and to invalids of both sexes it is literally an article of prime necessity. The medical technicalities which render so many medical treatises intended for popular use unintelligible to the general reader, have been carefully avoided in this pamphlet. All is plain, explicit, forcible, and reconcilable with reason and common sense.

The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa., on receipt of a two cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.—[Com.

Polar Regions.

Intensely cold, stormy and ice-bound as all nature is at the Arctic circle, there are evidences in multiplied forms to prove that the climate in those inhospitable abodes of the white bear and walrus was once as mild, warm and delightful as in the Island of Cuba.

Vegetable productions of the soil so ancient we have no data to reckon from are abundant. These grew luxuriantly where it is almost impossible to sustain either plants or animals with all the appliances of art, and from their structure are particularly fitted for a tropical climate. This statement requires no proof, since the archives of geology verify them by preserved specimens in the rocks, the land and caverns of the frozen North.

What forces produced the change from a mild to a terrific region of storms in their most fitful exhibitions of resistless fury? The polarity of the earth must have been suddenly changed.

The Harvest of the Head.—When the comb acts as a rake, bringing away a roll of parted fibers every time it passes through the hair, baldness would soon be inevitable. But even in this case, forlorn as it may seem, the mischief can be arrested, the loss repaired. Lyon's Kathairon, aided by a brisk application of the brush to promote the absorption of the fluid by the scalp, will stop the thinning-out process in forty-eight hours. The roots from which the dead filaments were shed will soon be re-endowed with vitality, and a new growth will speedily spring up on the denuded places. This work of reproduction will go on until the damage is completely repaired, and the luxuriant crop of hair thus produced will never wither or fall out as long as the vitalizing application is regularly continued.—[Com.

Miss Kate Barton, a young lady of Philadelphia, who has a penchant for practical mechanics, has invented an improvement on sewing-machines which will adapt them to the manufacture of sails and other heavy goods, something heretofore impossible.

How unnecessary the anguish many persons undergo from rheumatism, gout, neuralgia, toothache and earache. We say unnecessary, because the application of Mexican Mustang Liniment to the affected part, or a few drops of it in the ears or tooth, affords instantaneous, and, what is better, permanent relief. For cuts, wounds, bruises, swellings, and all injuries or diseases which require treatment externally, this liniment is everywhere regarded as the most potent and reliable healing agent in existence. For all external injuries or ailments of horses and cattle, it is infallible.—[Com.

If your horse is lame, sore or galled, you should use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; wash the part with castile soap and warm water, rub dry with a clean cloth, then apply the liniment; rub in well with the hand.—[Com.

Lightning Cure.—The prompt relief afforded in numerous cases by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment has not only persuaded people that it contains Magnetism, but they call it the Lightning Cure.

In Rheumatism, Wandering Pains, Neuralgia, and Irritability, one application gives instant relief, and continued use will usually accomplish a permanent cure.

The American Agriculturist, speaking about the great merits of CABLE SCREW WIRE Boots and Shoes, says: "A trial of these goods for several months past, and the testimony we have from dealers, prove this method of fastening soles to be a good improvement; there is no ripping, the wire holds until the sole of the shoe is fairly worn out."—[Com.

A neglected Cough, Cold, or Sore Throat, which might be checked by a simple remedy like "Brown's Bronchial Troches," if allowed to progress may terminate seriously.

A CHALLENGE

IS extended to the world to place before the public a better cough or lung remedy than ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

VERILY IT HATH NO EQUAL.

CONSUMPTIVES, READ!

Would you cure that distressing cough, and bring back that healthy vigor till lately planted in your cheek? If you would, do not delay; for, ere you are aware, it will be too late.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM

Is your hope. It has been tried by thousands such as you, who have been cured; many, in their gratitude, have lent their names to us, that suffering humanity can read their evidence and believe. Don't experiment with new and untried mixtures—you cannot afford it—but try at once this invaluable article. It is warranted to break up the most troublesome cough in a few hours, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction in all cases of lung and throat difficulties.

UNSOLICITED EVIDENCE OF ITS MERITS.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

WHAT WELL-KNOWN DRUGGISTS SAY ABOUT ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

SPRINGFIELD, Tenn., Sept. 11, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam at once. We have not a bottle left in our store. It has more reputation than any cough medicine we have ever sold, and we have been in the drug business twenty-seven years; we mean just what we say about the Balsam.

Very truly yours,
HURT & TANNER.

AGAIN READ THE EVIDENCE from a Druggist who was cured by use of the Balsam, and now sells it largely:

L. C. Cottrell, Druggist at Marine City, Michigan, writes, Sept. 12, 1872: "I am out of Allen's Lung Balsam; send me half a gross as soon as you can; I would rather be out of any other medicine in my store. The Lung Balsam never fails to do good for those afflicted with a cough."

It is harmless to the most delicate child.
It contains no opium in any form.
It is sold by Medicine-dealers generally.

CAUTION.

Be not deceived. Call for ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, and take no other.

DR. WHITTIER, 617 St. Charles Street, ST. LOUIS, MO.
Longest engaged, and most successful physician of the age. Consultation or pamphlet free. Call or write. Just published for the benefit of young men who suffer from Nervousness, Debility, &c., a treatise of 36 pages for 2 stamps; a book 260 pages, illustrated for 50 cents.

DR. A. TRASK'S
INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing diseases is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it copes as readily with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Breast, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy effects cures upon scientific principles, by its mild, healing properties, to which the disease gradually yields, when the system has been put in perfect order with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which should be taken earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault, also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The Catarrh Remedy should be applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, as this is the only form of instrument yet invented with which fluid medicine can be carried high up and perfectly applied to all parts of the affected nasal passages and chambers in which sores and ulcers exist, and from which the discharge generally proceeds.

So successful has the above course of treatment proven, that the proprietor offers $500 Reward for a case of "Cold in Head" Ozena or Catarrh which he cannot cure. The two medicines with instrument, for $2, by all druggists.

VINEGAR BITTERS

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Vinegar Bitters are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion. Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Grateful thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual upon the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of Medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Mechanical Diseases. Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, will be subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS once or twice a week, as a Preventive.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. There are always more or less obstructions of the liver, a weakness and irritable state of the stomach, and great torpor of the bowels, being clogged up with vitiated accumulations. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goiter, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic and Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are the best safeguard in all cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their Sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc. Their Counter-Irritant influence extends throughout the system. Their Diuretic properties act on the Kidneys, correcting and regulating the flow of urine. Their Anti-Bilious properties stimulate the liver, in the secretion of bile, and its discharges through the biliary ducts, and are superior to all remedial agents, for the cure of Bilious Fever, Fever and Ague, etc.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, and the nerves are rendered disease-proof by this great invigorant.

Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

STATH OF INDIANA, }
DeKalb County, } ss

I, WILLIAM McINTYRE, Auditor in and for said county of DeKalb do hereby certify that the foregoing is a full and complete list of all the Lands and Town Lots in said county, returned delinquent for the tax of the year 1871 with the Delinquent tax, Penalty and Interest, and also the taxes of the current year, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Notice is, therefore, hereby given, that so much of the foregoing lands and town lots as may be necessary to discharge the taxes, interest penalty and charges due thereon, or due from the owner thereof at the time of sale, will be sold at public auction, at the Court House, in the town of Auburn, in said county, on the second Monday of February A. D. 1873 (the same being the tenth day of said month) unless such taxes, penalty interest and charges are previously paid. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M. on said day.

Wm. McINTYRE, Auditor.

Auditor's Office, Auburn, Indiana, December 13th, 1872.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE
The Pine Tree Tar Cordial,

THE OLD MAN IN THE STYLISH CHURCH.

Well, wife, I've been to church to-day—been to a stylish one—
And seein' you can't go from home, I'll tell you what was done:
You would have been surprised to see what I saw there to-day.
The sisters were fixed up so fine they hardly bowed to pray.

I had on these course clothes of mine—not much the worse for wear—
But, than, they knew I wasn't one they call a millionaire;
So they led the old man to a seat away back by the door;
'Twas bookless and uncushioned, a reserved seat for the poor.

Pretty soon in came a stranger with gold rings and clothing fine;
They led him to a cushioned seat far in advance of mine—
I thought that wa'nt exactly right to seat him up so near,
When he was young, and I was old, and very hard to hear.

But then there's no accountin' for what some people do;
The finest clothing now-a-days oft gets the finest pew;
But when we reached the blessed home, all undefiled by sin,
We'll see wealth begging at the gate while poverty goes in.

I could'nt hear the sermon, I sat so far away,
So, through the hours of service I could only watch and pray,
Watch the doin's of the Christians sitting near me, round about;
Pray that God would make them pure within as they were pure without.

While I sat there, lookin' all around upon the rich and great,
I kept thinkin' of the rich man and the beggar at his gate;
How, by all but dogs forsaken, the poor beggar's form grew cold,
And the angels bore his spirit to the mansions built of gold.

How at last the rich man perished, and his spirit took its flight
From the purple and fine linen to the home of endless night:
There he learned, as he stood gazin' at the beggar in the sky,
It isn't all of life to live, nor all of death to die.

I doubt not there were wealthy sires in that religious fold
Who went up from their dwellings like the Pharisee of old;
They returned home from their worship with a head uplifted high—
To spurn the hungry from their door with naught to satisfy.

Out, out! with such professions; they are doin more to-day
To stop the weary sinner from the gospel's shinin' way
Than all the books of infidels; than all that has been tried
Since Christ was born in Bethlehem—since Christ was crucified.

How simple are the works of God, and yet how very grand—
The shells in the ocean caverns, the flowers on the land—
He gilds the clouds of even with the gold light from his throne,
Not for the rich man only; not for the poor alone.

Then why should man look down on man because of lack of gold;
Why send him to the poorest pew because his clothes are old?
A heart with noble motives—a heart that God has blest—
May be beatin' Heaven's music 'neath the faded coat and vest.

I am old—I may be childish, but I love simplicity;
I love to see it shinin' in Christian's piety,
Jesus told us in his sermon, in Judea's mountain wild,
He that wants to go to heaven must be like a little child.

Our heads are growing gray, dear wife—our hearts are beating slow—
In a little while the Master will call for us to go:
When we reach the pearly gateways, and look in with joyful eyes.
We'll see no stylish worship in the temple of the skies.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF TAX PAYERS.

PARTISANSHIP IN A MOST HIDEOUS FORM!

INIQUITIES OF THE APPORTIONMENT BILL FULLY SET FORTH!

Address of the Democratic Members of the Indiana Legislature.

To the people of Indiana:

We, the Senators and Representatives in the present General Assembly feel constrained to make to the people of the State a statement of facts in regard to the passage of an act appropriating the Senators and Representatives in the General Assembly among the several counties of the State. The act on that subject, which was passed on the 19th instant, is an outrage on the people of the State, without regard to party, passed at the bidding of partisan influence, and is a violation to the Constitution of the State of Indiana. The members of the General Assembly who voted for it cannot defend their action upon any principle of justice or right; and in the interest of party, have committed a great wrong upon the rights and privileges of the people in direct violation of their duty under the constitution.

Section four, or article four of the constitution requires that an enumeration of the white inhabitance of the State, shall be made at certain designated periods, and action five of the same articles requires "that the Senators and Representatives of the General Assembly shall be apportioned among the several counties, according to the number of white male inhabitants in each, over the age of 21 years." This provision of the constitution is plain and easily understood, and is violated by the act in question. It is only necessary to refer to a few of the provisions of the bill disfranchising virtually the people in several counties of the State, to enable all fair minded men to understand the unfairness of the act. With this view we call attention to the following viz: Sullivan and Knox, with a voting population of 9,254 under said act are given one Senator and two Representatives while Lawrence and Monroe with a voting population of 6,646, are given under this act the same, with a voting population 2,608 less than Sullivan and Knox. Floyd and Clarke, with a voting population of 9,886, are given one Senator, and two Representatives, while Clarke and Vermillion, with a population of 6,305, are given one Senator and two and a half Representatives with a voting population 3,581 less than Floyd and Clarke. Shelby and Johnson with a voting population of 9,674, are given one Senator and two Representatives while Benton Newton, Jasper and White, with a voting population of 6,577 being, 2497 less, are given the same representation. Laporte with a voting population of 6,539, is given one Senator and one Representative while Lake and Porter with a voting population of 6,237, being 328 less, are given one Senator and two Representatives. Dearborn and Franklin with a voting population of 10,048, are given one Senator and two Representatives, while Miami and Howard, with a voting population of 8,458, being 1,590 less, are given one Senator and three Representatives.—Bartholomew and Brown, with a voting population of 6,515 are given one Senator and one Representative, while Randolph with a voting population of 4,804, being 1,711 less, is given the same representation. Allen, Adams, and Wells, with a voting population of 15,678, are given two Senators and three Representatives, while Marion, with a voting population of 15,113, being 565 less, are given two Senators and four Representatives, and one joint Senator with Morgan, and one joint Representative with Shelby.—Cass and Carrol, with a voting population of 9,677, are given one Senator and two representatives, while Decatur and Rush with a voting population of 8,586, being 1,092 less, are given one Senator and two Representatives, and Decatur a joint Senator with Jennings and Rush a joint Representative with Fayette and Union.

The above instances of injustice are sufficient to stamp the act.

The enumeration of the inhabitans of the State under which the appertionment should have been made, shows a total voting population of 378,871. The proper ratio for a Senator under this enumeration is 7,600, and for a Representative, 3,800. But under the act just passed the ratio to elect in certain districts is 7,322, for a Senator, while in other districts to elect a like Senator, the "ratio" is 7,990 a difference of 658. In certain districts to elect a Representative the ratio is 3,390 while in others to elect a like Representative. the ratio is 4,566, a difference of 1,176. And if the representation in the two Houses is combined, we find that the voters in certain districts can return 95 members upon a ratio of 2,255 each while voters in other districts can return only 55 members upon a ratio of 2,265 each, an unjust discrimination in favor of the former, requiring 623 more votes in one district to elect a member than in the other.—This is so manifestly unjust to the people of the State that it is only necessary to mention it without comment to accomplish our purposes.

The General Assembly possesses the power to tax the people, and upon the American doctrine that taxation and representation should go hand in hand this act is manifestly an outrage upon the rights of the people of the State. This act cannot be justified if viewed from a partisan stand point, or any principle of justice. Indiana is about equally divided in political sentiment, and after a hard fought canvass last fall, in which both parties put forth their best efforts, they severally left the field without either being able to claim a decisive victory. And yet in a State thus equally divided, this bill will give one party 95 members of the General Assembly and the other only 55.

We are satisfied with the record we made upon the act and content to let the fair minded people, of the State deal with the members who voted for it.

But we rely upon the discriminating justice of the people, and believe all fair minded citizens will revolt at this outrage upon popular rights, and speedily relieve the statue book of the disfranchising act.

(Signed by the Democratic Senators and Representatives.)

BALLAD OF THE BALL.

GUS.

"Come right in! How are you, Fred?
Find a chair, and have a light."

FRED.

"Well, old boy, recovered yet
From the Mather's ball last night?"

GUS.

"Didn't dance; the German's off."

FRED.

"Didn't you? I had to lead—
Awful bore; but where were you?"

GUS.

"Sat it out with Mollie Meade.

"Jolly little girl she is—
Said she didn't c-a-r-e to dance—
Rather have a quiet chat,
Then she gave me such a glance.

"So when you had cleared the room,
And had captured all the chairs,
Having nothing else, we two
Took possession of the stairs.

"I was on the lower step—
Mollie on the next above,
Gave me her bouquet to hold—
A-s-k-e-d me to draw on her glove.

"Then, of course, I squeezed her hand—
Talked about my wasted life—
Said my sole salvation must
Be a true and gentle wife.

"Then, you know, I used my eyes—
She believed me, every word,
Almost said she loved me—Jove!
Such a voice I never heard.

"Gave me some symbolic flower
With a meaning, oh, so sweet!
Don't know where it is, I'm sure,
Must have d-r-o-p-p-e-d it in the street.

"How I spooned! and she—the goose!
Well, I know it wasn't right,
But she did believe me so,
That I—k-i-s-s-e-d her; pass a light."

JULIA.

"Mollie Meade! Well, I declare!
And walking up the avenue!
After what occurred last night,
Who'd a-thought of seeing you?

"Oh, you awful wicked girl—
There, don't blush—I saw it all."

MOLLIE.

"Saw all what?"

JULIA.

"Saw you, last night,
At the Mather's—in the hall."

MOLLIE.

"Oh, you horrid! where were you?
Wasn't Gus an awful goose?
Most men must be caught; but he Run his neck in the noose.

"I was almost dead to dance—
I'd have done it if I could—
But papa said I must stop,
And I promised ma I would.

"So I looked up sweet, and said
I didn't mind a talk with him.
Hope he didn't see my face—
Luckily the lights were dim.

"Then he gently squeezed my hand,
Looking sweetly in my face
With his handsome, loving eyes;
Really, he's a funny case!

"He was all so earnest, too;
But I thought I'd have to laugh
When he kissed a flower I gave,
Looking silly as a calf.

"I suppose Gus has it now,
In a wine-glass on his shelves;
It's a mystery to me
Why men will deceive themselves....

"Saw him kiss me? Oh! you wretch;
Well, he begged so hard for one,
And thought there'd no one know,
So—I l-e-t him—just for fun.

"I knew it wasn't really right
To trifle with his feelings dear,
But men are such funny things,
They need a Lesson once a year."

COLMAN & CO., "PER C."

I am Louis Colman, half of the firm, long and well known in the county as Colman & Co. I want to tell you how I worked my way to this position. At the age of fifteen, with my free consent, my father signed articles which bound me to give to William R. Lee, cabinet-maker, the labor of three years. In lieu of board, clothing, etc., the usual equivalent given, I was to receive the sum of one dollar per week, and, at the expiration of three years, fifty dollars in money. My home in the meantime was with my father, who boarded and clothed me.

A backward look of three, the years seem pleasant to me. I suppose many times during my apprenticeship I longed for more liberty, more leisure, more money, or something different from what I had. I should hardly have been an average boy if I had not, but in the main I was tolerably contented.

So eighteen came. The heir of an English estate, on the happy day when he was to take possession could hardly, I think, have felt happier than I. Upon the morning of the day when my indentures were to cease, Mr. Lee came to me and said:

"I suppose I shall not have to tell you that I have no farther claim upon your time after to-night."

I felt a certain amount of independence as I replied:

"I know it, sir," and drew a sigh of relief.

"Come to the office," he said, "after hours," and turned away.

In the office at night I meet my father, who, with me, saw the writings cancelled. I then received $50, shook hands with Mr. Lee, and turned to leave the office.

"One moment," said Mr. Lee; "have you any plans for the future?"

"No, sir," I said, promptly; "to-morrow is my eighteenth birthday, and I want to spend it without a thought of anything."

He smiled a little gravely, and then said:

"Well, take a week to think of nothing, and then come back to me."

Outside, I found my fellow workmen waiting to give me a cheer, for it was customary among us on such occasions to have a general hand-shake.

"Come, Colman, cannot we have beer?" said several voices.

This was also customary, and I hesitated a moment, but something said to me, "Begin now as you expect to go on," and I said:

"Three times the sum, boys, in anything else you like; but let us have no drinks."

"That's so," said one of the number; "remember poor Stearns."

Stearns was a man whom Mr. Lee had employed again and again. A week since he had been turned away because he came to his work intoxicated, and we knew he had had no work since.

Mears' remark gave me a thought, and I turned quickly and said:

"If the crowd will forego treats, oysters, or what it may be, we'll agree to send the money to Stearns' wife and family."

My plan took well, and was seconded not only with words but deeds, and we deputized "Little Tom," as he was called, to take the money to Stearns' house.

"And mind," said Mears again, "you give it to Stearns' wife, else it may go yet for drink."

Then I went home and spent the week after in idleness. Perhaps I ought to have felt guilty of waste of time. I do not think I did. I thoroughly enjoyed my respite and liberty to be out at any time in the day. A curious feeling, almost like seeing a new world, comes to a person, who, having been shut up from the sunshine for a considerable time, is suddenly given the freedom to walk, lounge or loiter, subject to no hours, times nor bells. My father and mother left me entirely to myself during that week, though I have since been told that my mother's heart beat anxiously for fear I was beginning a downward path. My judicious father restrained her fears, saying:

"Give him his time a week, wife mine, let him run to the end of his rope. I think he will begin to pull in then."

I even deserted the family pew on Sunday, a thing unheard of before, and looked in at the differing faiths around, but no comment was made. Until the appointed time I had actually taken no serious thought of my future. Punctually then, however, but with a sigh, I presented myself to Mr. Lee. My father was also there. Mr. Lee smiled as I came in, and said:

"Well, Louis, what do you call your last week's work?"

"Relaxation," I promptly replied.

"Does it pay?"

"It has so far," was again my prompt response.

"But I suppose you expect to go to work sometime," said he.

The satisfaction of returning to my every day work came suddenly to me then, and I said with animation:

"I do, indeed, and I am here hoping you have work to offer me."

He looked pleased and gratified. So did my father. Mr. Lee said presently:

"I have to offer you my office work. If you will engage with me for another three years, I will give you three hundred dollars per year, and at the end of that time an additional one hundred, making it one thousand dollars for the three years work. What think you?"

My father then spoke:

"Louis, the decision is your own; but the offer is fair. If you choose to take it, your board at home is just to pay your mother for extra care, say two dollars per week; and if you do well, I will cover Mr. Lee's one hundred dollars with another hundred the day you are twenty-one. Can you do better?"

I knew I could not. I said so. So again I was back in the familiar place, with three years before me, but they proved uneventful, save as the first links which connected me with the firm of Colman & Co.

The first duty assigned me in my new position was the opening of some letters; and the first letter I opened flaunted the bill-head of "Colman & Co." My own name! Just so, some day, I should send out large sheets and bills, with just such a heading! So I raised an air castle. But this letter contained beside the order some reference to a "superior casket," and a slip from a paper making public announcement that the decease of Colman, of the firm of Colman & Co., would not alter the business arrangement of the firm. It would still be carried on at the old stand, with the same name. Signed, Colman & Co., "per C."

I handed the letter to Mr. Lee, who said:

"See to the order immediately, and make a note of the reference to casket, and file the letter on hook G."

He rose, took down a package of letters, saying to me:

"Look at these curious signatures; Colman always signed like that, with a long coil. The son has, I suppose, inherited or acquired the same curious coil to his signature."

I returned answer to the letter, and when finished a sudden fancy possessed me to make of my "per C." the same fanciful coil. After a few endeavors, I succeeded in doing this, and signed William R. Lee, "per C.," making of my "C." an exact imitation of the long-coiled C. appended to Colman & Co.

For the three succeeding years not a month elapsed that we did not receive an order of some kind, large or small, with the same Colman & Co., "per C.," and then the long coil; which I as invariably answered with my employer's signature, William R. Lee, "per C.," and a flourish of the same around my C.

I found myself at my majority in what I thought then, and think now, an enviable state. I had at twenty-one a fair address, good health, good habits, a good trade, an average education, moderate ambitions and a willingness to work, and three hundred dollars a year in ready money. Such was my start towards fortune. When my time expired with Mr. Lee, he again asked me my plans for the future. Though this time I had many and many a one, they were very indefinite, and none of them practical. Mr. Lee, as before, gave me advice and opportunity. He sent me upon business of his own through different parts of the State, saying: "Look out for yourself as you go, and if you find the right business point, let me know."

I liked this change. I was making a valuable acquaintance with business men and the country, and for a year longer found nothing which made me desire a change.

One night I took a branch road and a new route, to reach a certain point. Starting with (a most unusual thing for me) a racking headache, with the jar and rattle of the cars so increased, that by ten o'clock I determined to ask for a lay-over ticket at the next station; I stopped not to ask where, but threw myself into an omnibus, and arriving at the hotel, into a room and bed as quickly as possible. Next morning I awoke with my head clear, but with a feeling of exhaustion that decided me to remain where I was for that day.

After breakfast, I sauntered out, going slowly up the principal street, gazing idly at the signs, dreamily settling myself with a home, and a business, and a name, and my sign would read—I started, there it was: "Colman & Co." Yes, I read it aright, it was Colman & Co. "Is this Abbetown?" I said to a man who was passing. He looked hard at me, but said civilly enough, "It is, sir." I crossed the road quickly, curious to confront the bona-fide personages who had so many times appeared to me uder the jagged signature of "Colman & Co.," and the singularly coiled "per C."

I entered the open door and strolled through the rooms. Nothing but a nice lot of cabinet ware-rooms, with the arrangements, perhaps, in better taste than is usual in such establishments. A quiet, light-haired young man, about my own age, came forward. "Behold per C!" I said to myself. He politely waited till I had made a survey of the outer rooms, then asked if he could be of service? I said I would like to see Mr. Colman. A slight hesitation, then he said "Step this way."

Beyond the sales-room a green baize door opened into a room about twelve feet square, neatly carpeted, furnished with desk, chairs and sofa. Occupying the room were two young women. One at the desk did not raise her head at my entrance. The other rose and bowed, with the air of a business woman, and the grace of a cultured lady.

For myself, I could only strive to conceal the awkwardness I felt. Who could possibly expect to meet ladies and a ladies' parlor in a gentleman's counting room? I managed to bow and say: "Shall I beg pardon? I came in expecting to see 'Colman,' of the firm of Colman & Co."

"I represent that name," the lady said, quietly, then added, "Please be seated."

Now, if Colman had been a man, I should have had no difficulty in stepping up to him, shaking hands, and introducing myself and firm, and becoming business acquaintances in a moment. This, however, was a new programme, and I became still more involved by my next remark, which was that the person I wished particularly to see was "per C." Involuntarily I made a circling motion with my thumb. The girl's head at the desk bent low over the leaves of the ledger. The woman sitting opposite me, with a kept-back smile in her eyes and on her lips, indicated with her eyes the direction of the ledger, and said, "That is per C."

Was there ever such a position? I glanced towards the desk. The eyes of the girl were raised from the book and I met my doom! I yielded to fate. Henceforth, whatever befell me, my heart and destiny were at the mercy of "per C."

There was a pause, and growing desperate, I determined to explain matters. Rising, I said:

"Will you grant me grace for five minutes?"

I was turned away from "per C.," and was looking straight into the comely face of the older woman. She bowed, just raised her eyes toward the desk, and I knew then that "per C." was looking and listening as well.

"I am Louis Colman, of Maconville. I have written, I suppose, one hundred letters to 'Colman & Co.,' of Abbetown. The first I wrote was in reply to an order for a 'superior casket,' sent on the decease of 'Colman,' of Colman & Co. I signed it 'per C.,' and copied as nearly as I could the peculiar signature of the order sent. It has been a notion of mine never to put it on any other letter." (I wished then that I could have seen 'per C.s' face.) "I have come to Abbetown quite by accident. The sign it was which attracted my attention. I came in to see Colman. I wanted to see 'per C.' Please don't misunderstand. Believe me, I did not expect to find affairs conducted by women."

The lady I addressed, as soon as I had finished speaking, said:

"Mr. Colman," and bowed as she pronounced my name, "I give entire credence to what you have told me. Four years ago, when you commenced your business life, we, too, commenced ours. My father was Colman, of Colman & Co. He died suddenly. The Co. is Mr. Hicksey. He is, and has been for many years, helpless in body, but his mind is perfectly clear. He always advised, but the business was overlooked entirely by my father. Through my father's short illness, my sister and I took temporary charge of the correspondence, and when affairs called for a settlement, with the consent of Mr. Hicksey, we retained the name and the business. Mr. Hicksey's advice we followed, and have been so far successful. Of course, in our own town we are known; beyond that, people generally may naturally have come to your conclusion, that a son has succeeded the father in business. I am Colman, of Colman & Co., to the outside world; in proper person, I am Miss Eugenie Colman. As such," she said, with a smile, "as such, I introduce myself to you."

I arose, bowed, and turned to receive an introduction to the younger sister as Miss Caddie Colman. I felt that this was intended as a dismissal. Taking my hat in hand, I said:

"May I see you again before I leave?"

She bowed acquiescence. After leaving Miss Colman, I indulged in a long walk for the purpose of settling a plan which had suddenly presented itself to me and and upon which I was resolved to act. In short, I had suddenly determined to settle in Abbetown.

As soon as I had matured a plan, I called on Mr. Hicksey. I proposed to buy out his interest in the business. He thought he did not care to sell. I then went to Miss Colman. She said that Mr. Hicksey had been exceedingly kind to them, and she felt under obligations to him; and that he wished soon to advance Harley, his son, to his interest in the business and retire.

My jealousy took immediate alarm, and I sought Harley, the young man whom I had seen first in the salesroom. I was rather surprised to find that he agreed with me, until he gave as his reason that another hand would keep Caddie out of the place, and that would suit him. Caddie, indeed!

I coolly said: "I shall try to see that Miss Caddie has interests elsewhere, if I take an interest here."

He looked at me, I returned it; then we understood each other. I stayed in Abbetown three days longer, during which time I cultivated Miss Caddie's acquaintance as much as I dared. I also told Miss Colman that I desired to settle in Abbetown; that I loved her sister, and wanted to try and win her for my wife. I then returned to Maconville, for a week. I was somewhat uneasy at leaving Harley Hicksey alone in the field, for I thought if he loved the girl as well as I knew I did that he would not give her up without an effort.

In eight days I was again at Abbetown. Harley Hicksey had again offered himself to Miss Caddie Colman, and been refused. Mr. Hicksey, knowing this, was ready to conclude a bargain for sale, and Miss Colman desired to remain with me, as before with Mr. Hicksey.

All this seemed so entirely to my wishes that I began to fear that I might miss the one thing to which all these were made subservient—the loss of Caddie Colman. But as I had always tried to use my opportunities, so I was not remiss in this respect, and in one year from the time of my settlement at Abbetown I was a married man. We, Colman & Co., are prospering in our business. Mrs. Colman is a dignified, matronly little lady, but among her family she likes and I think will never lose the sobriquet of "per C."

There is a moral to my story. Every boy worth the name probably sees it. I will write it nevertheless: When a good opportunity occurs don't stand idle and wait for a better.

The Russian War.

The present hostile movement of the Russian Government against Khiva is but a repetition of the old-time determination of Russia to get a foothold in Central Asia. In the early part of the sixteenth century, Peter the Great contemplated the idea of reviving the old commercial route from India through Central Asia as it was in the days of the Roman Empire, and sent out two expeditions, both of which were foiled by the Khivans. A century later another attempt was made, which had to be relinquished. Three years later, another expedition set out, which succeeded in establishing the military post of Fort Alexandrovsk on the eastern shore of the Caspian Sea, and established commercial relations with the Toorkomans, which were eventually discontinued by the latter, as they threatened to involve their independence. In 1839, the Russians sent out another expedition towards Khiva, which failed, and they then set their faces in another direction. The Kirghis Steppe, between Asiatic Russia and Toorkistan, was invaded and captured. In 1853, they captured a fort at Akmusjid, and, in 1864, the towns of Toorkistan, Aulieata, Chumkund, and Tashkund, the largest town in Central Asia, and the whole conquered district was incorporated in the Russian dominions, under the name of Toorkistan. The next Russian war was with Bokhara, which resulted in the capture of Kokund, which was also incorporated with Toorkistan. Samarkund and Bokhara were the next districts to yield, and in their capture Russia became the virtual ruler of Central Asia. The immediate cause of the attack on Khiva is alleged to be a freebooting attack upon Fort Alexandrovsk, and the refusal of the Khan of Khiva to surrender some Russian subjects held in slavery by them. Meanwhile, a new complication has arisen in this attempt of Russia to extend its Asiatic dominion, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg having notified Prince Gortschakoff that if the Russian troops penetrate the countries between Khiva and Afghanistan, England will be compelled to interfere in support of Afghan independence. As it is impossible for Russia to advance without doing this, the movement begins to assume a serious aspect,—all the more serious that the remonstrance of England is not so much to maintain Afghan neutrality as to protect her own Central Asiatic trade. It touches John Bull in his most sensitive spot—his pocket.

Brawny Women.

Stories about brawny women working their own farms, chopping thier own wood, etc., are applauded by half of the American press, and that is the half which looks at a bare, bold fact, without regard to its surrounding circumstances. "It should be remembered," says the Prairie Farmer with rare good sense, "that such performances on the part of the females are only croppings out of barbarism that only a portion of the world has yet emerged from. England has plenty of it left in the agricultural districts, and it is not unknown in the manufacturing counties. A late writer in the London Telegraph describes a trip into Staffordshire, where the women work at the blacksmith's forge as long and as hard as the men. He says it is not uncommon to find a mother and three lusty daughters, fully of marriageable age, stripped to their stays, and, with a kerchief over their shoulders, wielding the hammers and tugging at the bellows, making twelve hundred nails for twelve pence, and working from 8 in the morning till 12 at night. At Lye Waste whole streets are made up of these smithies, in which these women and their children toil, year in and year out, besides their husbands and brothers. They have about as much refinement and intelligence as a 'Digger' Indian. Let our women take to the plow and hoe, and we should soon have districts in which they would rival these muscular females of the Staffordshire smithies. We are disgusted with all this talk about women farmers. Let our girls take all the prizes of our universities; drive all the men from the rostrum; run our banking and brokerage; keep our shops; become Governors and Presidents; vote and be happy according to their capabilities; but deliver us from female blacksmiths and farm laborers. If man is not fitted for this work, we don't know what his particular sphere can be." Here is pictured the rule which, if the half the press alluded to were influential, might follow commendation of pretty but isolated circumstances; and how does it look?

A Massive Telescope.

Mr. Clark, at Cambridgeport, is making the largest refracting telescope in the United States for the naval observatory in Washington. It has an object glass 26 inches in diameter, being eleven inches larger than the one at Harvard College, and when finished is worth $23,000. The two glasses—it requires two to make an object glass—weighed in the rough 250 pounds, and cost $7,000. They arrived in this country about six months ago from Birmingham, England, and ever since the work of polishing and repairing them has been continued unremittingly. Over fifty pounds have been cut from the flint glass, which now weighs 110 pounds, and the other when finished will weigh about 73 pounds. The total cost of the instrument will be $46,000.

THE amount that Gen. George B McClellan was swindled by the Arizona diamond speculation has not been ascertained, but it is stated that he was "severely victimized."

Curiosities of Animal Life.

There can be no doubt that dogs feel shame as distinct from fear, and something very like modesty, while begging too often for food. A great dog scorns the snarling of a little dog, and this may be called magnanimity. All animals feel wonder, and many exhibit curiosity, the latter quality affording opportunity for hunters to decoy the game into their power. The faculty of imitation, so strongly developed in man, especially in a barbarous State, is present in monkeys. A certain bull-terrier of our acquaintance, when he wishes to go out of the room, jumps at the handle. Parrots also reproduce with wonderful fidelity the tones of voice of different speakers, and puppies reared by cats have been known to lick their feet and wash their faces after the same manner as their foster mothers. Attention and memory also are present in the lower animals, and it is impossible to deny that the dreams of dogs and horses show the presence of imagination, or that a certain reason is also present. Animals also profit by experience, as any man realizes who sets traps. The young are much more easily caught than the old, and the adults gain caution by seeing the fate of those who are caught. Tools are also used by some of the higher apes. The chimpanzee uses a stone to crack a nut resembling a walnut, and the Abyssinian babooon fight troops of other species, and roll down stones in the attack before they finally close in a hand-to-hand encounter. The idea of property is common also to every dog with a bone, to all birds with their nests, and notable in the cases of rocks. Nor can a certain kind of language be denied to the brutes. The dog communicates his feelings by barks of different tones, which undoubtedly raise in his fellow-dogs ideas similar to those passing in his own mind.—Edinburgh Review.

Some Queer Statistics.

Great wars or other national convulsions are followed by an increase in the rate of sudden, violent and unnatural deaths. Oliver Wendell Holmes, soon after the outbreak of our own civil war, predicted that deaths from heart disease would, for many years, exceed their old proportion in the total mortality, and the result has verified his prophecy, which indeed was based on a familiar medical experience. We incline to think that the careful statistics would show a like increase in deaths from violence and from self-destruction. The fact is well attested, so far as concerns suicides, which in France, during the past year, have caused a death record unprecedented and prodigious. A calculation made for Paris alone shows the almost incredible result of 4,177 suicides in 1871. A detailed classification ascribes the larger number, 1,377, as might be expected, to derangement of the brain. Next come 930 suicides from "physical sufferings"—the strongest temptation, one would think, to defy the "cannon against self-slaughter," but one more prevalent in France than in our land, we judge. Disappointed love caused 701 suicides; family quarrels are credited with 512; extreme destitution with 383; fear of punishment with 22; while delirium tremens, resulting from the excessive use of absinthe, drove no less than 282 victims to voluntary death. Looking at this last fact, we may appreciate that mot of Trelat, who, contrasting the two stimulants, brandy and absinthe, declared that if one was l'eau de vie, the other was l'eau de mort. France, like the Rome to which she loves to compare herself, has always been prolific of suicides, but the extraordinary record of 1871 must be ascribed in some part to the disastrous and depressing effects of the war.—Lippincott's Magazine.

The Editorial Triumvirate.

Three of the great editors who made the press of New York famous throughout the world, and a guiding star and bright exemplar to the journalistic fraternity everywhere, are now no more. The relentless harvester, death, has gathered them to his fold, and those who for a brief period survive them remain to mourn their loss. Raymond and Bennett preceded Greeley on the dark unknown voyage to the hereafter, but neither of the two former has left such a void as the last and greatest of the three. There is something philosophically peculiar in the thought that as in trigonometry, three united in one complete a problem, so in the rise and progress of American journalism to the present unapproachable high and commanding position, the genius and labors of these three eminent men concurred, each in his own characteristic and individual way. While Henry J. Raymond inculcated a style of controversial discussion, elevated in tone, terse in argument, mild in reproof, and rich in facts, James Gordon Bennett threw his whole inventive, restless energy into the domain of news, and challenged the world to follow him in this, his well chosen path, from which he never deviated. Horace Greeley combined in himself the earnestness of conviction and quickness of comprehension of Raymond, with the ceaseless activity and daring courage of Bennett, excelling both in the genius that molded his faultless sentences, in the heart which beat in warm sympathy with every human woe, and in the moral bravery that struck for the loftiest aims, in utter disregard of personal results. Thus the three journalists complemented each other, and together they presented to the world a triumvirate than which no country on earth was ever blessed with a greater, or capable of achieving more lasting results.

The Sanitary Relations of Water.

Dr. Letheby, one of the highest European authorities on the sanitary relations of water, considers water of moderate hardness preferable to very soft water for domestic purposes. About six grains of carbonate of lime per gallon is desirable. He finds that the death-rate is less in cities supplied with moderately hard water than those supplied with soft water. It is a familiar fact that it is a great advantage, in making tea or coffee, to use water of about five degrees of hardness; that is, containing about five grains of carbonate of lime or its equivalent in the gallon. The fine flavor of tea made with water possessing this quality is due to the fact that the carbonate of lime prevents the water from dissolving the astringent matter contained in the tea, without interfering with the extraction of the theine and the other desirable constituents of the leaf.

MACHINE POETRY.

The melancholy days have come,
The saddest of the year;
Gone are the pumpkin and the plumb,
The falling leaves are sere;
The partridge now forgets to drum,
The squirrel to uprear
His merry tail; the brooks are glum;
The anglers disappear;
The crow pursues the vagrant crumb,
Too grateful for the cheer;
The top has ceased its summer hum,
The kites are out of gear;
O'er Mother Earth a fierce autumn
Inverts its icy spear.
Each morning some imbibe their rum,
And some absorb their beer;
Young soldiers mumble "[illegible]!"
To drive away their fear.
Blithe, joyous, happy school girls thrum
Pianos far and near,
Or cut the cake of Sally Lum,
Or Clara Vere de Vere;
While others go to chewing gum
To check the truant tear.
A blind young man did once calum-
Niate his precious dear,
And railed, instead of being mum,
Because he did not see her;
But when with cold his feet grew numb,
He turned in his career,
And danced a polka on his thumb,
And walked off on his ear.
{Something broken ....plumb,
in the ....queer,
machine} ....tum-ti-tum,
K-ch-k-r-r-r-r-r-r-r-e-r!

A PREACHER, one slippery, frosty morning, going home with one of his elderly members, the old gentleman slipped and fell. BRET HARTE, in his lecture, tells a good story illustrative of early times in California, which originated in the trial of a horse-thief. The jury had occupied for an unpleasantly long time a room adjoining the one in which the trial had taken place, when the Judge, becoming impatient, opened the door and remarked, "Take your time, gentlemen; but remember that we want this room to lay out the corpse."

THERE ought to be a straight, square, stand-up-ativeness about an adveretisement that will convince without a doubt. Do not say, "My stock is certainly," or "is doubtless" the best; say it it is the best; you cannot get beyond that if you swear to it. It is worse yet to say, "One of the best," or, "Among the best," as though you wanted to be Washington with his little hatchet. Keep the best, and let every one know it, and the Lord will befriend you.

Krupp's Steel Works at Essen.

The great cast-steel works of Friedrich Krupp, at Essen, in Rhenish Prussia, employed during the year 1871, 8,810 workmen, and turned out 75,000 metrical tons of cast steel, in the form of axles, tires, rails, shafts, rolls, boiler plates, springs, artillery, projectiles, etc. The plant consisted of 528 annealing and cementing furnaces; 260 heating, re-heating, and puddling furnaces; 245 coke furnaces; 130 miscellaneous furnaces; 169 forges; 174 steam boilers; 343 lathes; 73 shaping machines; 130 planing machines; 172 punching machines; 303 other machines of all kinds; and 58 steam hammers, varying in weight from two hundred weight up to 80 tons, the three larger being of about ten, twenty and thirty tons respectively. The steam engines on this establishment were 265 in number, varying in force from 2 up to 1,000 horse-power, and representing in the aggregate no less than 8,559 horse-power.

IT is gratifying to learn from the Christian Observer that not one person in millions is buried alive. The editor says: "We have asked at cemeteries in Europe, where bodies are always kept and tested, whether any one ever revived, and the answer invariably is, not one."

THE novel application was made in a New Haven court, recently, by an attorney, in his own behalf, for an injunction to prevent the holding of a wake over a dead relative. The petition was granted.

OUTCAST.

Was it a dream?
I walked one day down through a city's street:
The sun was shining dimly overhead,
While filth and vileness were beneath my feet,
And the houses on either side seemed red
To the bricks' core with wickedness untold;
[illegible]
Of want and suffering, of wretchedness
In young and old, of hunger pitiless,
And stenches foul, the very soul was sick,
And dared not harbor questions, crowding thick,
Of God's beneficence, and of His love.

[illegible] through those [illegible] streets
[illegible] garbage heap, [illegible]
[illegible] thrown by scornful hands aside—
[illegible] bud that a few days [illegible] hung
Upon its parent tree, purest among
Its sisters sweet and fair. The dew had blessed
Its opening morn; its odors had caressed
The ambient air, and [illegible] the lips of those Who bowed their lips to kiss the budding rose,
And then one said he loved it more than all,
And tore it from its stem (did I see fall
A raindrop?), and bore it on his breast away.

Ah! how it joyed to lie there through the day,
Bright with fragrant beauty, sweetly asking
Love for its love—sure 'twas no hard tasking.
But soon, its freshness gone, it knew its fate—
Alas! how many learn it late, too late!
And he who wore it merely that it shed
Its first sweet odors circling round his head,
And with its beauty graced him as he walked,
Nor loved it for its sake alone, when balked
Of these, soon tore it from his breast away,
And, careless of its fate, left it the play
And toy of who should care a moment's space
To please him with its fleeting, fading grace.
And so 'twas soon, when festering and forlorn,
And soiled and torn, of all pure men the scorn;
This bud so fair, so sweet, so loved the while,
This withered bud, so faded, bruised and vile
Was thrown upon the garbage heap, to yield
Its little earth to enrich some Potter's field.

With reverent hand I look it from the pile
(I thought the heavens gave me back a smile)—
With reverent hand I brushed the filth away;
I gently pulled apart its petals fair,
And, even then, an odor faint but rare
Breathed from its inner heart and seemed to pray,
And colors bright and pure that heart disclosed
The rose-bud even yet contained the rose!
And then I thought 'twas wafted from my hand,
And blossomed full and sweet in Heaven's own land.
Was it a dream?

Great Railroad Enterprise.

On Friday, the 20th of this month, there sailed from the port of New York for Callao, Peru, South America, an expedition composed of mechanics of different kinds, among whom are James Humphrey, of Windsor (formerly of Winsted), and Messrs. Chapman, Parsons and Barnard, of this city. They go out in the employ of the Peruvian Government, and take with them nine of Leffel's turbine wheels, which are to be placed at different points in the Peruvian Andes, on the line of the Callao, Lima and Oroyo railway. This road passes along the base of the Andes, rising gradually until it arrives at the remarkable altitude of 15,600 feet, when it pierces the summit, and passes through a tunnel 3,000 feet in length. This tunnel is to be operated upon similar to the Mont Cenis tunnel, by means of air compressors, which are placed in close proximity to the wheels, and are to be driven by them. The compressed air is then carried to the required point in pipes, and forms the motive power for the diamonds and Ballard drills; also, for blowers for ventilation and other purposes. This road, after passing the Andes, stretches away across the country in the direction of Brazil, and finally reaches a tributary of the Amazon, thus affording a line of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific shores. It is believed that this line of road presents greater natural obstacles to be overcome by the engineer than any line in the annals of modern times, and when completed must remain a lasting monument to the energy and enterprise of the American engineer.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

The Words We Use.

It has been calculated that our language, including the nomenclature of the arts and sciences, contains 100,000 words; yet, of this immense number, it is surprising how few are in common use. To the great majority, even of educated men, three-fourths of these words are almost as unfamiliar as the Greek or Choctaw. Strike from the lexicon all the words nearly obsolete—all the words of special arts or professions—all the words confined in their usage to particular localities—all the words which even the educated speaker uses only in homeopathic doses—and it is astonishing into what a Lilliputian volume your Brobdignagian Webster or Worcester will have shrunk. It has been calculated that a child uses only about one hundred words; and unless he belong to the educated classes he will never employ more than three or four hundred. A distinguished American scholar estimates that few speakers or writers use as many as ten thousand words; ordinary persons of fair intelligence, not over three or four thousand. Even the great orator, who is able to bring into the field, in the war of words, half the vast array of light and heavy troops which the vocabulary affords, yet contents himself with a far less imposing display of verbal force. Even the all-knowing Milton, whose wealth of words seems amazing, and whom Dr. Johnson charges with using "a Babylonish dialect," uses only eight thousand; and Shakespeare himself, the "myriad-minded," only fifteen thousand. These facts show that the difficulty of mastering the vocabulary of a new tongue is greatly overrated.

Brewers in England.

A London correspondent of the St. Louis Republican says it is surprising how many brewers there are in Parliament and what a degree of respectability attaches to their calling.

The wine trade and brewing stand at the very head of reputable money-making callings in this country. The wine merchant gets access to society where the dry goods man would not be admitted, where even the exclusive silk dealer could not enter. A lower class of people wear silks than drink wine. Brewing is as much a staple industry here as wheat growing with us, and the brewer is above the wine merchant. He may not at present serve stately boards, but he got this position in a time when he filled a jovial bowl for the nobles; and a position once gained is never lost in this land of precedent. Besides, he is a man of wealth, his product is always in demand. The brewer that represents Great Barlow has inherited his business from several generations. All the wealthy families of the place are his kinsmen, and they come up in a right royal way to put him into Parliament. They all go and come at the "member's" beck, for on him rests the honorable fame of the house. The tradesmen follow suit from other motives. When one comes to know the servility and venality of English shopkeepers he is not surprised at the contempt that attaches to them in the general estimation. They are the most dishonest and servile class in the country, and notoriously open to political bribery.

Liver Complaint, Liver Disease, i. e. Biliousness.—Bilious complaints—by some termed liver disease—are very common in this country. The ordinary indications, such as yellowness of the skin [illegible] of the eyes, pain in the right side under the inferior ribs, with sometimes difficulty of respiration and troublesome cough—are familiar to a host of sufferers; but the liver, sometimes, is in [illegible] unsatisfactory state [illegible] the presence of such symptoms. When we reflect that the liver is the largest gland of the body, that it secretes the bile which lubricates the bowels and keeps them in order, is the great blood purifier or cleansing machine of our systems, it may truly be called the Housekeeper of our Health. Sudden transitions of climatic temperature, or impure air, or water are disturbing elements which arrest the functions of the liver, and render it torpid, producing diarrhea, dysentery, bilious remittents, intermittent fevers, and a general prostration, and unhealthy state of the whole organization.

It is not surprising that a medicine which can restore the healthy operations of the liver should command general attention. Such a medicine is California Vinegar Bitters, The Housekeeper's Towel and Broom.—[Com.

The Jews.

The first colony of Jews in New York arrived in 1610, the city being at that time still under the rule of the Dutch. In 1706 the first Jewish congregation was formed. They built the first synagogue in 1721. In 1844 there were four synagogues; in 1854 there were twenty; and at present there are at least forty synagogues in New York. The whole number of Jewish houses of prayer in the United States is about 220.

The huge, drastic, griping, sickening pills, constructed of crude, coarse and bulky ingredients, are fast being superceded by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Sugar-coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules—the "Little Giant" Cathartic or multum in parvo Physic. Modern chemical science enables Dr. Pierce to extract from the juices of the most valuable roots and herbs their active medical principles, which, when worked into little Pellets or Granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds, renders each little Pellet as active and powerful as a large pill, while they are much more palatable and pleasant in effect. 25 cents a vial, by druggists. 620

Fortunately for Prince Bismarck his membership of 141 different German societies is an honorary distinction not involving the payment of yearly dues.

On the death of one of England's most eminent physicians, all his effects were sold by auction, and among other things was a sealed packet, marked "Advice to Physicians," which brought a great price. The purchaser, on opening the packet, read as follows: 'Keep the head cool, the bowels open and the feet warm." If physic is necessary, use Parsons' Purgative Pills; they are the most scientifically prepared pill that has appeared in the last hundred years.—[Com.

One of the results of the restrictive policy of the German Government toward emigrants has been the forming of an association in Germany with a membership now numbering 82,000, and funds in hand of $150,000, for the purpose of stimulating the emigration which the Government would repress. This association, in co-operation with the London Agricultural Union, 200,000 strong, will send, it is said, half a million English and German workingmen and farmers to this country next spring. A Commission leaves Germany shortly to choose and buy the land best fitted for the uses of these people.

Our Boys for January opens chipperer and brighter than ever. A grand Christmas story, by Charles Diehl, "Myself—a memoir not after the Modern," with a fine illustration, leads off. A continuation of the two serials, "Sturdy and Steady," and "Lance and Lasso," with short stories, poetry, puzzles, etc. The number is illustrated with original designs. It is emphatically the "American Boys' Own Journal." The publishers allow 25 cents on each subscriber of three and over. Send stamp for specimen to Our Boys, Chicago. Subscription price, $1 a year.

A CHALLENGE

Is extended to the world to place before the public a better cough or lung remedy than ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

Verily it Hath No Equal.

CONSUMPTIVES, READ!

Would you cure that distressing cough, and bring back that healthy vigor till lately planted in your cheek? If you would, do not delay; for, ere you are aware, it will be too late.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM

Is your hope. It has been tried by thousands such as you, who have been cured; many, in their gratitude, have lent their names to us, that suffering humanity can read their evidence and believe. Don't experiment with new and untried mixtures—you cannot afford it—but try at once this invaluable article. It is warranted to break up the most troublesome cough in a few hours, if not of too long standing. It is warranted to give entire satisfaction in all cases of lung and throat difficulties.

UNSOLICITED EVIDENCE OF ITS MERITS.

READ THE FOLLOWING

WHAT WELL-KNOWN DRUGGISTS SAY ABOUT ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

Springfield, Tenn., Sept. 11, 1872.
Gentlemen: Ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam at once. We have not a bottle left in our store. It has more reputation than any cough medicine we have ever sold, and we have been in the drug business twenty-seven years; we mean just what we say about the Balsam.
Very truly yours,
HURT & TANNER.

AGAIN READ THE EVIDENCE from a Druggist who was cured by use of the Balsam, and now sells it largely:
L. C. Cottrell, Druggist at Marine City, Michigan, writes, Sept. 12, 1872: "I am out of Allen's Lung Balsam. Send me half a gross as soon as you can; I would rather be out of any other medicine in my store. The Lung Balsam never fails to do good for those afflicted with a cough."
It is harmless to the most delicate child.
It contains no opium in any form.
It is sold by Medicine Dealers generally.

CAUTION.

Do not be deceived. Call for ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, and take no other.
Directions accompany each bottle.

A Memorial Gift.

The round of gifts for a holiday season is soon exhausted. Books, and jewels, and trifles repeat themselves with the return of every Christmas and New Year, so that we are weary of choosing from them. We want to find a remembrance for our friends, having something more than that temporary value which these customary gifts possess.

There is a new gift more graceful and useful than anything that is to be found in the shops. Its possession is not only a benefit for life, but it keeps its giver in perpetual remembrance. It is a Life Insurance policy, presented on New Year's day by the husband to his wife; by the parish to their pastor.

Can there be a better commemoration of this joyful season of the year than such a gift? It will bear fruit long after all other offerings are lost and forgotten, and it is one which the giver can never regret.

A Successful Company.

It is agreeable to hear our Life insurance companies well spoken of, but we feel much pride in the remarks of the New York Insurance Commissioner, regarding our most enterprising company —The Equitable Life Assurance Society—which, he says, "marks and distinguishes the commencement of the recent astounding progress in the business of Life insurance."

The Equitable Society took its position at the head of our companies some three or four years ago, and has since annually transacted more new business than any other company in the world. It has no longer an equal competitor. Its proud position is due not only to its usefulness, security, wealth, and liberality, but to the good will of the people, whose preferences it has gained because it has answered their requirements most completely in everything that pertains to Life insurance.—N. Y. Evangelist.

"Cheer Up, and Stand By!"

This advice, given by bluff Captain Cuttle to the forlorn Mr. Toots, is cordially tendered to all who are laboring under that cloud of depression and melancholy which usually accompanies chronic indigestion, biliousness, habitual constipation and nervous debility. "Cheer up!" woe-begone invalids. The causes of your gloomy feelings, though they may be chronic and of long standing, are not incurable. A course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and most genial of all vegetable stimulants and correctives, and especially adapted to cases like yours, will relieve you of your bodily ailments and consequent mental misery, speedily, certainly, and without pain. The chills and damps of the present season, in fact all its atmospheric conditions, are unfavorable to dyspeptic, bilious and nervous sufferers. They need a stimulant, as well as a tonic and alterative. This wholesome vegetable preparation combines the three. While it increases the digestive capacity of the stomach, and changes and regulates the condition of the liver and the bowels, it gives an agreeable impulse to the mental faculties and steadies the nerves. Unmedicated stimulants are never advisable; they are too exciting, and often react disastrously. On the other hand, the sham tonics which contain no diffusive stimulant, and are surcharged with drastic evacuants that almost turn a man inside out, are dangerous. The system needs more vitality, and they prostrate it entirely. Hostetter's Bitters has no affinity either with the dangerous excitant or the still more dangerous depletent. It simply strengthens and regulates the body and clears the mind. This is the whole secret of its cures.

It is well to get clear of a Bad Cough or Cold the first week, but it is safer to rid yourself of it the first forty-eight hours—the proper remedy for the purpose being Dr. Jayne Expectorant.

Vegetine is not a stimulating bitters which creates a fictitious appetite, but a gentle tonic which assists nature to restore the stomach to a healthy action.

How to Quit Tobacco.

Hearth and Home says the thing to hold in the mouth is a mouthful of cold water, renewed every few minutes. It will take away the craving for tobacco quicker than anything else and is wholly unobjectionable. A pine stick is the best of anything to chew, but the objection to that, and to anything that is chewed, is that it over-excites and weakens the salivary glands. In quitting the use of tobacco, quit at once and not attempt to quit off gradually.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.
If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.
Not only does the Sarsaparillian Resolvent excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for Kidney and Bladder Complaints,
Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.
Dyspepsia or Indigestion. Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.
For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.
For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.
They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, and in Bilious Diseases.
For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.
Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

NATURE'S REMEDY.
VEGETINE
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

VEGETINE is made exclusively from the juices of carefully selected barks, roots and herbs, and so strongly concentrated that it will effectually eradicate from the system every taint of Scrofula, Scrofulous Humor, Tumors, Cancer, Cancerous Humor, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Syphilitic Diseases, Canker, Faintness at the Stomach, and all diseases that arise from impure blood. Sciatica, Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout and Spinal Complaints, can only be effectually cured through the blood.
For Ulcers and Eruptive diseases of the skin, Pustules, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, Tetter, Scaldhead and Ringworm, VEGETINE has never failed to effect a permanent cure.
For Pains in the Back, Kidney Complaints Dropsy, Female Weakness, Leucorrhœa, arising from internal ulceration, and uterine diseases and General Debility, VEGETINE acts directly upon the causes of these complaints. It invigorates and strengthens the whole system, acts upon the secretive organs, allays inflammation, cures ulceration, and regulates the bowels.
For Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Habitual Costiveness, Palpitation of the Heart, Headache, Piles, Nervousness and General prostration of the Nervous System, no medicine has ever given such perfect satisfaction as the VEGETINE. It purifies the blood, cleanses all of the organs, and possesses a controlling power over the Nervous system.
The remarkable cures effected by VEGETINE have induced many physicians and apothecaries whom we know to prescribe and use it in their own families.
In fact, VEGETINE is the best remedy yet discovered for the above diseases, and is the only reliable BLOOD PURIFIER yet placed before the public

Stokes Found Guilty.

Stokes, the murderer of Fisk about a year ago, was proved guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hanged on the 28th of next month. An effort will be made to get up the farce of a new trial.

Wm. Cluck, the wife murderer of Indianapolis, who was to hang next week for his crime, took a dose of morphine the other day, and his heart don't cluck any more now, and a shilling's worth of rope is saved from contamination:
